Show Your Crowds Official War Pictures

Millions of men, women and children in every State in the Union are intensely eager to see Official War Pictures. That applies to your community, and your house. In Universal Animated Weekly and Current Events you get all the biggest and latest news pictures every week. THIS MEANS SPOT CASH MONEY TO YOU EVERY WEEK. How can you ignore that money? How can you fail to heed this tremendous demand for war news? Convincing evidence that Exhibitors everywhere are getting the money with U. Animated Weekly and Current Events proven by the growing list of bookings each week. GET IN LINE YOURSELF.

Nailing A Black Lie

A competitor's salesmen are telling exhibitors that hereafter the Universal Animated Weekly and the Universal Current events are not to have any official war films and that such war films are to be distributed "exclusively" through the medium of this competitor's exchanges.

This, of course, is a black lie. It should not be necessary to deny it. But unfortunately we have already learned that many exhibitors believe it. To settle the matter, we publish the following extract from a letter received by the Universal from Charles S. Hart, Director of the Division of Films, of the Committee on Public Information.

> "Each week beginning the week of June 3rd we will place at your disposal OFFICIAL WAR FILMS that we consider valuable to the news weeklies. You will be charged one dollar per foot for each foot of the film used by you."

The arrangement outlined in Mr. Hart's letter, took effect the week of June 3rd, as stated by Mr. Hart, and so continues. In our news weeklies, we use as much of the war pictures as the exhibitors seem to want, carefully mixing in other interesting news events to avoid giving your public an overdose of "war stuff."

The Universal Animated Weekly and the Universal Current Events always have been and always will be the best in the business. We admit it. They are always first to show important events, whether concerning the war or other things.

We warn exhibitors, for their own good, not to be tricked by lies or half-truths. Our news reels are not seeking to profiteer by means of public interest in the war. We have an "exclusive" contract with the Committee on Public Information to produce and distribute single reel pictures pertaining to the war and "The wonders of our War Work," but at no time have we intended to use it as a club to grab your profits or to make you believe that we had the United States Government tied up in our vest pocket.

We suggest, in conclusion, that any company that lies to you is a dangerous company with which to transact ANY business whatever.

Goldwyn Pictures

A Change Has Come
In the Minds and Hearts of Men.

ONE YEAR ago Goldwyn, then a new company, brought a new vision into the production of motion pictures. We realized then, before our first release, that a change had come over the world.

A change in the minds and hearts of men.

We foresaw many of the things that were going to happen and we applied our foresight to the productions we were making; to the stories we were choosing for the screen.

We said then: "Conflict and circumstances are going to make this a sad world for a time. We must let none of this sadness creep into our pictures. We must make them happy, cheerful, clean. We must make them earnest, sincere—and never morbid.

"We must make our pictures appeal first to the millions of women and children who remain at home. Goldwyn Pictures must enable the home-staying millions to relax; to offset the tear with a smile."

Out of these decisions came, in quick succession, a "Polly of the Circus;" a "Baby Mine;" a "Nearly Married" and "The Danger Game." A "Dodging a Million," "The Cinderella Man;" an "All Woman," a "Thais," "The Venus Model," "The Service Star"—pictures welcomed and applauded throughout the world.

The professionals in motion picture production said: "Your pictures are too light. There isn't enough fire and action in them." A few exhibitors agreed with them at first.

Suddenly exhibitors everywhere realized what Goldwyn was doing and WHY we were doing it. They obtained their revelation through their box-offices. They found that Goldwyn Pictures brought them new commercial, profit-making values. They saw new faces in their houses.

After years of light matinee-patronage, they discovered that their matinees were now returning a profit.

Goldwyn had not proceeded along the lines of least resistance. We had not made vampire pictures or sex pictures and trailed along in the current with other companies.

We had struck at the hardest problem of the nation's motion picture showmen—how to make the daytime performances pay their own way—and we have succeeded, if the word of 5,148 contract customers has any meaning whatever.

These showmen realized what we were doing. In forty odd States of the American Union mothers or women's organizations have indorsed and stimulated the patronage of Goldwyn Pictures because of their wholesomeness and cheerfulness.

Where we have led for a year others are now following.

Goldwyn is on the eve of its second year.

We are going to make in excess of fifty pictures where in our first year we made twenty-six.

In this second year we have the advantage and good fortune to offer, besides the great popular favorites of our first season, three more stars of tremendous national popularity and appeal.

With GERALDINE FARRAR and PAULINE FREDERICK we will be able to vary and still further strengthen the dramatic intensity of our productions, though we go on record that neither of these famous women will ever do a "vampire" story under the Goldwyn imprint.

Nor will MABEL NORMAND, MAE MARSH or MADGE KENNEDY.

REX BEACH, all of whose future productions Goldwyn will release, is an author whose name is a by-word for virility and healthfulness. We will not cater at any time to unhealthy tastes with his good name.

TOM MOORE, our new star, enjoys popularity because of his cheerfulness and freshness.

On such foundations we have chosen to build both a present and a future.

Goldwyn is an organization of young men. We are not in a hurry to make profits through decadence or cheap appeals to cheap tastes. We are building well to make a permanent place for ourselves in motion pictures.

That we have treated our exhibitor-customers honorably and fairly is evidenced by the great number we serve and the support we have gained from them is, to use their own words, "because such a company as Goldwyn is building deserves to be sustained and encouraged."

In the coming year, on the basis of clean-cut service, we shall greatly increase the volume of our patronage.

While virtually every large exhibitor in every large city and town, plays Goldwyn Pictures, we also have won the friendship of the small theatre-owners of America. These small theatres are the backbone of the industry. We shall continue to keep them in the forefront of our minds, giving them at equitable and reasonable prices the biggest screen productions as quickly after the initial release dates as possible.

Goldwyn is being built on a ROCK-SOLID basis. Clear-thinking men combining their talents with the talents of great stars, able directors and imaginative technical artists, are by their work and efforts guaranteeing exhibitors a permanent and constantly increasing patronage.

Powerful, clean and cheerful pictures.

We are content to ride to success on such a basis as that.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH,
President.

CAPITOL COMEDIES

"Oh, Boy"

Here's a comedian who "has everything." He is the hit of the Spring and Summer season—the first new comedian in years who has lasting quality. He is popular from the start. The big houses all over America have booked him. He is wise enough to get real laughter-breeding stories, loads of pretty girls and plenty of variety. He provides speed, action and fun. We know that you do not make a star by keeping his pictures on the shelves of branch offices, so that is why is offered at prices that every exhibitor in America can afford to pay. Four of his comedies have been played and are playing throughout America: "Bill's Baby," "Billy's Predicament," "Birds of a Feather" and "Matching Billy." Eight of these comedies are in all Goldwyn offices for your examination. His next four releases are:

"SMILING BILL" PARSONS

July 1: "Widow's Might"
July 15: "Dad's Knockout"
July 29: "Up a Tree"
August 12: "Billy's Fortune"

Announcement of the plans of The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Season of 1918-1919

Beginning Sept. 1, 1918. Ending Aug. 31, 1919

"IT is just as important to project the right sort of pictures 'Over Here' as to fire the right sort of cartridges 'Over There.' To the work of helping to keep up the morale of the Americans at home, we dedicate our Organization."

JESSE L. LASKY.

An Essential Wheel in Uncle

THESE are days when the only industries that can survive are those that have a staunch and definite part in the winning of the War. The producing of motion pictures is one of these. More than a year after the United States entered the War, America's motion picture industry finds itself stronger, more favored, more necessary than ever before.

The motion picture is in the War to win the War. It has labored faithfully and efficiently for such patriotic movements as the Liberty Loans, the Red Cross, Food Conservation, and Ship Building.

President Wilson himself has publicly thanked the exhibitors for turning over their theatres to Four-Minute Men and for war propaganda. The greatest motion picture stars, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, have toured the nation in the Liberty Loan campaigns. The motion picture has willingly paid hundreds of thousands of dollars in taxes. The exhibitors have opened their doors for war work, but have only just begun their splendid share in the War.

The motion picture's mightiest task is to keep up the morale of the folks at home. It is the national amusement, filling a national need.

Next Year's Output—208 Features

RECOGNIZING this national need, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release in the year beginning September 1st, 1918, two hundred and eight feature pictures, booked on the Star Series plan, which has been such a success in the season just ending. Fifty-two of these features will be re-issues. The others will be new productions, each constructed to meet the demands of the public for war-time amusement. They will be productions to inspire and to entertain.

The 156 new productions will be booked in 23 Star Series groups, and one group of special productions. The 52 pictures of the Success Series (re-issues) will be booked in 9 Star Series groups and one group of specials.

The Success Series is made up of 52 of the finest productions of the last four years, re-edited. New prints and new lithographs will be furnished.

Besides these four weekly releases, all the Artcraft Pictures and all the Paramount Pictures of the season of 1917-1918—the first Star Series productions (143 in all)—will be available for initial or rebooked showings.

That we are able to release such a wonderful list of productions from our own and allied studios is due to the genius of Mr. Jesse L. Lasky.

Exhibitor Can Plan For Year

AS in the season of 1917-1918, the exhibitor of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures will contract for certain stars, not for a program.

The productions of each star will be released at regular intervals so that the exhibitor can arrange his schedule for the entire year. For instance, when an exhibitor signs for the productions of a star who is to appear in eight pictures, the exhibitor will know that these will be released six weeks apart and can plan accordingly.

He can lay out his year's program and apportion his entire budget at the time he signs his contracts, thus avoiding conflicts.

Sam's Great War Machine

New Paramount and Artcraft Stars

IN the year to come, we shall introduce new stars to Paramount and Artcraft exhibitors—stars in whom we have great confidence. They are Fred Stone, John Barrymore, Ethel Clayton, Dorothy Gish, Lila Lee, Shirley Mason and Bryant Washburn. John Emerson and Anita Loos will write and direct a number of star features.

On behalf of the organization I wish to acknowledge the splendid cooperation extended us by Mr. Thomas H. Ince, who will continue to produce the sort of features that have made his name a guarantee of excellence to exhibitor and public.

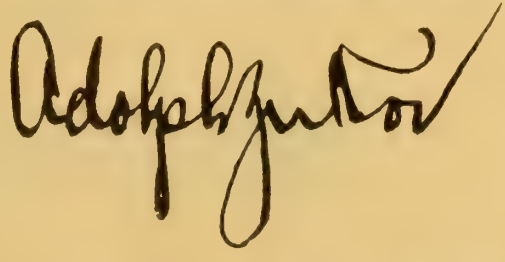
The Finest Short Subjects

NOT satisfied to furnish only the finest feature photoplays, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation leads in the distribution of short subjects—a very vital part of every motion picture entertainment.

The greatest comedies ever offered, greatest in variety as well as in quality, are ready for the Paramount and Artcraft exhibitors. Mack Sennett will make 26 of his remarkable comedies for release in the year to come. "Fatty" Arbuckle will produce 10 avalanches of laughter in 12 months. For the first time, for Paramount and Artcraft exhibitors, the new James Montgomery Flagg comedies—16 of them—will be available. These will give the exhibitors one two-reel comedy release each week.

The Paramount-Bray Pictographs will open up a new field of novelty entertainment in the theatres. The Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures will bring to America the battle-torn fields of France; Travel Pictures that Mr. Holmes is now taking in the War zone. These one-reel pictures are increasing each week in popularity and box office value.

The Greatest Year Of All



WE have pledged ourselves to produce only motion pictures that will make Americans become better Americans, and we shall keep that promise. In the year to come the public will need more than ever the constructive stimulus that only fine motion pictures can give.

Our efforts to maintain a better merchandising service for the exhibitor have met with immediate success. Our National Advertising has built a clientele of new patrons for every exhibitor of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures. In the year to come we shall increase by many thousands the number of regular patrons of theatres that show Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

The quality of our pictures has grown even faster than the quantity. We all owe a great debt to the men and women who have toiled so faithfully to improve this quality—the stars, the directors, the writers. Without these artists, there could be no motion picture as it is today.

Our entire organization is dedicated to two purposes—to help keep up the spirit of America, and to perpetuate the art of motion pictures.

The motion picture has established itself. Ahead of us is the greatest year of all; great, not for what the country will do for the motion picture, but for what the motion picture will do for the country.

ARTCRAFT Pictures

SERIES of 1918-1919— Three Artcraft Pictures

FRED STONE'S debut in motion pictures unquestionably will be one of the most interesting events of the fall season. Mr. Stone is the pre-eminent star of musical comedy—a comedian of rare skill, an acrobatic genius who is known as " the man who can do any stunt better than it ever was done before."

Mr. Stone's latest success is " Jack o' Lantern." He has appeared in recent years in the team of Montgomery & Stone in " The Wizard of Oz," " The Red Mill." " The Old Town," " The Lady of the Slipper " and " Chin Chin." Each year Fred Stone's musical comedy is the musical comedy of the year. A great pantomimic artist—all America remembers his " Scarecrow " in " The Wizard of Oz "—Mr. Stone will be a sensation in motion pictures.

His first picture, " Under the Top," is a circus story by John Emerson and Anita Loos. Mr. Stone's early life was spent as a circus performer and the part will be " made to order " for his comedy and his " stunts."

The second Fred Stone picture will be " Johnny Get Your Gun," a comedy which had a long run on Broadway and which toured the country, playing to big business.

Paramount and Artcraft Specials

Series of 1918-1919—Nine New Special Productions, Booked in a Single Group

THE Paramount and Artcraft Special productions for the next year will comprise a series of pictures of the type usually classified as " something unusually big."

Throughout the year the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will produce important features not classified in the Star Series. A big war picture, a production with a great star who is available for only one picture, a film adaptation of a super novel or of a play of enormous popularity—these are the types of pictures that will be exhibited as Paramount and Artcraft Specials. Each picture will be " special " in money power as well as in quality.

The first two specials will be " The Silver King " and " Private Peat."

" The Silver King " is a huge production of the famous drama by Henry Arthur Jones, first produced in London in 1883 and played all over the world by eminent stars.

" Private Peat " will be a war-story of Americans in battle in which " Private " Peat himself—the famous soldier, lecturer, and author, who was " two years in hell and came back with a smile "—will play the leading role.

The nine Paramount and Artcraft Specials will be released at intervals of six weeks

John Barrymore Productions

SERIES OF 1918-1919—Four New Paramount Pictures

JOHN BARRYMORE'S return to Paramount Pictures will cause great rejoicing among exhibitors, for the work of this young actor on the stage in the last three years has established him as one of America's truly great actors and has made him a mighty drawing card wherever plays are seen or discussed. His characterizations in "The Fortune Hunter," "Justice," and "Peter Ibbetson" have been classed among those preserving the finest traditions of the American stage.

John Barrymore's first new Paramount Picture will be "On the Quiet," played on the stage with great success by William Collier.

The second John Barrymore picture will be "Something To Do," a detective comedy by Maximilian Foster.

SERIES OF 1918-1919 — Eight Paramount Pictures

FOR more than two years Jesse L. Lasky has believed that, given a young woman of unusual beauty, intelligence, and natural charm, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's extraordinary resources for photoplay production and exploitation could develop this natural talent and make her a star of unusual popularity.

He has found the young woman in Lila Lee, who was made a Paramount star after tests equal in thoroughness to those a star would experience in two five-reel productions.

Lila Lee is only 14 years old but has all the grace and endowments of a Miss of 18. She is dark, with beautiful black hair and eyes, and a lithe figure. She has had six years' experience in vaudeville, being featured throughout the country as " Cuddles."

Her first picture will be Tom Gallon's famous story " The Cruise of the Make-Believe." Her second will be a pirate comedy-drama by James Oliver Curwood.

An immense publicity campaign will introduce Lila Lee to the motion picture patrons of America.

John Emerson-Anita Loos Productions

JOHN EMERSON and ANITA LOOS are more than directors and scenario writers. They are artists who have developed a new sort of motion picture comedy-drama—the motion picture that doesn't take itself too darned seriously, the motion picture that speaks your language, that gives you a glow of good humor, that genially slaps you on the back, says " Look here! This is a bully story! " and proceeds to tell it to you.

John Emerson and Anita Loos are responsible for Douglas Fairbanks' rollicking tales, " Down to Earth," " Reaching for the Moon," " The Man from Painted Post," " Wild and Woolly," and " In Again, Out Again." They adapted " Hit-the-Trail Holliday " for George M. Cohan, and " Let's Get a Divorce " for Billie Burke.

Their new productions will be made for several different stars. They will produce the first Shirley Mason pictures and have just completed the first Fred Stone story.

The names " John Emerson and Anita Loos " mean a great deal to exhibitor and to motion picture patron. Their new productions will be eagerly sought, for rare indeed is the exhibitor who hasn't been asked " when will you show another of those John Emerson-Anita Loos pictures—the ones with the funny stunts and the gingery sub-titles? James Montgomery Flagg Comedies

SEASON OF 1918-1919

Sixteen James Montgomery Flagg Comedies

JAMES MONTGOMERY FLAGG, famous artist and writer, has brought a new kind of comedy into motion pictures. He has taken "people you know," pretty girls and their friends, and in a rollicking spirit has good humoredly made their little problems a laughing matter.

"Sweethearts and Wives" is the title of the new series of comedies which are produced by Jack Eaton and Eltinge F. Warner. "It's Greek to Us" is the first and the second is "Romance in Brass Tacks." Martin Justice, who directed the O. Henry Pictures, is directing these comedies.

They're going to bring a new kind of laugh into your theatre, giving just the kind of "something different" that the exhibitor needs in his comedy schedule.

The new James Montgomery Flagg comedies will be released at intervals of three weeks, in the Paramount schedule of fifty-two comedies a year.

TRIANGLE

THIS EXHIBITOR USES DISCRETION IN ADVERTISING

THERE is an exhibitor in the State of Illinois who knows how to advertise.

He's made an enormous success of his theater through proper publicity.

And yet, his advertising is not blatant, strident or boisterous.

In fact he's caged the superlatives that other exhibitors have permitted to run wild through the jungles of exploitation.

With simple sincerity, with telling force, with confidential earnestness, he brings the message of his pictures, his service and his ideals to the public.

The public BELIEVES him. It has FAITH in him. It RESPONDS.

This man, although he is one of the cleverest writers and originators of publicity in the field, knows WHY his theater is so highly trusted by the public and so successful at the BOX OFFICE.

He frankly states that all of his clever publicity would be a failure without pictures which are consistently pleasing; pictures that are clean, wholesome, original, well-acted and artistic.

Triangle is very proud to be the organization which serves this gentleman. And he is well satisfied with the success he has achieved with Triangle pictures.

He is paying the modest prices for Triangle features which are so much more attractive than those asked for films of a grade often very much more inferior. His service is standardized on a healthy basis. He receives his shipments always on time, through the efficiency of the Triangle Traffic Department, and his advertising and promotion activities are admirably foreseen and ably assisted by the advertising bureau.

Thousands of exhibitors are steadily forging ahead in the estimation of picture patrons through the showing of Triangle pictures.

Why not consider Triangle? Any of our exchanges can give you some very interesting information on SERVICE.

Important to Exhibitors who run "PERSHING'S CRUSADERS"

In placing its first war film feature in the hands of the regular exhibitor instead of exhibiting it through other channels, the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, George Creel, Chairman, has paid the exhibitors of America a high compliment. In return for the confidence reposed in us we must exploit this memorable subject with the dignity and thoroughness to which it is entitled.

We have permission to use the Government's name as producer in our advertising and publicity. We must see that this privilege is not abused by misleading statements—either direct or indirect—which will give the impression that the Government is responsible, or in any way connected with the actual exhibition of the picture.

The Division of Films has issued or approved complete advertising and publicity campaign copy which will cover all requirements. It will be available at First National Exchanges. For any other matter issued in connection with the exploitation of the film each exhibitor will have to accept full responsibility.

The Committee on Public Information has thousands of eyes which will be on the lookout for cases where ill-advised or misleading publicity is used. Should we exhibitors prove unworthy the trust reposed in us we may expect future Government features to reach the public in halls, churches or other publicly controlled meeting places.

As American Citizens

we have been entrusted with an important public work.

HAWORTH PICTURES

Corporation announces the eminent Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa, in a series of eight five and six part motion picture productions of imposing splendor.

The Haworth organization has been formed for the special purpose of presenting to the motion picture theatre a highly developed and specialized product aimed to meet the strenuously competitive conditions of the day and to enable the theatre to anticipate the strides of the rapidly improving public taste in photoplay art.

Haworth Pictures Corporation, with ample resources and a single definite purpose, is pledged to the achievement of a product of the highest box office value.

Available at All
Mutual Film Exchanges

is a star of stars, as conceded by every critic of standing and authority. His mastery of his art is complete, finished, refined to a degree, which sets him apart among those of the upper rank of screen value.

Every aid and every precaution has been given and provided to bring all of this remarkable value to the screen in the terms of box office value in the production of the Haworth Pictures Corporation.

Two directors will give their undivided time to the making of these eight productions. William Worthington and James Young will alternate on the pictures, insuring the time and latitude necessary for absolute perfection of story and picture.

Available at All
Mutual Film Exchanges

The first two productions on the Haworth Pictures Corporation schedule of Hayakawa specials are:

"HIS BIRTHRIGHT"

"THE TEMPLE OF DUSK"

Both are productions chosen after months of careful consideration of dramatic material and the conditions which the motion picture theatre faces to-day. Increasingly high value must be delivered to the public. The Hayakawa pictures contain that value.

These productions, eight in all, will be available beginning September 1, for pre-release and at intervals of six or eight weeks.

Special arrangements for pre-release runs will be made with first run theatres in larger centers.

Terms outlined on application. Ask the Haworth representative or the Mutual Film Corporation's exchange manager.

these annual CONVENTION NUMBERS

NOT merely for the purpose of influencing additional advertising expenditures—not merely for the purpose of reflecting more glory upon itself, but with the sole and studied idea of reviewing in detail and with real interest some particular phase of the development of the moving picture industry, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD once a year publishes a Special Edition.

For the benefit of its readers it exerts its very best efforts along this one particular line. Its legion of friends, from all corners of the world and representing every branch of the industry, cooperate in the preparation of an attractive budget of invaluable information calculated to mark another milestone in the progress of the moving picture business.

Picture people everywhere wait for this issue. It is not thumbed over casually, but every line in it is read—and read by the representative people in the trade who carefully consider every detail—both in text and advertising copy—which is brought to their attention.

Facts and Comments

WELCOME to Mr. Black. We do not know just what his official status with relation to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is, but he is the first to come out of that camp with a flag of truce in the matter of amalgamation of the two exhibitor organizations. Mr. Black's letter, which is an answer to previous letters printed by Frank Rembusch, appears on another page. Our readers will form their own conclusions regarding it. Our opinion is that while it shows that a unified organization is uppermost in Mr. Black's mind, it does not show that he has a proper grasp of the situation. We take it that Mr. Black knows what was the cause of the split at Chicago. He must also know that he cannot expect the men who left the National League at that time as a protest against certain abuses to return to the old organization until it has purged itself of the evils complained of. When that has been accomplished then an appeal such as Mr. Black makes will be in order UNIQUE in the records of the doings of War Trade Boards comes the report, the authenticity of which we cannot vouch for, that the British Board of Trade has passed its restrictions upon shipments of films upon the belief that a reel of film was equal in dimensions to the picture shown upon the screen, approximately 12 feet by 18 feet, and consequently would take up much cargo space. Ultimately, it is said, when the board learned that a reel of film was little larger than a spool of cotton the restriction was materially modified.

OWING to a change of the date of publication of one of our contemporaries the MOVING PICTURE WORLD now enjoys the advantage of being the first paper in the trade to reach its readers each week. Mailed on Wednesday of every week gives each copy sufficient time to reach all subscribers living east of the Mississippi river by Saturday, provided the dispatch of mail matter is not delayed in transmission. Papers published latter in the week cannot reach their subscribers much before Monday of the following week in the same territory. Manufacturers who desire to get their announcements out at the earliest possible moment will recognize the advantage of using the pages of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD for that purpose. Likewise exhibitors who want the earliest possible information will be quick to see the advantage which the WORLD affords. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is first out. Buy it.

WHILE the action of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in refusing to take part in the motion picture exposition at Boston may put something in the nature of a damper on that enterprise, the event is not to be abandoned. New England is fruitful territory and worth cultivating by picture men, and even though the N. A. M. P. I. may not officially take part in the Boston show there is nothing in that action to prevent any manufacturer or accessory dealer from exploiting his wares in any way he may see fit. New England exhibitors will be out in force. Go over and make their acquaintance. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be there.

ANYONE acquainted with the rudiments of taxation knows that any effort to tax the working capital of an industry in such a manner that the tax cannot be passed on to the consumer must fail. This is a fact that was recognized long ago so that no one nowadays even imagines that anyone other than the ultimate consumer will pay the tax. Therefore, it makes little difference how the Congressional Ways and Means Committee, of which Representative Kitchin is chairman, shall levy the new war tax against the motion picture industry, it will be paid by increased admissions to picture theaters. The point to be considered is how it can be assessed so that it may be collected surely, effectively and with the greatest ease. It is up to the leaders of the industry who have constituted themselves its spokesmen to show the members of the Ways and Means Committee the easiest way to lay the tax equitably. If the report of the session some picturemen had with that committee at Washington is accurate it is evident that nothing definite along that line has yet been accomplished.

On Having Some Obvious Design

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

PEOPLE think what they please and believe what they like. The question of suiting them is largely one of understanding human nature. Most of them are busy doing the best they can with what comes their way. They may turn aside from looking out for number one when some great cause calls them, but behind the finer sentiment and below it is the idea of doing something to get along in the world, some pet scheme nearly always working, a struggle on hand which has some end in view.

Of such material the moving-picture audience is made.

People feel the necessity of definite purpose.

It is not required that we should reason with them about it.

That feeling keeps them going in spite of difficulties and set-backs of every kind. It stiffens the will to carry out plans in the face of bitter discouragement. It is often the mother of hope, one of the human traits so common as to be almost universal.

Size up human nature, and you will know what the audience likes.

In this latitude growth starts with springtime. Rains come and nourish it with dampened earth. The sun creeps north until it warms all sides of that growth, stimulating and encouraging it during its infancy. People may growl about the weather, but they know the planets will keep serenely along in their spheres, and nature will bring forth the food we enjoy. We silently recognize that there is design in it all, all that growth is destined to serve some purpose.

On that subject, at least, there is united opinion.

The audience mind is made up in advance on that subject.

Any entertainment intended for that audience should take into consideration and provide for its mental enjoyment. People are not made comfortable and happy either by what jars common sense, or by what starts out promisingly for some destination of live interest, dribbles along through four or five reels, and lands at nowhere in particular. Such is the quality of screen product which moves on wheels and is known by its uses as a "vehicle."

A writer of vehicles recently made an astounding discovery. He saw the name of the author of "Damaged Goods" and found out that Brieux was not a certain kind of imperial cheese, as he had long suspected.

He also thinks that Ibsen's plays are timely.

Oh, shades of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "East Lynne!"

Ibsen carried forward the drama of definite purpose by facing the facts of his time. He wrote of what he knew in his age and place. He took the materails at hand, diverse, or only partly related, and organized them in story form to some forceful end, suited to what his people were thinking about, in accord with their mood. Life is at this moment violently in process of change, and it is for our dramatists to face our facts, rearrange them, as Ibsen did, in story form entertaining to the mentality of our audiences because of some obvious design.

There are many forces concentrated on a feature film.

Throughout the entire range of its pictorial development there are many and varied instruments brought into play for a definite purpose, that of giving the drama all the energy and beauty they can contribute. What a vain effort, if the drama itself is purposeless! In this may be found the secret of so many failures, and the man who pretends there are none has stuck his head in the sand.

No folly is committed when he cannot see it.

We have the future to think about as well as the present.

Very rapidly there is coming about a closer touch with certain European nations, a better understanding of them, an elimination of social boundary lines, the finest ideals of our democracy looming up in world importance. Besides this intermingling of thought and feeling, bound to affect our drama and the market for what we produce, we are confronted with a nationalization of industries and a centralizing of control almost bewildering in its effect. There is obvious design in it all, and so there must be in the entertainment people will think about and talk about, the new drama of the screen.

A Test of Service

By Edward Weitzel.

ON March 31 one of the leading producing companies released a screen version of a poetic play written by one of the greatest living poets. The reviews in the trade papers and in the New York daily press were all highly commendatory. A publication which runs a department devoted to exhibitors' box office reports classed the picture editorially as "a splendid, complete and finished proof of the art of the motion picture," and closed with the prediction that it "will now delight the eyes and elevate the hearts of the whole world's millions."

In its issue of June 15 this same publication published twelve exhibitors' comments on the picture. Five of these comments were from a financial point of view, favorable; seven were decidedly unfavorable. The following issue, dated June 22, printed three exhibitors' comments on the same picture and all were financially unfavorable. The box office report credited the picture with doing average business.

On April 1 the same producing company released a feature picture starring one of the most prominent actors of the screen. The exhibitors' comments on this picture printed in the June 15 issue of the publication in question numbered eleven, three being artistically favorable and eight artistically unfavorable. The box office report credited the picture with doing big business. The June 22 issue of the same publication contained six exhibitors' comments, two artistically favorable and four artistically unfavorable, and the picture was still credited with doing big business.

Rather a small percentage of opinions to use as an intelligent estimate of the picture's artistic merits. It is evident that very few exhibitors have any interest in, or place any reliance on, this sort of service.

Inquiry at the office of the company which releases the two pictures discloses the pleasant information that the first picture has proved a financial as well as an artistic success and is attracting not only the regular screen patrons but an element that commonly does not attend the moving picture theater.

Applying the Test.

There's something wrong here: the three viewpoints do not agree.

The exhibitors' box office reports and comments are proclaimed by their publisher as an invaluable service to all managers of moving picture houses. How to give this proof is a bit puzzling. To begin with, something over two hundred exhibitors have shown these pictures since they were first released. It is difficult to understand how the opinions of a dozen or so of this number can truthfully reflect the opinions and the amount of business done by the remaining two hundred and odd.

If the exhibitor is guided by the editorial opinion of the publication referred to he has been given an opportunity to treat his patrons to one of the finest achievements of the screen, one that will appeal to the taste and refinement of this community. If the experience of the producing company will assist the exhibitor he may learn that the larger portion of the managers who have shown the picture have reaped large financial and artistic benefit and consider this photoplay a piece of constructive booking of the greatest value. If the comments and the reports of twelve managers out of over two hundred are a safe guide the exhibitor has a fifty-fifty choice between "Wonderful picture. Big Business" and "Average person didn't care for this."

Time spent in trying to figure out the advisability of running a picture by the aid of such a system is time wasted. With all the returns in, it would still be up to the showmanship of the exhibitor to decide the matter. Knowing the class of picture, the taste of his patrons and the nature of the campaign such a picture demands the real exhibitor need trouble himself very little about what any one else did with it. If he understands showmanship he'll make up his mind for himself; if he doesn't the reports of other exhibitors, ranging from favorable to most unfavorable, will not help him in the least to determine what the picture will be worth to him.

There is no easy road to success in the amusement world. No reviewer or exhibitor's report can tell the manager of a theatre how to run his business. Hard work, hard common sense and a thorough grasp of his individual problems constitute the kind of service his business requires.

Views of Two Storymakers

A RECENT article by George Middleton in the Dramatic Mirror, "The Dramatist and the Motion Picture," is a calm and thoughtful expression of opinion from a playwright whose achievement for the spoken stage gives weight to his words. Most of the article deals with the compensation question. One sentence points out an artistic defect in construction that the dramatist is continually finding in moving pictures: "Most pictures tire because the narrative is employed at the expense of the suspense—which is inevitably the first aim of the playwright." This is merely another way of saying that where such treatment of the picture occurs the author and the continuity writer have turned out a screen novel and not a photodrama. The sooner general recognition is given to these two distinct forms of story telling the better for the moving picture. Some plots, from the very nature of their material and the chance for scenic display, demand the novel method of treatment; others require the vital, objective method of reproducing life that is the soul of real drama. Applying the word photoplay to all screen fiction is a mistake that needs rectifying. Here is a fine opportunity to utilize a little of the broad vision of which we hear so much.

Rex Beach defines the making of motion pictures as "a publishing business in a new form with a dash of showmanship thrown in to make it harder." Considerably more than a dash is necessary, neighbor Beach. Showmanship must direct every move in the growth of a picture from its inception until it reaches the screen—if it is to prove a financial success. Both George Middleton and Rex Beach are of one mind as to the importance of the skilled dramatist to the film producer, and the author of "Polly with a Past" is positive that the author of a screen story should be consulted before the scenario editor and the continuity writer makes changes in his script. Quite right—if the author has mastered the art of showmanship! Nine times out of ten he hasn't; but if he has it will be apparent in his work, and no sane producer who knows his business is going to permit a valuable piece of property to be altered at the expense of its money making qualities. That would be bad showmanship and showmanship is founded on good business principles.

Why Some Comedies Fail

By Robert C. McElravy.

IT is a valuable thing to know why certain comedies prove successful, but even more valuable in a way to know just what it is that causes others to miss fire. Practically the same amount of time and energy, to say nothing of money, is spent on the failures as is spent on the successes, but the box office receipts are, of course, a decidedly different matter.

Studying successes will teach producers and performers a great deal, but it is just as valuable to study the failures. Successful humor is the most evasive thing in the world; it is so subtle that it might almost be said to "sneak up" on you. It sets you to laughing almost before you are aware of it. And when you plan to produce something equally funny you find that the methods employed have escaped you.

One cannot always put his finger on the intangible beginnings of successful humor, but he can generally locate the beginnings of failure. For, in the presence of an expectant audience, it may safely be said that any clean-cut, swiftly-moving comedy is a success until something happens that throws it "off the key." In other words, the audience is with you, heart and soul, until you begin to offend it. When you do this, you have placed an obstacle in your path. The comedy may yet be saved, but once the laughter has died down, it is hard to bring it back again.

Comedies have failed over and over again on the screen for practically the same reasons. Some directors see to it that the reasons are not repeated in their next attempts, but others seem unable to profit by first mistakes and keep on repeating them.

The average comedy that fails of its purpose, which is to bring laughter, is apt to show a careless disregard for past experience, or to give evidence that the scenes had been literally slammed together on a mere chance that they might turn out well. Unfortunately enough, an occasional picture produced in this way does bring the desired laughter, and directors and performers no doubt get an idea that the making of comedies is all a gamble. There is an undoubted element of chance, but we do not believe it is so great as this course would indicate.

What kills comedies?

We saw one the other day in which a tiny baby appeared. The hero, a young man in a hurry, joggled the baby on his knee until it cried. The action was unnecessary on the hero's part, and people stopped laughing to sympathize with the baby. This might have passed without notice, but in every scene the baby appeared in thereafter it was rough-handled and cried! There was deliberate misuse of good material—one or two smiles from a baby will often bring success to a comedy, but a constantly crying baby immediately excites pity and so spoils the humor. This is an old offense.

A too obvious attempt to get a humorous effect is also a common fault. When a performer comes out in a self-conscious way and his every move says, "I am going to be funny or kill myself in the attempt," he nearly always fails. We saw a case not long since where a well-known performer, who has won repeated success on the stage, did this very thing. He went through two reels of perspiring acrobatics, running, jumping, falling down and doing everything he could think of to be funny, and all without perceptible effect on the audience. He was apparently oblivious to the fact that there is a certain technique in even this knockabout style of comedy that is not to be picked up in a day. Chaplin does all these things, but never in a meaningless, unthinking way.

Many comedies fail because they are based on an idea that is not essentially humorous, and cannot possibly be made so. This is perhaps the saddest mistake of all, for it means an utterly useless expenditure of energy.

Humor is a shy thing and does not mingle with the grosser emotions, except in the hands of a master. It alternates well with simple pathos, but it will not blend easily with heavy drama, or tragedy, or pronounced sex interest. The latter most often intrudes upon the field of comedy, for some producers have the idea that there is something innately funny about sex appeal. As a matter of fact it will slow up a comedy almost every time, even without descending to absolute vulgarity.

A successful comedy does not demand a big idea, but it does demand plenty of natural, unforced action and a freedom from the unpleasant, the sordid, the tragic or anything else that sets the deeper emotions into play.

Organization Needed More Than Ever

By Sam Spedon.

WHATEVER the reason, there seems to be a lack of co-operation in organizations of the motion picture industry just at this time, when it is needed most. Never has organization accomplished so much as it has during the past year and it is a pity that it should in any way diminish now. You would think that the battle won would inspire all those who have benefited by them to stand by their leaders and rally round the standard that means ultimate victory and success. On the contrary, it seems to encourage the rank and file to become indifferent or feel secure in the assurance that those who have borne the brunt of the battle are able to continue it without their assistance, while they stay comfortably at home and enjoy the fruits of victory, regardless of the sacrifices that are being made. They console themselves by saying "if it didn't benefit them they wouldn't do it and they can afford to make a sacrifice better than I." A poor excuse is better than none, and this is none. It is a cheap way to avoid responsibility.

Organization has made an impression with legislators all over the country and the power of organization has made itself felt. It would be worse than suicidal to neglect or depreciate it in any way just now. We need national organization, we need state and we need local organization more than ever. If we don't support it we will have increased legislative troubles to encounter this coming fall. If it is impossible for all members to attend their conventions and meetings, they can at least contribute their dues towards defraying expenses and assisting those who are gaining benefits for them.

Famous Players Holds Western Convention

Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountains Districts Send Officers for Conference in San Francisco.

THE first convention of the executives, assistants and salesmen of the eighth and ninth districts, composing the Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountain territories of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was held at the San Francisco offices of this organization commencing June 7, and lasting for three days. The gathering was opened by a talk from Herman Wobber, of the Pacific Coast division, who welcomed the men from the mountain territory and expressed a desire that this should be the beginning of a close relationship between the two districts.

Following this talk both he and Louis Marcus, district manager of the Rocky Mountain territory, with headquarters at Salt Lake City, told of the convention recently held at the home office. They declared that the policy of the past year had been a big success and that steps had been taken to overcome any minor weakness in the plan that had been followed during this period. Interesting announcements in regard to new stars were made and telegrams from the studio were read, assuring those present of high quality productions.

The following took part in the conference: Salt Lake City—Louis Marcus, district manager; F. B. McCracken, branch manager; E. V. Saderup, salesman. Butte—Mell S. Wilson, branch manager; B. H. Collier, salesman. Denver—M. H. Cohn, branch manager; H. J. Krause, salesman. Portland—C. M. Hill, branch manager; Harry Hunter, assistant manager. Seattle—H. G. Rosenbaum, branch manager; Guy F. Navarre, salesman. Los Angeles—J. J. Halstead, branch manager; O. V. Traggarth, salesman. San Francisco—Herman Wobber, district manager; M. H. Lewis, branch manager; D. K. Shanks, district auditor; R. A. Churton, auditor; Vernon R. Moore, salesman; Robert C. Poor, salesman; J. J. Patridge, correspondent; W. W. Vaughan, publicity and service manager. New York—E. R. Barnet, auditor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Mark A. Lasky, uncle of Jesse L. Lasky.

Urgent Need for Training Operator

Inexperienced Men Can Not Be Trusted in Booths—Time to Provide for Future Is Now.

DURING the past few weeks a number of fires have been reported in the operating booths of Louisville moving picture theaters. In several cases film exchanges have lost valuable prints, and this has set exchange men to thinking and investigating causes. In some cases it has been learned that fires were due to inexperienced operators. In some cases mere boys, who could hardly be called apprentices, have taken charge of machines where regular operators have been called in the draft, and in others even women with practically no experience have been called upon.

It now appears as though a large number of additional men will be called out of operating booths within the next few months by the extension of the call to older men and the question of developing experienced operators to fill these positions has come up. An exchange man, in discussing the subject, advocated the policy of training more men above the draft age, or women, and having experienced persons to step into such vacancies, instead of waiting until men are actually called and then having to put inexperienced help in without proper training. It has been pointed out that many older men, past the draft age, who are holding down unsatisfactory jobs, would be glad to put in a few hours a night at a low scale of remuneration in an effort to equip themselves to take up such jobs later on.

Many older men are to be found who are in pinched circumstances but who have a fairly good idea of mechanical operations and who would be glad of an opportunity to pick up a few dollars a week on part time work. Trained people are essential and in fact vital. The numerous breaks during pictures and starting the wrong reel that have been shown in some of the Louisville theaters during the past few weeks can be traced directly to inexperienced help.

DAUGHTER OF ANNA HELD IN FOX PRODUCTION.

To take her mind off the illness of her mother, Anna Held, who is fighting bravely with death, Liane Held Carrera has gone into motion pictures, and is now supporting Virginia Pearson in a Fox production, which is in work at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn.

Aeroplane Crash Between Creel and Universal

Too Vivid Filming of Liberty Motor Works Objected to by Government Committee—Broadway Showing Is Abandoned

GEORGE CREEL'S Committee on Public Information and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company came into direct conflict Sunday evening, June 23, as the result of the proposed and advertised showing of a film by the Universal at the Broadway theater under the title of "The Yanks Are Coming," the product of Universal's industrial department, made under contract with the Dayton-Wright Airplane Company. After the performance had started with the showing of a Universal comedy and a Universal Topical Review an explanatory announcement was made from the stage by James M. Sheen, of Stanchfield & Levy, Universal's counsel, that the film would not be shown.

As the result of Mr. Sheen's advice to the Universal another feature was substituted—Dorothy Phillips in "The Mortgaged Wife." Those who had paid admission were invited to remain as guests of the Universal following the announcement that money would be refunded at the box office upon presentation of seat checks. Some persons in the audience repaired at once to the ticket window, took their money and departed. After the show a long line formed, and it is said a good share of the paid admissions were thus refunded. Those who attended on Universal's invitation, together with the paid admissions, constituted a full house, and every one was greatly disappointed that "The Yanks Are Coming" should remain a film still to be publicly shown.

Monday forenoon Charles H. Hart, Director of the Division of Films, invited representatives of the trade press to assemble in the Creel offices in the Times Building, and R. H. Cochrane also requested that the trade press call upon him at the Universal to get the film concern's side of the issue. The representative of the Moving Picture World was among those who went first to the Times Building, heard what Mr. Hart had to say, and then made the short trip lengthwise of Longacre Square to hear Mr. Cochrane's story.

The morning newspapers had carried long accounts of the Broadway theater affair, giving fully a statement issued by Mr. Cochrane and carrying something about the "other side" of the case. In his statement Mr. Cochrane voiced the belief that William Randolph Hearst had influenced George Creel in his conduct of the affair, intimating that Mr. Hearst's film interests were matters of concern. The rather popular pastime of taking a crack at the Creel committee, as well as a more general public antipathy toward the Hearst publications, seemed to have opened the pages of the New York papers to the fullest exploitation of the controversy in Monday's papers.

Hart Gives Previous Employment of Associates.

In his session with trade press representatives Mr. Hart first specialized in the "Hearst" end of the matter, explaining where every individual Mr. Cochrane mentioned in his published statement had been previously employed. Not all of the men specified by Mr. Cochrane had been at any time exclusively associated with Hearst, and he also explained where and in what capacity several individuals were at the moment operating as representatives of the Creel committee.

Mr. Hart specified that "The Yanks Are Coming" had been made by Universal industrial forces on contract with the Dayton-Wright Company; that permits signed by the adjutant general of the War Department were necessary to allow cameras to be operated on Government work or in factories doing work for the Government; that no such permits were issued. Mr. Hart said that the completed picture, when cut and assembled, exposed secrets of the Liberty Motor construction, as well as the minute operations of the Liberty battle planes; that Universal made an agreement with the Dayton-Wright people to show the pictures as an amusement feature, submitting the film to Captain Burkhard, of the Signal Corps, whose men worked in co-operation with Universal's forces in completing the picture.

Right here, as will later be seen, a divergence commences. Mr. Hart said that Captain Burkhard looked at the picture, directed that certain eliminations should be made and never afterward saw the pictures; nor did any person in governmental authority see the picture thereafter until Saturday last, the day before the picture was advertised to open at the Broadway. Then Messrs. Hart, Sisson and Byoir saw the film and declined to sanction its exhibition, placing the matter squarely up to Mr. Atkins, the accredited representative of the Dayton-Wright people; submitting that there was no law to enforce a mandate against the showing of the film, but pointing out the fact that Creel committee censorship was entirely voluntary, both with newspapers and motion pictures.

Mr. Hart asserted that had the picture, with "cuts" required by Captain Burkhard, been submitted to that official Captain Burkhard's mode of procedure would have been to turn it over to the Creel committee (if it was finally satisfactory to Captain Burkhard); that the committee would have viewed the films through its authorized representatives and then would have passed it along to the division of films for subsequent disposition. Mr. Hart protested that the Universal had taken the "short cut" to an attempt to show the picture, and that the Creel committee and its division of films could not sanction this procedure in justice to other film concerns who had already complied with requirements in force and would, of course, be expected to continue operating under the regulations properly established.

Cochrane Explains Purpose of Film.

The World man left the Times Building under the impression that Mr. Cochrane, on behalf of the Universal, would have an interesting statement to make in view of what Mr. Hart had said, supplemented by the remarks of Carl Byoir, who also spoke for the division of films to the trade press representatives. Mr. Cochrane, as might have been supposed, was "loaded" with faith in the cause of his company, and proceeded to refute most of the statements Messrs. Hart and Byoir had made.

Mr. Cochrane said that Mr. Atkins, of the Dayton-Wright Company, had contracted for the production of an industrial film, to be made for the purpose of inspiring skilled mechanics to join the aeroplane manufacturing forces; to send the film abroad to show General Pershing and his crusaders how the Government was hustling the work of making good with aeroplanes, and to show Congress in a like spirit what was being done with the immense appropriations.

Mr. Cochrane said Mr. Atkins declared that all permits had been arranged for, and, as a matter of fact, the Signal Corps entered so skilfully and enthusiastically into producing the pictures that there seemed no question of governmental sanction. Mr. Cochrane stated that the film was such an inspiring product and so well proportioned to awaken patriotic enthusiasm that proposals were made to the Dayton-Wright people when the film was assembled that Universal produce it as an attraction for the general public to view. Mr. Cochrane declared that Captain Burkhard, of the Signal Corps, having passed upon the film initially, tacitly released the films as exposing no secrets that Germany did not already know.

The film had not been shown to Captain Burkhard a second time, Mr. Cochrane declared, for the reason that they were not able to get a list of the "cuts" the Signal Corps official desired should be made; that representatives of the Universal sat with Captain Burkhard while the film was being run for his benefit, listened to his suggestions and cut the film from memory. This action, Mr. Cochrane declared, was made necessary because the Creel committee had never issued to them the printed list of "cuts" Captain Burkhard had made despite the fact that Captain Burkhard had said his "cuts" would be given to Universal in authoritative form by the Creel committee.

Mr. Cochrane voiced his thorough conviction that the Creel committee and the division of films had acted in a manner inimical to Universal's interest, not alone in "The Yanks Are Coming," but in other matters concerning Government film production. Mr. Cochrane said that Mr. Hart had at all times, in the matter of the aeroplane pictures, dealt with and addressed himself to Mr. Atkins, of Dayton-

Wright, and not to Universal representatives, either in conferences or written or telephoned communication.

When the interest of Dayton-Wright were finally at issue, come 8:30 Sunday night Mr. Cochrane declared Universal decided to abandon the exhibition project that the Dayton-Wright contracts might not be jeopardized in the eyes of the Government. Mr. Cochrane declared that so far as Universal was concerned he felt that the Creel committee was acting in a spirit of antagonism that made the Universal feel that, because of discrimination, they were inclined to ignore the authority of the Creel committee in any matter or manner whatever.

George Creel contradicted late Monday afternoon, in an authorized statement, the representatives of the division of film when he gave to the united press a statement that he, Creel, was personally responsible for stopping the showing of "The Yanks Are Coming." Mr. Cochrane stated that Universal representatives were leaving for Washington Monday evening for the avowed purpose of showing the film to Government officials, members of Congress and, if possible, to President Wilson.

Tuesday morning, June 25, there were indications that Major Nicholas Biddle, Chief of the Army Intelligence Service for the district of New York, had been able to effect a compromise between the parties to the dispute over "The Yanks Are Coming." Major Biddle had been constituted a mediator, and Monday afternoon representatives of both the Universal and Creel committee were in consultation with him. It was agreed by all concerned that no immediate announcement should be made relating to the final decision.

Brunet Denies Statements of Universal

Vice-President of Pathe Declares There is no Partnership of Any Kind Between His Company and W. R. Hearst.

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in an interview Monday, categorically denied the statements attributed to P. A. Powers and R. H. Cochrane of the Universal Film Company concerning his partnership alleged to exist between William Randolph Hearst and his company and Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Mr. Brunet first pointed out that there is no such corporation, partnership or association known as Hearst-Pathe Weekly, Hearst Pathe Company or Hearst News Weekly Company or Hearst-Pathe Film Company.

Mr. Brunet stated that Pathe Exchange, Inc., which controls the Pathe motion picture interests in America, is a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, with the following directors: Charles Pathe, Leon Madieu, Hedley Smith, Paul Brunet, Ferdinand Zecca, Edmund C. Lynch, Paul Bayne, Paul Fuller, Jr., and Ramirez Torres, the last six being residents of the United States, and that its only connection with William Randolph Hearst is to release the news items photographed by International Film Service, a Hearst subsidiary, under a contract entered into over a year before the release of the Official War Review was ever contemplated.

"It seems to me," said Mr. Brunet, "that the only reason that I can assign for this statement is that the Universal Film Company is disappointed at being unsuccessful in securing the release of the Allies' Official War Review and is seeking publicity for its own news weekly.

"I want to emphasize the fact," Mr. Brunet added, "that the statements attributed to Mr Powers and Mr. Cochrane of the Universal, as printed in the morning papers, to the effect that the division of films of the Committee on Public Information is composed largely of former 'Hearst-Pathe' employees are false. J. A. Berst was formerly vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and, to my certain knowledge, has never been connected directly or indirectly with any Hearst organization. The same is true of H. C. Hoagland, who was formerly head of the scenario department of Pathe Exchange, Inc. The same is also true of Mr. Van Arsdale, who was also connected with the scenario department of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Lew Simons was formerly employed by Pathe Exchange, Inc., as a cameraman.

"G. A. Smith was formerly serial publicity manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and is now in Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C. Mr. Hubbell has never been employed by Pathe Exchange, Inc., in any capacity. Mr. Donohue was employed as a cameraman for Pathe Exchange, Inc., but left us about fifteen months ago.

"Another thing I want to emphasize is that there is no partnership of any kind or character between Pathe Exchange, Inc., and any of the Hearst interests, and that neither Mr. Hearst nor any of his organization own or control directly or indirectly one single share of stock of Pathe Exchange, Inc."

Marines Get Thrilling Air Pictures

With Motion Camera Many Stunts Are Photographed for Screen Showing Throughout Country.

AN epoch in aviation photography has been reached by Marine Corps movie men in the taking of sensational pictures from a plane at Miami, Fla. A few weeks ago a party of six official Marine Corps movie men sailed from New York for Miami with two motion picture machines, three still cameras and enough equipment to take nearly 15,000 feet of film and hundreds of "still" pictures.

Second Lieutenant S. L. Rothapfel, who headed the party, composed of Sergeants La Mond and Owens, Corporal Forsythe and Private Denman, says that while shooting the movies from the clouds may not be particularly new or thrilling for some persons there are thrills aplenty for the beginner.

Although the trip was made to get pictures at several of the Marine Corps training camps, the main object was to get something new in the way of aviation photography at the Marine Corps aviation school at Miami.

For a time the photographers were content with placing one machine on the top of a tower and another on the ground to film the aviators. This proved unsatisfactory after Sergeant La Mond found the planes just missing the top of his campaign hat and darting out of the picture, so he quickly put a better plan into operation. Getting into one of the planes with his camera, placing the machine so that a part of the plane would always remain within focus, he started for the clouds. The first day he took eight "hops," a "hop" being an aviation term for a trip in the air.

Every trick on the aviator's calendar was performed for the benefit of La Mond and his camera. Some of the tricks which were filmed both from the ground and the plane itself were Immelmann turns, nose-dives, tail-spins, side-slips, loop-the-loop, Dutch rolls, falling-leaves and zooms.

These films have been developed and projected on the screen with the result that it has been decided to show them in moving picture theaters throughout the country.

Rocks Break Up Young Luncheon

Clara Kimball Young and Her Father Slightly Hurt When Avalanche Distributes Shower.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG and her father, Edward M. Kimball, were the unhappy recipients of an off scene "thrill" June 21 not recorded by the camera, while playing scenes for "The Savage Woman," now in course of production at the Lasky studio, Hollywood.

Miss Young, and her entire company, had been busy all morning taking exteriors along the cliffs of San Pedro. At noon they had just completed one of the most important scenes, staged at the foot of a high cliff. As the players were preparing to enjoy their picnic lunch, tablecloths having been distributed for the eatables, a shower of stones, caused by an avalanche on the overhanging cliff fell upon them.

Pandemonium reigned, as every one scrambled to safety. A large stone struck Miss Young, causing her to fall to the ground. When nearby members of her company reached her it was found that the stone had struck her on the forehead. In the meantime, her father, Mr. Kimball, was discovered crumpled in a heap on the ground. In trying to escape the avalanche, he had tripped and fallen, hurting his ankle. He was placed in an automobile and rushed home with all possible speed, where the doctor who had been summoned pronounced the injury a bad sprain. The remaining members of the company escaped without injury, and Miss Young, after a few hours to pull herself together, recovered sufficiently to take the remaining scene during the afternoon.

LUCILLE LEE STEWART IN METRO PICTURES.

Lucille Lee Stewart has been engaged by Metro for the important role of Vera, the "chorus-lady," with Ethel Barrymore, in the screen version of "Our Mrs. McChesney," adapted by Luther A. Reed from the play by George V. Hobart and Edna Ferber.

Miss Stewart is the sister of Anita Stewart, and in private life Mrs. Ralph W. Ince. Mr. Ince is the director of "Our Mrs. McChesney," having been specially engaged by arrangement with Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin.

Congressmen Hear Film Tax Protest

Committee on Ways and Means Listens to Arguments Presented by the Messrs. Brady, Powers, Friend and Goodman

A GENERAL protest against increasing the tax on admissions to motion pictures theaters was laid before the House Ways and Means Committee at Washington on June 18 by William A. Brady. The president of the National Association told the committee of the meeting held the previous day in New York City at which it was thought wise that all of the theatrical interests in the United States should present their case at this time and for that reason he was present to talk on the admission tax, while P. A. Powers would discuss the footage tax and Maurice Goodman, representing the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association, would speak on the excess profits tax. Arthur S. Friend also spoke on the tax question.

Mr. Brady told of the activities in the motion picture field during the past year, of how President Wilson in writing to him as representing the motion picture industry characterized the screen as the greatest medium in the world for conveying public information to the masses; how President Wilson called upon the motion picture industry to introduce into Italy, France, Russia, Scandinavia and the Oriental countries "something that he could not do through the newspapers. I can quote him," declared Mr. Brady, "as saying that the screen speaks the universal language."

He called attention to the use of the screen by the Four Minute Men of America, to their aid in floating the several Liberty Loans and the service rendered the Red Cross.

"We do not stand here expecting to be exempted from anything," declared Mr. Brady. "We do not want to do our bit—we want to do our chunk, but we want just a square deal."

"Are we taxing you too much in your opinion?" inquired Congressman Rainey, a member of the committee. "We want to know what you think about it. You have told us about the importance of the screen; we agree with you on that proposition. You have not told us why it should not be taxed."

"We want to be taxed," replied Mr. Brady, and later, after another interruption by Congressman Rainey, he said, "We ask that the admission tax should not be raised."

Took Theaters Four Months to Recover from Tax.

Mr. Brady then explained how the tax works out. "We are willing that you should tax the five-cent theater," he said, "to make it even. But as to the 10 per cent tax it took us four months to partially recover from that tax in the larger cities. In the smaller cities, and in some of the semi-large cities they have not recovered from that. We figure that the business was hurt 25 per cent, save in exceptional cases. Of course, if you go to New York and take the larger motion picture theaters it is true that they have not been hurt so much. But those theaters and others like them constitute a very small part of the motion picture business."

Chairman Claude Kitchin, of the Ways and Means Committee, pointed out to Mr. Brady that in May the attendance at the motion picture theaters was a great deal larger than in May, 1917—"there has been a large increase and the Government books will show it." He gave as a reason for the smaller attendance last winter the fact that it was one of the coldest and most rigorus we have ever had. In Washington the bad weather lasted from January 1 to April 1. Mr. Brady stated that this was not true of all cities—the west did not suffer as much as the east, and Congressman Treadway suggested that another cause for the small attendance last winter was the fact that the Fuel Administrator closed the theaters on certain days.

Mr. Brady told Chairman Kitchin that he thought the industry has recovered from the effects of the imposition of the 10 per cent tax, but added: "We do believe you are going to put a dent in us, and that you are going to reduce by an enormous amount the money that you are getting now in taxes if that tax is increased."

Only a Few Houses Increased Admissions.

In reply to an inquiry from Chairman Kitchin, Mr. Brady declared only a very small percentage of theaters increased their admission fee from 10 to 15 cents after the present tax went into effect. "We very much resented that," he declared, "and we would be very glad if this committee would prevent that being done. We believe that nobody should be permitted in this country to put on a price which includes the tax. We think the tax should be plus the price, so that there would be no hanky-panky business about it. Such a man is taking advantage of the legislation in order to beat his neighbor, who has lived up to the letter of the law, and to get an extra three cents."

Some surprising testimony followed. Congressman J. Hampton Moore, of Pennsylvania, stated that the Treasury Department estimates that the receipts from admission taxes for 1918, based on collections already made, will be $28,823,000, and it figures there should be collected during 1919 $54,800,000. That would double the tax on admissions, he said. Mr. Brady declared that the Government would not get one-half of that amount, for most of the theaters would be put out of business. He estimated that 40 per cent of the houses would be knocked out.

Congressman Admits Houses Have Been Closed.

Loew's Columbia Theater, in Washington, was referred to in the course of the discussion, Mr. Moore stating that this house charges 25 cents admission and 3 cents additional for the tax. "There isn't any doubt to an observer," he said, "that that place has been doing an extraordinary business." He gave Mr. Brady an opportunity to state that this was an unusual case and then, continuing, observed: "On the other hand I will admit that if you take a car here, when you can get a seat, in Washington, and will go to the outskirts you will find several places that have closed the doors and the windows are barred and they have moved away because of no business. Now, I say, that there are two cases in point, one which sustains your contention. We do not want to put anybody out of business, and you contend that some places were put out of business by this law because of the tax, but, on the other hand, some of the other places are doing more business."

Mr. Brady suggested that the Columbia Theater makes $75,000 a year and that it will pay a large tax under the excess profits provisions of the law. He wanted all the taxes based on earnings. He was told this same thing is advocated by all who are hit by other taxes.

The witness admitted on questioning that Congress is justified in levying the greatest tax that can be got out of any industry. In closing, he asked that provision be made in the law exempting soldiers and sailors in uniform from the payment of the tax.

P. A. Powers, of the Universal, was the next witness. He protested against the footage tax, explaining to the members of the committee how it requires 45,000 feet or more of negative to get 5,000 feet of accepted film. With the tax of one-fourth cent per foot on the former and an additional one-half cent a foot on the latter, the cost to the producer to get out a single 5,000 feet is $212.50. The cost, he declared, is practically nine-tenths of a cent per foot in making the picture.

In getting down to the financial end of the problem, Mr. Powers said the Universal company produces and publishes weekly a great number of news articles, news reels, magazine reels, educational film, etc., from which there is very small return. Educational films do not bring in anything in the way of profits; news reels bring in a very small return. In fact, he said, since the war started the returns on the news reels has been wiped out, and since this tax was put on the company has made no profit on the news reels. The life of a news reel is practically 25 days.

Government Under No Expense on Propaganda Films.

Mr. Powers told of the work being done by the film manufacturers in the production of patriotic films—without expense to the Government. "The Government does not bear any expense of any propaganda pictures which the industry releases. We spend nine-tenths of a cent a foot on every foot of film that is released. In addition to this we have been furnishing films to cantonments, to the Navy, and to the various war departments, base hospitals, with practically no cost except shipping and handling."

Mr. Powers got in a discussion with Chairman Kitchin concerning the British business, on which there is a great deal heavier tax. He said that the British taxes had so hurt the business there that fully 75 per cent of the productions used in Great Britain are made in this country. The British tax is five pence on negatives. This led to the following significant statement:

"I will say for your information, Mr. Brady," continued Chairman Kitchin, "that the industry could stand more tax; not only that industry but other industries. I am certain that if the committee were convinced that it would destroy any industry it would not impose more tax. And we asked you gentlemen about this, and you answered very pertinently."

Friend Explains Method of Issuing War Films.

Mr. Powers was followed by Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "Mr. Chairman," said Mr. Friend, "before I speak of the tax matter, I should like to say a word about the Creel matter that Mr. Powers went into and tell you some things that Mr. Powers did not know, which I think justifies the monopolistic method of distribution which Mr. Creel and his committee have adopted. I understand that the British and Italian war pictures are privately controlled and distributed in the United States. The man who controls them and distributes them wanted and insisted on a deal with the American distributing company that these pictures that he should distribute would give him the largest possible profit. The French war pictures are absolutely uncontrolled, and are open now to anybody who pays, I believe, $1 a foot, and that goes to a French fund of some kind for charitable purposes or war purposes, and to-day these French pictures are not handled by any one distributer. As to the American pictures, Mr. Creel's idea was that they should be distributed by any dealer who would exhibit them and give back the cost of them. But his thought was, I believe, that as the British pictures and the Italian pictures were monopolized, that the dealer should also have the privilege of adding to them the American pictures, as he could use the French pictures and the British and Italian pictures, because, obviously, the American pictures would be in very great demand. Therefore Mr. Creel had the choice of getting back nothing or of joining with the monopoly and letting the privilege of exhibiting the pictures to the highest bidder, and so I believe that was his idea. Mr. Creel is doing what the men in the motion picture business did not want to see him do, but it seems he had little choice unless he should come back to Congress and get still more money.

"I want to say a word about the footage tax. As Mr. Powers has made clear to you, this is like taxing our container, it is like taxing the wrapping paper in which the packages are wrapped which you buy and take from the store. We are subject to a double tax, and we are the only industry that is subject to a double tax, because there is no consumer of our product. The picture, that is, the positive, is run or printed, and it will go down to A, B, C, and D, until there is no longer any demand for that picture; each exhibitor pays a certain rental price; that rental price is fixed according to the value of the picture, the setting of the picture, and the age of the picture. Obviously, we do not get as much for an old picture as we do for a new and popular one; you do not pay as much for a loaf of stale bread as you do for a loaf of fresh bread. The only person who is akin to the consumer is the man who pays when he goes in to see the picture, but in addition he also pays this footage tax, because it was conceived to be a tax that could be passed on to the consumer."

Congressman Moore.—That is the reason I do not quite understand the argument that your's is the only business that is taxed twice. How do you make that out?

Mr. Friend.—The ultimate consumer, assuming that he goes in to see the picture; that is, the man who goes in to look at the picture, he is the ultimate consumer as nearly as we can—

Congressman Moore.—The exhibitor passes the tax along, and he pays it?

Mr. Friend.—Yes; he pays the tax. He pays the admission tax, and also the tax on the reel. It comes out that the exhibitor pays $1.05 a day to the producer, and nobody has been hurt, but he can't pass that $1.05 on.

Congressman Moore.—In order to be fair—I am very much interested in your argument—but might you not, with equal propriety, argue that an automobile manufacturer is taxed twice or three times; on the steel in his machine, on the leather in his machine, on the wood, and so on along the same line?

Mr. Friend.—You could say that; yes, Mr. Moore, except that in each instance he pays the tax that the producer of the commodity which he uses in his product first pays; that is, he passes it on to him.

Congressman Moore.—It all comes back in the increased price of the car?

Mr. Friend.—Exactly; it comes out of the ultimate consumer, and is paid by the people who buy the product.

A Third of the Theaters Have Absorbed Tax.

Mr. Friend observed that the reason for the closing up of a number of theaters "is the fact that people want better entertainment in better places, and the better theaters are surviving and the poorer theaters are going out of business. At the same time the tax had some effect. We must realize that out of 14,000 motion picture theaters in the United States a few are unimportant; there are some that could not house, for instance, 'The Hearts of the World.' Many of these outlying theaters—neighborhood theaters, we call them—have been unable to compel their patrons to pay the tax. Thirty per cent of the motion picture theaters have been compelled to absorb the tax themselves, and many of them could not do that because their profit was not 20 per cent of the gross receipts, and it had to be 20 per cent of the gross receipts in order to meet this tax, and I wanted you gentlemen to know that fact when you come to consider amendments to this bill. The admissions tax as it exists today, I think, will result in a steadily increasing income to the Government because the bigger and better theaters surviving will get a better patronage, and the business will net more in dollars and cents."

He was asked by Congressman Sterling what he thought of the following: "Repeal the tax on the film altogether and have an admission tax graduated on the amount paid for the admission, 1 cent on a 5-cent admission; 2 cents on a 10-cent admission; 3 cents on a 15-cent admission; and so on up, with 20 cents on a dollar admission."

Mr. Friend thought the scheme would be excellent except on prices between 20 cents and $1.

Goodman Talks of Excess Profits Law.

Maurice Goodman took up the provision of the excess profits law in regard to nominal capital and invested capital. Speaking for all classes of theaters, he said:

Soon after the passage of the excess-profits tax law this association wrote the Treasury Department, Commissioner Roper, suggesting that they should not be compelled to pay excess profits on their business, and setting forth in detail the nature of its business. In other words, it was explained in detail that the vaudeville managers operate their theaters simply through a leasing of the theaters, not owning the ground on which their theaters stand in a great majority of cases, the theaters were held only on leases. Therefore, so far as the place to do business was concerned, it was an intangible asset; that the important thing in a vaudeville theater was a booking contract and an arrangement for the producing of the shows. Now, just what is the show business? The vaudeville managers do not produce anything; they contract with actors and sometimes with singers and others whose voices or whose performances are an attraction. The only necessity for a cash deposit or capital invested is for a small fund to pay for licenses and for advertising and for light and heat and other expenses incidental to the operation of the theater. The main or primary thing from which profits are derived in vaudeville theaters and in moving picture theaters, so far as the manager and operator of the theater is concerned, is the service or personality and good will of the manager and his leasehold, and his ability to use what he gets on his booking contract.

Inasmuch as capital means nothing in arriving at profit, eliminate capital and fix a definite tax, whatever that tax may be, but fix it upon the amount that we and our neighbor in the same business will have to pay in proportion. The man who runs a business across the street from ours, if he is making $25,000 and we are making $50,000, let him pay half as much as we have to pay. The other suggested remedy is that a provision be made that if you want to fix the capital provide for the determination of the value of these intangibles. Have a board or a commission, and let them decide the value. But there is a great objection to that, and that is this objection: It is so difficult to get a standard of comparison. Section 201 provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall, in certain cases, fix the value of property for taxable purposes.

Now, in the show business you cannot take one business as the standard for another, and the law provides that in the fixing of these values the Treasury Department shall take standard representative values. There are so many conditions that enter into what may be the value of a show business, as I have said before, the personality of the manager and then again the location of the house and the size of the house, and all those things must be taken into consideration; and the nature of the show he puts on and all these things. My second objection deals with this: That it would be most difficult to establish any standard for comparison, and I think the first suggestion I made will work out to the interest of the Government and will be a great deal more satisfactory to the show business, because we are not here to avoid any taxes or to get any exceptions or to dodge any issues. We are here to get the same deal that other industries get, but we are placed in a class with other industries when we are not doing business on any such basis as the other industries are doing.

CHILDS TO GET TESTIMONIAL FROM FRIENDS.

John E. Childs, formerly a salesman for World Pictures working out of the Buffalo branch office, will never have any cause to complain about the people at home not remembering him with letters. As a testimonial to Mr. Childs and the service he gave them, the exhibitors in his territory have all written him letters and these letters have been gathered into a bound volume by the Buffalo office. This volume will be forwarded to Mr. Childs, when more letters from New York friends and well-wishers are added, and the initial volume, it is expected, with be followed by others. The testimonial is undoubtedly one of the most unique tokens of esteem ever accorded a film salesman.

Mr. Childs is a sergeant in Company E, 308th Regiment, American Expeditionary Force, and is in France.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Black Appeals to Rembusch

Speaking for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League He Urges the A. E. A. to Meet at Boston and Settle Differences.

ANSWERING the recent letters of Frank J. Rembusch, secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association, on the subject of amalgamation, A. S. Black, of Rockland, Me., has written to Mr. Rembusch, urging that the members of the A. E. A. hold their convention at Boston during the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and that an effort to square the differences existing between the two organizations be then made. Mr. Black's letter follows:

Mr. Frank J. Rembusch, 524 Longacre Building, New York City.

My Dear Rembusch: I just wired you night letter to New York, where I understand you will be Wednesday, with copy sent to Shelbyville, Ind. In the telegram I have appealed to the Americanism of every member of your association, and I believe that I will be backed by the Americanism of every member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in making this appeal. In doing this I shall ignore to a large extent the vicious attacks you have recently made in the trade papers in referring to things of the past, simply stating that I do not agree with these methods; believing in majority rule and that the ills, of which I admit there are some in our league, should be cured within and not by splits without. It is, at least, a two-sided proposition which, under existing national conditions, should be entirely forgotten and laid one side as a patriotic duty if nothing more.

The writer knew there would be an article on amalgamation in the June 15 issue of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, but had no idea of what that article would contain, so that you are wrong in inferring that I was a party thereto. As stated to you recently in New York the writer had several conferences with Mr. Pettijohn and other members of the amalgamation committee in New York during the past few months in an endeavor to get together. It is very regrettable that you did not receive my letter of May 21 inclosing copy of letter written Mr. Pettijohn upon this subject. It is also regrettable that the resolution passed by the amalgamation committee at its meeting at the Hotel Astor last month that was addressed to King Perry, secretary of the Michigan branch of the A. E. A., and which was to be presented to their meeting, and which, at the request of your members, was withheld from the trade papers, was not presented to the Detroit meeting as agreed (said resolution being signed by Messrs. Joseph Hopp, of Chicago; Louis Blumenthal, of New Jersey; C. C. Pettijohn, of Indianapolis, on behalf of L. M. Mosher, of Buffalo, and himself, and agreed to by Lewis Frank, of Chicago, who was to present same at said meeting) on account of all of the time being consumed with the affairs of the Affiliated Producers and Distributors proposition, no time being left or given to a proposition on amalgamation.

I claimed to you in New York, and claim now, that selfish motives in the various booking propositions and otherwise have had much to do with preventing the amalgamation of the two associations. Much good has come from the other committees that were suggested by the resolution committee that met in my room in Washington last December, and the fact that we have worked harmoniously on national legislation is conclusive proof, to me at least, that by fair play and honest treatment full benefits of complete amalgamation can be obtained and obtained now at the time of all times when most needed by our country.

While I have very high respect for Mr. Pettijohn, I do somewhat blame him for not keeping you closely informed as to what took place in the amalgamation committee affairs as was understood, and I am very sure that had you so understood you would not have made the erroneous statements that appeared in your published articles in the Motion Picture News of June 8 and the Motion Picture World of June 15.

The way you suggest of putting facts in writing so as to show good faith is neither practical nor feasible to the writer. There is only one practical way, and that is to hold both conventions in Boston, appoint committees of fair-minded men from both associations that have only the best interests of the country and the exhibitors at large, and with the amalgamation committee work out a plan that is fair to all. Forget the past entirely and show the United States that its motion picure exhibitors have risen to the occasion and as one grand organization are to become the most important factor in existence toward winning this war. We cannot afford delays and meeting after meeting. Let's get together next month and settle things as they should be settled, and if your members are as honest and have the best interests of this country at heart as I believe you have and as I believe the members of our league have likewise there will only be one result, and that is success.

Again, I appeal to your Americanism and nothing else. Will you answer "Yes"? Sincerely yours,

A. S. BLACK.

Black's Telegram to Rembusch.

Rockland, Me., June 18, 1918.

Frank J. Rembusch, Secretary American Exhibitors Association, 524 Longacre Building, New York City:

Your letter June 15 received. I consider method suggested of reducing facts to writing by committees and your question of good faith under existing national conditions a mere subterfuge for unnecessary delay in getting both associations amalgamated. As member of national amalgamation committee and also member of executive committee of Motion Picture exhibitors' League, I now appeal to the Americanism of yourself and every member of the A. E. A. to call convention of your body in Boston on July 13, where committees from both organizations can be appointed to meet with the duly appointed national amalgamation committee and come forth with one united exhibitors' organization in support of the President of the United States. Fair play is absolutely guaranteed. Let us forget past mistakes by both factions and disregard absolutely selfish motives of co-operative booking companies and other interests and meet with one thought in mind and that of our country in its hour of need. Am writing open letter today embodying this telegram. ALFRED S. BLACK.

Michigan Association Elects Officers

At Annual Meeting June 13 Chooses Col. Butterfield President and King Perry Secretary.

THE annual meeting of the American Exhibitors Association, Michigan branch, was held at the Hotel Tuller, June 13, with the attendance just fair. It was a quality crowd—but not quantity. The meeting was interesting and lively, many subjects of current importance being discussed. The new officers elected were as follows:

Col. W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek, president; J. S. Rittfer, Detroit, first vice-president; John Cutler, Detroit, second vice-president; King Perry, Detroit, secretary; John Brennan, Detroit, treasurer.

In addition an executive board was elected, which comprises the officers and W. F. Phillips, of the Majestic-Colonial theater, Jackson, and Mr. Beecher, of the Beecher chain of houses in Grand Rapids.

It was decided to discontinue the weekly meetings, especially during the summer months. All the real business of the organization will be taken care of by the executive board. The association will meet the first Thursday in June and December, making two meetings each year. Col. W. S. Butterfield, the new president, operates the chain of Butterfield theaters in eight towns in Michigan. He has an office in the City Bank building, Battle Creek, and he takes this means of notifying exhibitors that he will be pleased to have them forward to him direct all complaints, suggestions or criticisms.

National Association Directors Meet

Decide as an Organization to Take No Part in Boston Exposition—Will Hold Annual Convention in the Hub.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held at the offices of the association, Times Building, on Wednesday evening, June 19. The following members of the board were in attendance: William A. Brady, presiding; Samuel Goldfish, Lee A. Ochs, Alfred S. Black, J. H. O'Donnell, Louis F. Blumenthal, Louis L. Levine, Donald J. Bell, J. E. Brulatour, J. H. Hallberg, W. C. Smith, Joseph F. Coufal, J. A. Berst, Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, Richard A. Rowland, W. R. Sheehan, Paul Gulick, George Irving, Joseph F. Lee, Thomas G. Wiley, Fred J. Beecroft, William A. Johnston and Frederick H. Elliott. Others present were J. D. Williams, First National Exhibitors' Circuit; David P. Howells, William Wright of Kalem, Frank J. Marion, president of Kalem; James Clark and Attorney Goldsmith.

President Brady stated that the meeting had been called for the purpose of receiving a report from the Motion Picture Exposition Company as to the advisability of holding the Motion Picture Exposition scheduled for Boston, July 13-20. It was the consensus of opinion of the officials of the film companies who were in attendance that the exposition should be abandoned, and after a lengthy discussion a motion was adopted on a vote of 11 to 8 that the exposition should be abandoned in so far as the active support of the N. A. M. P. I. and Motion Picture Exposition Company is concerned.

J. A. Berst was appointed a committee of one to investigate the report on the relationship of the National Association in the matter pertaining to the Boston Motion Picture Exposition.

It was announced that the executive committee, at a meeting held during the preceding week, had decided to hold the second annual meeting of the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry at the Copley Plaza hotel in Boston on Friday, July 19, at 11 A. M. The board indorsed the action of the executive committee with the understanding that the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America would be held in Boston at that time.

Frank J. Marion, who was recommended by the National Association as the representative in France, Spain and Italy for the Committee on Public Information, addressed the members of the board in regard to his activities and related many interesting experiences during the past few months in these countries. Mr. Marion also gave suggestions to the producers and distributors in regard to the showing of their pictures abroad, and he was given a rising vote of thanks for his instructive and interesting address.

Decline to Co-operate with Other Amusement Interests.

A memorandum of a conference held at the office of Adolph Zukor on June 17 was submitted suggesting ways and means for cooperation between the theatrical, burlesque and vaudeville interests, and after consideration it was unanimously voted that it was not deemed advisable at this time to cooperate with the other interests referred to upon legislative matters. The report was thereupon rejected.

The banquet, which was scheduled to be held under the auspices of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, was brought up for discussion and a committee of three, consisting of Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers and Paul Gulick, was appointed to confer with the officers and committee of the Advertisers' Association in regard to the function.

The question of political indorsement was considered, resulting in the appointment of a political committee, without power to act before reporting to the board of directors its suggestions or recommendations. The committee named consists of P. A. Powers, chairman; Louis L. Levine, Arthur S. Friend, Lee A. Ochs and J. E. Brulatour.

A report presented by Theodore Mitchel, secretary of the Censorship Committee, requesting support for the candidacy of Congressman Harrison of Mississippi, who is in the field as a candidate for Senator from Mississippi, was approved and instructions given to have the distributors through their exchanges cooperate in every way possible. Notice is also to be given to President E. M. Clarke of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Mississippi asking him to present the matter to his organization with a request to support Representative Harrison's campaign for the United States Senatorship.

Supply and Equipment Division Nominates.

At the meeting of the Supply and Equipment Division, held on the preceding day, presided over by Chairman J. E. Brulatour, the following nominations were made for representation on the National Association Board: J. E. Brulatour, Donald J. Bell, J. B. Hallberg, Walter J. Moore, W. C. Smith, E. M. Porter and Joseph F. Coufal.

The new board of seven to represent this division in the National Board is the same with the exception of E. M. Porter of the Precision Machine Company, who takes the place of N. C. Cotablish of the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, who has found it impossible to attend the meetings.

Two other divisions of the National Association are to hold annual meetings during the coming week, the Producers' Division on a call to be issued by Chairman Adolph Zukor and the General Division, of which John C. Flinn is chairman.

Distributors Nominate Directors in N. A. M. P. I.

At the meeting of the Distributors' Division, held on Thursday afternoon, presided over by Chairman Walter W. Irwin, the following nominations were made for representation on the Board of Directors of the National Association: Walter W. Irwin, W. R. Sheehan, Arthur S. Friend, R. A. Rowland, P. A. Powers, Ricord Gradwell and Paul Brunet.

This board of seven directors comprises the same names as the present board, with the exception of Paul Brunet, who succeeds J. A. Berst.

Boston Exposition Will Be Held

Exhibitors' League Will Disregard Action of National Association and Will Go Ahead on Original Plans.

REGARDLESS of the action of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exposition Company in withdrawing from actual participation in the trade exposition to be held at Boston, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has decided to go ahead on its own hook. Therefore the exposition will be held as scheduled. The management declares that it has already secured sufficient encouragement to insure a good trade display and that it expects to close enough contracts within the next two weeks to insure success.

There is nothing in the action of the N. A. M. P. I. that binds any member of the trade to stay away from Boston, so it is more than likely a great number will be there in some form of representation. New England exhibitors will attend almost to a man. They are all good fellows and worth while meeting. The Moving Picture World has taken space and will be among those present.

Advertising Men Postpone Dinner

New Date Is Set for July 22 and Plans Are Maturing to Enlarge Scope of Affair.

At a meeting held Friday afternoon, June 21, at the Hotel Astor consisting of committees from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industury and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, it was agreed to postpone the annual dinner of the latter scheduled for Wednesday evening, at Delmonico's, until July 22.

This decision came about as a result of the desire of the National Association to co-operate with the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in making this an occasion of great national importance. Many celebrities including various members of the Administration at Washington have already accepted an invitation to be present, and with the additional time allowed, the project, together with the hearty cooperation of the National motion picture body, the affair easily should prove the greatest event of the motion picture industry since its inception, particularly in view of the fact that it comes at a most psychological time.

The management of the affair, which was conceived by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, will be in the hands of a representative committee of all branches of the industry.

Although further details than the date of the dinner are not available as yet, it is promised that this will mark the most important gathering the film enterprise has yet seen.

Among the guests will be former Ambassador James W. Gerard, Edward N. Hurley, Charles M. Schwab, Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, George Creel, Frank Wilson, C. F. Foster, Morgan Shuster and others. In addition several persons of the Administration not heretofore announced will be on hand.

At the meeting Friday afternoon the following persons were present: J. E. Brulatour, Arthur S. Friend, L. Z. Levine, Lee A. Ochs, Paul Cromelin, William Sherrill, J. A. Berst, Gabriel Hess. P. A. Powers, Louis Blumenthal and F. H. Elliott, of the National Association, and Arthur James, John C. Flinn, P. A. Parsons, Paul Gulick and C. W. Barrell, of the Associated Advertisers.

Affiliated Directors Hold Sessions

For Three Days Distributors' Corporation Considers Problems of New Organization—Elect Cohen Chairman.

AFTER three days of the most productive business sessions the national board of directors of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, which convened at the offices of that organization in New York on Wednesday, June 19, adjourned Friday, having put in motion the machinery for a new order in the film industry which the Affiliated members declare will prove revolutionary.

That the co-operative booking plan of the Affiliated has attracted the support of not only a large body of exhibitors, but of representative exhibitors in each section of the country, was clearly evidenced by the standing of the national directors sent by the various exhibitors' booking associations connected with the Affiliated to the meeting.

The directors present at the meeting were R. D. Craver and H. B. Varner, representing Maryland, District of Columbia, Delaware, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Eastern Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Florida; Morris Spiers, representing Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; Fred J. Herrington, representing Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Sydney S. Cohen and John Manheimer, representing Greater New York; Alfred Hyman, representing Upper and Western New York; Sam J. Bullock, representing Northern Ohio; John W. Weinig, representing Southern Ohio and Eastern Kentucky; Frank J. Rembusch, representing Indiana and Western Kentucky; Charles H. Seaman, representing Michigan; Louis Frank and Joseph Hopp, representing Illinois; Byron Parks and Glenn Harper, representing Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona, Utah, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico.

In addition to the foregoing, Henry J. Lustig, of Cleveland, president of the Exhibitors' Booking Association of Northern Ohio; Henry A. Brink and William J. Clark, of Grand Rapids, attended the meeting.

In the earnestness with which the directors got down to business at the opening session, which was presided over by Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Affiliated, on Wednesday morning it was apparent that the meeting would set a new precedent in exhibitor gatherings. Despite the most arduous analysis of contracts and agreements which occupied the first two days the earnest and deliberative character of the sessions was maintained at equally high efficiency throughout the three days.

Equally noteworthy and significant of the determination upon the part of the exhibitors present to perfect an exhibitors' business body which would be lasting and constructive in the relief it offered exhibitors for existing evils was the spirit of co-operation manifested throughout the meeting.

Both the terms of the contracts existing between the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation and the booking units associated with it, as well as the trust agreements whereby the funds of the exhibitors are protected under the control of each exhibitor unit in their own territory, were worked out with thoroughness and a desire on the part of every one to see to it that the interests of all were fully preserved.

This "give-and-take" attitude was also manifested to a remarkable degree in the fixing of the percentages of each of the territories. This important matter, which has been the source of so much dissension at other gatherings of exhibitors and distributors, was disposed of with dispatch and complete satisfaction on all sides.

Following the unanimous acceptance of the various agreements between the Affiliated and the units comprising it permanent officers of the National Board of Directors were chosen. All the officers were elected unanimously.

Those chosen are as follows: Chairman, Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State and of the Exhibitors' Booking Association of Greater New York; first vice-chairman, Sam Bullock, of Cleveland; second vice-chairman, Glenn Harper, of Los Angeles, secretary of the Theater Owners' Association of California; secretary, Frank Rembusch, of Indianapolis, national secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association.

Friday's session of the meeting was devoted to the consideration of proposals from prominent producers of New York and Los Angeles to produce pictures for distribution under the Affiliated plan. From the statements of these producers and reports of Mr. Cohen and Mr. Harper it was established that the stars are following the co-operative booking movement as established by the Affiliated, and that the organization, once going at full force, will have a strong claim on the interest of players.

A number of pictures were viewed by the directors in the evenings during the meeting, and several productions are under consideration as initial releases. That by September 1 the Affiliated will be operating on a regular schedule of releases seems probable by the number of producers' applications filed with it.

The final afternoon's session of the directors' meeting was devoted to informal talks by Chairman Cohen, Mr. Pettijohn and William J. Clark, treasurer of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation.

Abe Warner to "Okeh" Crusader Contracts

Volunteers Services to Committee on Public Information, and Will Aid in Unraveling Tangles.

AMONG the film men of wide experience and high standing in the industry who have volunteered their services to the Committee on Public Information is Abe Warner, of Warner Brothers, who has agreed to supervise and "Okeh" all contracts in connection with the distribution of "Pershing's Crusaders."

Mr. Warner, who is acting in co-operation with J. A. Berst, manager of distribution for the Committee on Public Information, will continue to make his headquarters with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, 6 West Forty-eighth street. His services in this connection were solicited because of his signal success in handling the bookings for Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany."

Mr. Warner is personally known to hundreds of the leading exhibitors in the United States and has an accurate knowledge of present conditions in all territory that remains unsold. His judgment will be followed in deciding upon prices and the adjustment of the problems that arise in places where "Pershing's Crusaders" is to be shown under the auspices of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

As a member of the firm of Warner Brothers Abe Warner has an interest in the Gerard picture, and his various friends in the production and distribution field wish him well in his new work.

Officers and Directors of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation.

Chicago News Letter

Charges Filed Against Funkhouser

Include Forty-one Specific Counts, of Which Two Only Refer to Moving Pictures—Trial Set for June 24.

ACTING Chief of Police Alcock filed nine charges, embodying forty-one specific counts, with the Civil Service Commission against Second Police Deputy Funkhouser, Saturday, June 15. Acting Chief Alcock requested that the trial be set for Monday, June 24, to give Major Funkhouser time to prepare his defense, instead of five days from the time of filing which the ordinance specifies. Following are the charges filed against the second deputy:

Conduct unbecoming a police officer or employe of the police department; neglect of duty; inattention to duty; incapacity or inefficiency in the service; disobedience of orders; insubordination or disrespect toward superior officer; making a false official report; neglect to report any member known to be guilty of violation of any rule, regulation or order issued for the guidance of the department, and violation of any order or rule of superior authority, written or verbal.

Of the forty-one counts against the major, only thirty-six and thirty-seven refer to moving pictures, and condensed they read as follows:

"In that the second deputy failed and neglected to have kept an accurate record of complaints and violations of the ordinances relating to the regulation of moving pictures, or the number of suits filed in such violations and disposition of same, and failed to take proper and prompt steps to bring proceedings against violators of provisions of ordinances regarding moving pictures."

After filing the charges Chief of Police Alcock said: "I will prove every one of them by documentary evidence or by witnesses or by both. I am ready to prosecute the charges. They speak for themselves.

"That Major Funkhouser had men of his office shadow Chief of Police Herman F. Schuettler and prominent people of Chicago, including a number of prominent women, some of national repute, we have absolute proof. A large appropriation of money was spent by his office and there was not even a report of its uses made, let along a showing of results of his expenditures. Some of the men in his office said that they never saw such a rotten system as that upon which the office affairs were conducted."

Second Deputy Funkhouser has denied generally all the charges made against him, more specifically that concerning the shadowing of Chief Schuettler and citizens of good moral standing.

"I will file an answer to the charges just as soon as I have had an opportunity to digest them and will prepare a reply through my attorney, John S. Miller," the second deputy has given out. "I will be ready for trial in a short time and will meet this attack with a powerful defense."

The second deputy has also stated that he will ask for a continuance of a week or ten days, when the case is called June 24, for the purpose of obtaining evidence for his defense. In the absence of his attorney, who is at present out of the city, Major Funkhouser is abstaining from any controversy with Acting Chief Alcock.

The Passing of John Hardin

His Numerous Friends Will Regretfully Learn of His Death at Charleston, S. C., in March Last.

ABOUT six weeks ago a rumor made the rounds that John Hardin, the well-known and popular exchange manager, had died. Numerous inquiries failed to reveal any reliable information, until Douglas Bergh, personal traveling representative for George Kleine, who is on the road most of the time, came into the city after one of his business trips. He informed me that he had heard the news, but could give no definite particulars. He referred me to John T. Ezell, manager of the Atlanta office of Foursquare pictures, and it is due to the courtesy of this gentleman that I am able to give details of the death of my old friend "Jack."

Mr. Ezell wrote J. J. Miller, of the Dixieland theater, Charleston, S. C., concerning the matter and forwarded to me Mr. Miller's reply, which bears the date of June 10. The letterhead of the Dixieland theater shows that Miller & Hardin were proprietors of that house, and Mr. Miller's letter, which follows, gives an account of Jack's death:

"In reply to your letter of June 8 regarding the death of my friend and partner (for he was both), Jack Hardin, I am sorry to say that he died March 26. He was first taken sick with tonsilitis, and was ailing off and on for more than a month. In fact, he lay up for five weeks and never thoroughly recovered.

"When he came out his legs went back on him, and he was forced to walk with a stick. He fought his illness bravely. He had a relapse after about three weeks and was taken home in an automobile one night from the show. He said then he thought he would never come out again. He died eight or ten days after.

"He was conscious up to five minutes of his death, and died very happy. He smiled and held out his hand to the writer while propped up in bed.

"While I only knew Mr. Hardin a year and a half, I want to say I have never been associated with a better fellow in my life. The real cause of his death was due to poison from his throat, which infected his entire system."

Mr. Hardin was manager of the Chicago office of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., from 1909 to 1913. He held a similar position with Pathe Eclectic for about a year, in 1914. He was afterward branch manager in Dallas, and then in Kansas City, Mo., for George Kleine, holding these positions for over a year.

His health being somewhat impaired at this time, he spent about a year with his family on his pecan grove in Mississippi, near Biloxi. Again desirous of getting back into his old business, he became connected with Mutual's Atlanta office, where he remained for some time, and shortly afterward was associated with Mr. Miller in the Dixieland.

Among his Chicago friends and associates Jack Hardin was one of the most likable of men—loyal and steadfast. Of a sunny disposition and gifted with a droll sense of humor, he was ever a most welcome companion to all who knew him. As a raconteur he had few equals, and no festive occasion was complete without him.

Who among those present can forget Jack in the role of referee at the famous "badger fight," given by Colonel William N. Selig in his old city offices at 20 East Randolph street, and who among the guests will fail to recall his gifts as a mirth-raiser at the famous stag dinner given by George Kleine at his home on Hampden Court!

Ah me! The past so far as Jack is concerned is filled with the joy of life, though it is sorely dimmed now by sadness at his death.

And how resignedly and bravely did he meet death! Mr. Miller writes that "he smiled and held out his hand," just before unconsciousness seized him. Even Death could not dim the sunshine of his soul.

Hats off all in memory of Jack!

Select Pictures Corporation in Convention

Branch Managers of Middle West, Pacific Coast and South Confer with Officials on Plans for Coming Year.

A CONVENTION of the officials of Select Pictures Corporation and the branch managers of the Middle West, Pacific Coast and the South (Dallas) was held in the West Room, Hotel Sherman, June 19 and 20. Lewis J. Selznick, president; A. S. Kane, general manager; J. J. Rotchford, assistant general manager, and J. S. Woody, field manager, were present to greet the visiting branch managers.

During an interview with General Manager Kane, it developed that the convention was a real get-together meeting for officials and the exchange men present, at which views and opinions were exchanged and considered in approved democratic fashion.

President Selznick delivered the opening address on Wednesday. He expressed great gratification over the work accomplishd during the year, and highly complimented the branch managers on the intelligent and forceful handling of their business.

He announced that Anna Case, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, had been signed to appear in a coming special feature, the work on which would begin in a few days. He also discussed plans for adding to the number of stars in the Select forces and invited suggestions and opinions from the men close to the exhibitors, with the result that valuable opinions from the branch managers present were considered and accepted regarding the desirability of securing certain artists.

The work of the convention was in charge of General Manager Kane, who was ably assisted by Assistant General Manager Rotchford and Field Manager Woody. The keynote of Mr. Kane's remarks and work was to establish closer relations between the home office in New York and the branch managers throughout the entire country. He advocated the adoption of new ideas in order to increase the efficiency of the sales methods already in vogue, and he demonstrated conclusively how these new ideas could not fail to increase Select sales. Free discussion of all suggestions concerning the improvement of existing methods was invited during the convention and practiced by all present.

On Thursday announcement was made of the names of the stars retained for the year beginning September 1 and of those recently engaged. Clara Kimball Young, Norma and Constance Talmadge and Alice Brady will appear in photoplays adapted from fine modern stories by prominent authors, during the coming year. Marion Davies, a clever young ingenue, is one of the new stars, whose first picture, "Cecelia of the Pink Roses," is now scoring a success in New York and Chicago.

It was shown that the selling plan of Select pictures for the coming year is so carefully systematized and stabilized that a certain number of releases can be positively offered at stated intervals, thus according exhibitors the advantage of an exact and definite control over their programs far in advance.

A pleasant feature of Thursday's proceedings was the arrival at the West Room of Miss Constance Talmadge, who had timed her stopover, on a trip from Los Angeles to New York, so as to appear before the convention. She made a ripping little speech, which was enthusiastically received by the boys.

But the convention was by no means all work. President Selznick entertained the visitors at dinner, in the College Inn, Wednesday evening, and "Friendly Enemies" at the Woods theater was viewed afterward. The latter treat was made possible by the efforts of San Bernard, a co-star of the play with Louis Mann, who contrived to secure four boxes, although the house had been sold out in advance. Nate Ascher, of the Ascher Brothers, was one of the theater party. The visitors were also entertained at luncheon, in the Terrace Garden, Hotel Morrison, on Wednesday, Aaron J. Jones being a guest. On Thursday evening the visitors formed theater parties and were entertained in other ways.

The branch managers present were: Sam E. Morris, Cleveland; A. M. Muller, Cincinnati; James O. Kent, Detroit; Fred C. Aiken and assistant, Ben W. Bedell, Chicago; J. C. Ragland, St. Louis; C. W. Taylor, Omaha; A. H. McLaughlin, Kansas City; H. A. Rathner, Minneapolis; C. C. Ezell, Dallas; H. L. Knappen, Denver; B. E. Loper, Los Angeles; H. H. Hicks, San Francisco, and H. B. Dobbs, Seattle.

President Selznick and General Manager Kane remained in the city until Saturday, June 22, when they returned to New York by the Twentieth Century.

Old Swindling Lottery Game Revived.

The American Investing Company, a concern with an office in the Boyce Building, this city, recently revived a swindling lottery game that was practiced in Chicago several years ago. The plan was the distribution of cards at picture theaters, so as to secure the signatures and addresses of patrons. Any patron whose name and address had been thus secured was called on later, at his or her home, by a representative of the concern. In each case the person called on was informed that he or she was the winner of a valuable lot in some adjacent State, the said lot having been raffled off at the theater on the night which this or that person had attended.

The lucky individual in each case was assured by the wily agent of the bunco game that all he or she had to do was to pay a certain sum for the transfer of the deed and an abstract of title to the lot in question.

It is believed that quite a number of victims were secured in this manner. Some of them squealed, with the result that the grand jury ordered detectives from the state attorney's office to raid the offices of the concern, seize its books and papers, and arrest those in charge. This was done and an inspection of the documents seized will be made by the grand jury. It is expected that indictments will follow.

Mutual's Publicity Department Goes to New York.

The publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation and also the Screen Telegram department of that organization will make headquarters in New York henceforth. Terry Ramsey, chief of publicity and editor of the Screen Telegram, with the members of his Chicago staff, are already in New York, the temporary headquarters being in Mutual's office at 1600 Broadway. Mr. Ramsey and his staff will most likely occupy permanent quarters on another floor of the same building.

This partial transfer of Mutual's forces from Chicago to New York may be the forerunner of the removal to that city of the general executive and the entire office forces now in Chicago.

Action on Maypole Ordinance Deferred.

No action was taken by the judiciary committee on the Maypole ordinance at the meeting held Tuesday, June 18. Action was deferred until the meeting which will be held June 25.

Charles F. A. Young at Camp Grant.

Charles F. A. Young, who wrote many interesting articles on projection several years ago for the Moving Picture World and who, since that time, has been operator in several Chicago theaters, was drafted for service about five weeks ago and left for Camp Grant at Rockford, Ill. I had a letter from him the other day which afforded very pleasant reading. With other interesting news was the statement that he was stenographer and clerk of his company (the 39th 161st Depot Brigade), and that he had been appointed corporal June 9. He is very humble in speaking of this honor, and his heart and mind are set on making good.

Mr. Young is thoroughly in accord with his work and is strong for the officers in the camp. About them he writes: "I just have to admire them for the work they can do. They work all day, drilling men, attending to details of their commands, etc., and then most of the night on reports and other 'paper work,' when occasion arises, or else studying in the officers' school. I am ready at any time to call to account any one who has an ill word for any United States Army officers." Good for Charley!

Edgar Hopp Goes to Washington.

Edgar Hopp, first class yeoman of the United States Navy, Great Lakes Training Station, Illinois, after eleven months' service there, will leave for Washington in the near future to work as cameraman and still photographer for the Bureau of Public Information. Edgar is the son of Joseph Hopp, president of Chicago Local, M. P. E. E. of A.

"Cleopatra" Closes at Colonial.

"Cleopatra" closed its engagement at the Colonial Sunday, June 23, after a satisfactory run of four weeks. The final week showed a marked daily increase in the attendance, as photoplay goers realized that the last days were on. J. R. Granger, Fox special representative with "Cleopatra," expressed himself as being gratified with the financial results of the showing, the total receipts for the four weeks having reached $35,000. The prices at the Colonial were 25 cents to $1. An orchestra of 25 pieces played the accompaniment.

Two weeks' showing at the Rose theater, on West Madison street, in the Loop, have been arranged, and the feature is also well booked throughout the city in leading theaters. It has also been booked for the week of Sunday, June 23, at the Grand Opera House, Rockford, Ill.

H. Tipton Steck with Universal.

H. Tipton Steck, for many years the efficient editor of Essanay's scenario department, has joined the Universal forces in Los Angeles. He has charge in Universal City of what is known as the reconstruction bureau, where poorly constructed scripts are transformed into serviceable photoplays.

National Directors of Affiliated Meet.

Joseph Hoop and Louis H. Frank, national directors of the Chicago unit of the Affiliated Distributing Corporation, left for New York Tuesday, June 18, to attend the first meeting of the national directors of that organization, which was held Wednesday, June 19, in the Longacre Building.

"Firefly of France" Big Chicago Success.

Wallace Reid in "The Firefly of France" broke the receipts' record of Paramount-Artcraft pictures at Orchestra Hall for the season, thus far, so Assistant Manager Voegli has informed me. These Orchestra Hall programs, which are now being arranged and directed solely by the management of the house, are proving very popular. The opening number on the screen last week was a Paramount-Burton Holmes travelogue, then a Paramount-Bray pictograph, a musical prelude to the feature picture by the fine orchestra immediately followed by "The Firefly of France," and this in turn by the Screen Telegram and a Max Sennett comedy.

The feature of next week's program will be "A Desert Wooing," a love story featuring Enid Bennett.

A Thrifty Picture Theater Owner.

Vincent Sazama, proprietor and manager of the Cornell Square theater, 1923 West Fifty-first street, this city, made a call at the Chicago office last week. The Cornell Square seats three hundred persons and offers programs which include Paramount, Mutual and Universal makes, seven or eight reels to each program. A daily change is made. Mr. Sazama informed me that he ran "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," Sunday, June 16, to extraordinary business. Five presentations were given during the day to full capacity, although the heat was oppressive. Admissions are 10 and 15 cents, not including the war tax. Mr. Sazama purchased this theater in September, 1917, and has raised the business from almost nothing to a good-paying proposition. He was formerly piano player of the house for three years, and by saving his money he accumulated sufficient capital, together with other savings, to purchase the house. He is very much pleased with his bargain.

Film Exporters of America Hold Meeting

Plan to Present Brief to Kitchin Committee Showing Handicap Created Through Present Footage Tax—Elect Permanent Officers Next Meeting.

THE third meeting of the Film Exporters of America was held at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, June 20, with practically all members present. With Temporary Chairman David P. Howells presiding the meeting adopted the membership charter, drafted by a committee composed of W. E. Shallenberger, temporary treasurer; Louis R. Thomas and Harry G. Kosch. This same committee was thereupon appointed to draw up a set of by-laws to be ready for the next meeting—at the Hotel Astor, Thursday-June 27, at 12:30 p. m.—at which time the permanent officers of the association will be elected.

The committee appointed to confer with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with regard to effecting an affiliation with that body reported that a joint meeting had not yet been held with the committee representing the National Association, as they had been unable to get together solely because of the many vital issues now confronting the association. Those on the committee for the F. E. of A. are David P. Howells, L. R. Thomas, Sidney Garrett, Joseph R. Miles and S. S. Krellberg. The N. A. M. P. I. committee consists of P. A. Powers, Gabriel Hess and Walter W. Irwin.

In the general discussion it was stated that at the present time approximately ten million dollars in foreign money and therefore new money was being brought into the country through exportation of film. Many interesting facts and points of view were brought out regarding the present difficulties and the future possibilities of American exporters of film, especially as affected by the federal tax. It seems that the Ways and Means Committee at Washington does not clearly understand just what effect the footage tax will have on the export trade, and, furthermore, that it is laboring under the wrong impression that England, after whose tax our own has been patterned, has imposed a footage tax of a similar nature. Congressman Kitchin, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has expressed himself as willing to suggest revisions, either in the present tax or in the proposed new measure, providing that his body be shown any injustice incurred by the levy.

The exporters would naturally prefer not to have to pass on to the foreign buyer the present footage tax on all prints. It has helped to disgruntle the foreign buyer, who now chooses to do business with an American exporter. The cost of production has always been higher in the United States than in other manufacturing countries, and it has long served as a handicap to the complete success of our export business. Even though American motion pictures possess acknowledged superiority the cheaper market price of foreign films will more than overbalance this virtue. Wise consideration of the matter at this time, the F. E. of A. rightly contends, will serve to bind the foreign buyer to the United States. Then, too, no other country, either now or at any other time, has levied just such a tax as this on footage.

Exporters Will Appeal to Congress Committee.

It was decided that the Film Exporters of America would either collaborate with the N. A. M. P. I. in drafting a brief to be sent to the Ways and Means Committee so as to guide it in its sessions, now being held to plan the new tax measure, or in case the brief of the N. A. M. P. I. has already been drafted it would present the exporters' case in a separate brief.

Official recognition was given by the meeting of the unselfish work of Paul H. Cromelin and his associates, who recently journeyed to Washington and secured several notable modifications of what would have been stringent rulings affecting the film exporting activities. This took form in a resolution of thanks that Mr. Kosch was instructed to send to the head of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

There were several complaints by members of delays in cable dispatches to many parts of the world, especially to the Far East. Some cases of absolute failure to deliver the message were reported. A committee was appointed to present these difficulties to the Federal Reserve Board, which has supervision over the cable and telegraph organizations at this time.

The writer has witnessed the growth and development of many trade protective organizations. He feels safe in stating, however, that none has given evidence of more thorough virility or more sincerity of purpose. It will unquestionably be to the interest of every film exporter, managers of export department of producing or accessory houses and foreign buyers now in New York to attend the next meeting at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, June 27, at 12:30 p. m., on the eighth floor, as formerly. Luncheon will be served during the course of the meeting.

Davis Will Not Attend Convention

Triangle Man Starts on Vacation, Following Which He Will Return to Los Angeles Studios.

THE Moving Picture World has it on the best of authority that the expected appearance of H. O. Davis, of the Triangle Film Corporation, at the Boston convention for a talk to exhibitors on "where the money goes" will not mature. Mr. Davis is now in New York City, but the call of a vacation that has been denied to him for six years is coming from the California mountains. After he has had this rest he will continue, as called for by his agreement, to give the Triangle studios the benefit of his knowledge as a production chief.

The World spoke to a representative of Mr. Davis at the Hotel Belmont, New York, while the latter was packing his grip for the hike back west. "Now the fact of the matter," said the Davis spokesman, "is that it won't be a case of telling troubles, for there aren't any more in the majority of the studios.

"There is no great wastage and no ruinous economy. The Davis idea—if you care to so call it—has finally obtained in the average producing department.

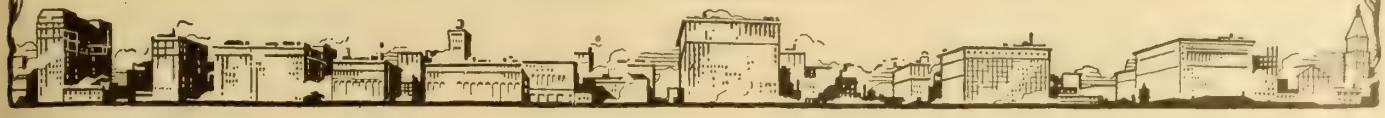
"The wrong sort of saving, it is now recognized, is as bad as wasting. The well-spent producing dollar is the one that shows one hundred cents large on the screen.

"Mr. Davis believes in studio efficiency only to that extent. He feels the efficiency which is altogether one of economy is false—injurious even. I do not believe that he will be able to participate at Boston, but if he went there his talk would be confined to the following points:

"1. Spend whatever is necessary to get a good story.

"2. Spend whatever is necessary to produce it properly.

"3. Spend whatever is necessary to get perfect photography.



"4. Let your expenditure show dollar for dollar on the screen!"

PENNSYLVANIA LEAGUE ELECTS OFFICERS.

At the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania League Thursday, June 13, officers were elected for the ensuing year, much business of an organization nature was transacted, and reports were read showing that the membership was growing. The following officers were elected: President, M. Feitler; vice-president, George Schweitzer; secretary, L. Marks; treasurer, L. C. Schmidt. The board of directors consists of J. Mason, H. P. Kestor, R. Soltz, L. Goldberg, George Schweitzer, Oliver McKee, Henry Poke, L. Oppenheimer.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. HARLEMAN

Thomas H. Ince to Return to Culver City

Negotiations Closed for New Studio Site—$200,000 to Be Spent on Structures.

AS a result of negotiations that have been in progress for several months it was announced on June 11, by Harry H. Culver of the Culver Investment Company that a site comprising eleven acres at Culver City has been purchased by Thomas H. Ince, and that a group of buildings to cost about $200,000 will be erected there. Mr. Ince will move his six companies to Culver City as soon as the new studios are completed.

The land acquired by Mr. Ince fronts on Washington boulevard and is about half a mile nearer to Los Angeles than the Triangle studios. It is understood to be his intention to double his present capacity at the new location. The selection of the site was made after investigations of several other locations that had been offered.

Plans practically agreed upon by Mr. Ince call for the erection of some eighteen buildings, which will be grouped in the form of a quadrangle. The glass inclosed stages, laboratories, projection rooms and other equipment will be of the most complete and improved kind. Architecturally it is intended that the new studios will be especially attractive.

More Comforts for Triangle Players.

Following close on the construction of the gymnasium, plunge and tennis courts for Triangle employes, O. L. Sellers, in charge of the big Culver City studios, is making another improvement which should add materially to the comfort of the employes. Two reading and lounging rooms, one for women and the other for the men, are being decorated and furnished. All the current papers, magazines and motion picture trade papers will be kept on hand in these reading rooms, where Triangle players can while away their leisure moments.

Dustin Farnum Entertained by Sanitary Train.

Dustin Farnum has been officially adopted by the 115th Sanitary Train of the army division stationed at Camp Kearny, California. Mr. Farnum visited his brothers for the first time on Wednesday, June 12. Upon his arrival at camp the entire Sanitary Train passed in review before Mr. Farnum and Lieut.-Col. Jolley. The men were then brought up to the reviewing stand, where Major John Sharp, on behalf of the entire organization, presented Mr. Farnum with a Gruen watch, upon which were inscribed the words, "To our big brother, Dustin Farnum, from the 115th Sanitary Train, U. S. Army." Mr. Farnum was taken off his feet by the honor.

After the review the men of the Sanitary Train put on several athletic events. Following this, Mr. Farnum was conducted to an elaborate luncheon in the officers' mess hall. For his entertainment the members of the train put on eight acts of vaudeville.

After luncheon Mr. Farnum and the officers and men of the 115th witnessed a ball game between the 115th Sanitary Train and the 159th Infantry. Naturally, the 115th Sanitary Train were victorious over their opponents, the 159th, who incidentally, are the proteges of Bill Hart.

After the game a series of litter and foot races was run by the members of the Sanitary Train. Following this an open-air barbecue was attended by Mr. Farnum and the entire personnel of the train.

Stage Women's War Relief Gives Entertainment.

The Stage Women's War Relief gave an entertainment June 11 for the men at the lower reservation at Fort MacArthur. The program included an address by Mrs. Lillian Brockwell and others participating were Helen Rayome, reader; Jeanetta Crawford, vocalist; H. B. Crouch, sleight-of-hand; Harry McCoy, comedy and music; Hank Mann and Larry Seaman, wrestling match; Polly Moran, in comedy character work, and Mrs. Harmony Ryus as accompanist.

Mrs. Tyrone Power is the head of the entertainment committee and the programs already given under her direction in the camps at San Diego and San Pedro have been most enthusiastically received by the boys.

Selig Veterans Join Universal Forces.

Colin Campbell, veteran director, for many years with Selig and who is remembered as the producer of "The Spoilers," "The Crisis," "The Garden of Allah," "The Ne'er Do Well," and other large feature productions, has been engaged by Universal and has started rehearsing on a Bluebird feature for this company.

Fritzi Brunette, also well known Selig star, has joined the Universal and is being featured in "Should a Woman Tell?", a melodrama directed by Douglas Gerrard, from a screen adaptation by F. McGrew Willis of Sidney Toler's drama "Playthings." Miss Brunette is supported by Mary Anderson, Lew Cody, Phil Dunham, Fred Turner, Myrtle Reeves and others.

Tom Nash, another veteran of the Selig forces and for many years production manager at the Selig Western studios, goes to Universal as assistant to Henry McRae, director-general of the big "U" Western studios. Mr. Nash is one of the pioneers in the motion picture industry and was one of the first motion picture directors to reach the Pacific Coast.

Ernest Shipman in Town.

Ernest Shipman, the well known New York film man, is in Los Angeles and paid the World office a visit on Wednesday, June 12. Mr. Shipman stated that he has thirty-two pictures a year on contract and that he expects within a short time to have at least fifty-two.

Mr. Shipman is handling the Shorty Hamilton series and Francis Ford's first release, "Berlin Via America," also the Josh Binney comedies. He has a contract with the First National Exhibitors Circuit on a new Japanese secret service story, starring Walker Whiteside, and will arrange for the production of his picture while here. Mr. Shipman has also contracted to handle the Lloyd Carleton productions and a number of other feature film subjects.

The film man said after locating an exchange in Los Angeles he would return to New York and en route establish exchanges in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Denver, Omaha, Minneapolis and other centres.

Al Jennings Leases Essanay Studio.

The old Essanay studios at Culver City have been leased by Al Jennings, who is now heading his own producing company. W. S. Van Dyke is directing the first picture, which is called "The Lady of the Dug-Out." The story is taken from actual experiences in the lives of the "Jennings Boys," Al and Frank, and both are the principal characters in the story. The production will be in five reels.

The preliminary scenes of this production were taken in Arizona.

UNCLE SAM'S MEN WELCOME AT FOX STUDIOS.

It is announced from the William Fox offices that through the permission of Mr. Fox and Sol Wurtzel, Pacific Coast manager of the William Fox studios, an invitation has been extended to all of the men of the army and navy to pay a visit to the Fox studios at Hollywood any Saturday afternoon that might suit their pleasure.

The studios are on Western avenue, between Santa Monica Boulevard and Hollywood Boulevard.

BURTON HOLMES ARRIVES IN LONDON.

A cable dispatch from Burton Holmes, lecturer and photographer, has been received at his New York office, stating that he and his staff have arrived safely in London, after a fourteen days' voyage. Mr. Holmes will remain in London for three weeks prior to going to France.

Famous Players' Executives Outline Plans

Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Walter E. Greene and Al. Lichtman Tell What Will Be Done by Their Company in the Coming Year to Provide Entertainment for the Great Public—New Players and Old Favorites on the Roster

A Year's Budget

By Adolph Zukor,
President of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

IT is possible in the realm of art, as well as in the realm of business, to establish for one's self a definite aim. In business such an aim comes under the term of annual budget, and its value is too well known to need exposition, but there is in art the same value attached to a goal toward which every effort is to be bent, and this goal, too, may be expressed in the form of an annual budget. There is a great deal to be said in favor of establishing this definite course to be run. It has in its elements of definite inspiration and a definite understanding of just how far ambition may go.

It has been the custom in the motion picture industry to set forth each year the plans and aspirations of the work of the coming year. This is true of all branches of the amusement industry, but, unfortunately, in many cases the performance has not equaled the promise, because of the very evident desire on the part of the amusement manager to make his future appear rosy, and because so many elements of uncertainty have heretofore entered into the business of the amusement world. But today it is possible to establish a budget for the work of the moving picture business based on authoritative knowledge and prearranged plans, which can be made as definite and as exacting as the most stable business in the world. This is what the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has endeavored to do for itself for the year beginning September 1, 1918, and ending August 31, 1919—to establish a mark to shoot at which is worthy of the highest aim, a goal set after the most careful consideration, the most thorough preparation, and, we believe, the most complete understanding of what shall be, for the public, of the greatest entertainment value, and, for the exhibitor the means for making his business a genuine, real, thorough success.

Adolph Zukor.

Such an understanding can come not from guesswork or from the chance estimate of any one man or any two or three men, no matter how well versed in moving picture philosophy they may be. It must come from an experience based on years of hard work, years of constant endeavor for betterment, years of study and practice and revision, made by the largest number of intelligent motion picture experts obtainable, whose estimates are based on searching investigation and definite, helpful experience in every phase of the motion picture industry.

Such an understanding, we honestly believe, is the one powerful asset of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. There is much to prove that this is so. The very history of this organization speaks this truth. Its growth from the ideals of six years ago; its acceptance of public judgment; its constant endeavor to be of ever-increasing help to the real and only mainstay of the whole business—the exhibitor; its absorption of what has come to be admitted as the real brains and ability of the business; its good-will with the great motion picture public; its enormous national advertising policy, and finally its fortunate roster of screen artists who may be termed true stars, all have helped to put Famous Players-Lasky in a position to judge and judge correctly what shall make for the success of the motion picture business in this next year of its splendid history.

So it is with a feeling of confidence based on adequate experience and sound business judgment that this company has set its goal for the next year of its existence. Back of that confidence is a pardonable pride. Both the confidence and the pride have a reason for being.

Company Has Added Many Stars.

First, there is the known value of the stars who will appear in Paramount and Artcraft pictures. To the already formidable list of luminaries whose popularity in pictures is acknowledged by all we have added new stars in absolute certainty. There is no need to bolster up confidence in the hope that such men as Fred Stone, George M. Cohan, David Griffith, Cecil B. DeMille, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, John Emerson, Charles Ray, John Barrymore, Bryant Washburn and Wallace Reid will interest the moving picture public. That hope is a dead certainty.

And so with such stars as Marguerite Clark, Lina Cavalieri, Ethel Clayson, Shirley Mason, Billie Burke, Lila Lee, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Vivian Martin, Mary Pickford, Elsie Ferguson, and Dorothy Gish their work advertises itself and no one can doubt their drawing power when they are provided with the stories, the directors, the settings and the artistic intelligence that we aim to put back of every Paramount and Artcraft picture.

The resources back of the production department of Famous Players-Lasky is not a mere matter of luck. It is the result of a definite aim and the ability to attract and interest persons of proved worth in the production of motion pictures.

Confidence in the success of our year's "budget" is based also on the known loyalty and service of our distributing agencies and the selling plan for the year. Two hundred and eight productions in twelve months makes four features a week. With the stars at its command and the proved value of the "Success Series" pictures, each one of these productions will be a real "feature" worthy of the highest exploitation and, properly presented, of definite cash value to the exhibitor that shows them. It therefore becomes possible for this company to present to the public through the exhibitors of America the finest attractions at the most reasonable prices at which productions of this calibre can be produced and distributed.

With such a plan it is possible for every exhibitor to make an unqualified financial success of his business during the coming year. There is no reason why any exhibitor anywhere in the country cannot place his theater on a high plane by showing Paramount and Artcraft pictures. After reading the roster of stars who are to appear in Paramount and Artcraft pictures during the coming season it seems needless to state that the company is employing the greatest talent ever engaged in the making of motion pictures. The progress of the producing department has been artistically consistent until now we are firm in the conviction that there are no other pictures made which can compare in artistic value and drawing power with those of this company. And for these pictures we have but one desire: the greatest circulation possible at a price within the reach of all exhibitors.

Another reason for our confidence in the success of our year's prospectus is in the good-will and reputation which we have built up with public and exhibitor. That reputation and good will does not come overnight and does not come haphazard. It is the result of hard work, backed by a constant ideal and the ability to show the sincerity of our aims to the public through our national exploitation work.

Give the public a chance and in the long run it is sure to learn to discriminate. Six or seven years ago when the photodrama was a "jitney" show the public's sense of discrimination was not so keen. It was in direct ratio with the amount of real art and merit to be found in pictures of that day. The sense of discrimination has been rising steadily since those days, aided in no small part by the establishment of the feature picture.

Exhibitor Knows the Public Does Discriminate.

The public is letting the exhibitor know that it does discriminate. No housewife will go to the grocery store nowadays to buy "a good scouring soap." She discriminates when she comes to pay her five cents and asks for a particular brand that she knows is good because her mother found it good before her, because it has always lived up to its advertisements and because she has found it good herself.

No man will go to the drug store and ask for "a good safety razor." He knows a particular brand by its advertising, by what his friends have told him and by his own experience. Modern shopping is all done by particular brands, by the exercise of due discrimination whether the price be a nickel for a cigar or $2,000 for an automobile.

So when Mr. and Mrs. Public saunter out to a moving picture show they are learning to know that there is a brand on the goods they are about to purchase, a brand that is the trade mark of a big producing firm striving honestly to provide the absolute best in art, in stars, in direction, in photography, in scenic equipment, in entertainment value and in everything that enters into the production of the very best in moving pictures.

That is the reason for the good-will back of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, and that, too, is the reason for our confidence in what we intend to do in this new season.

And finally we have confidence in our new pictures for one very important reason—that is, we believe thoroughly in the kind of stories that are to be told in Paramount and Artcraft pictures. Wholesome dramas, uplifting in character; clean comedies, comedy dramas and plays dealing with the more cheerful aspects of life will be exclusively chosen for production. Such material as "Johnny Get Your Gun" and "The Big Top" for Fred Stone; "On the Quiet" and "Something to Do" for John Barrymore; "The Cruise of the Make Believe" for Lila Lee; "Out of a Clear Sky" for Marguerite Clark; "Come On In" for Shirley Mason; "The Pursuit of Polly" for Billy Burke; "Captain Kidd, Jr.," and "The Mobilization of Johanna" for Mary Pickford are examples of the kind of plays I mean.

The reason for our decision to eliminate photodramas of a morbid, depressing or tragic character as well as those concerned with religious problems, fairy tales and costume plays must be obvious to others as it is to us. Our conviction is the result of a thorough canvass of the situation, an interrogation covering the whole country, and our knowledge, which everyone shares, as to the effect of the war on the moving pictures.

Theater in War Time More Than Ever a Necessity.

In times of peace, the maxim of "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" is well recognized, and the film industry was brought to its present proportions because the American public thoroughly believes in it. In times of war, with the added mental burdens, the motion picture theater is more than ever a public necessity and its value is in the inspiration it can give, in the entertainment it can bring to hearts that are to be kept cheerful and courageous throughout the stress of such times.

Advertising is now essential to the exhibitor, for he should drive home the fact that his is the playhouse of comfort, amusement and entertainment, in which are presented the famous stars of the stage and screen.

Many theaters will take advantage of the conditions which have arisen because of the war and will capture increased patronage and prosperity by broadsides of prosperity, appealing to this necessity for relaxation that is in everyone of us.

It should not be forgotten that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has demonstrated its faith in the present conditions and the anticipation of the future by its great national advertising work to acquaint the public with the photoplays it produces and that it is backing up this publicity with the best pictures that brains and money can produce. The prosperity of the picture theater is necessarily our prosperity, and we are desirous of building on solid ground.

So this is the message we wish to bring to the exhibitors and the great public behind them: Famous Players enters into its new picture year with a confidence that is a true growth and is based on solid experience. Never have we felt so firmly entrenched in what shall spell success for the showman who can take advantage of these new conditions of today.

I do not suppose for a moment that pictures have attained their ultimate end. With our confidence we still must maintain our poise. It is only by constant striving after an ideal that success may be obtained. If we believed that that end were obtained we could not but decay. There is no doubt that pictures will be improved year by year for many years to come, and it is our wish to be in the front rank with those responsible for such improvement. But I do feel sincerely that these productions in our new year are to be the best that can be made today. And if we do our duty by ourselves, by the exhibitor and by the public, they will be the best pictures tomorrow and through all the glorious future that is still to come for the motion picture industry.

A Large Motion Picture Undertaking

Outline of What the Producing Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Will Do for the Season of 1918-19.

By Jesse L. Lasky,

Vice-President, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in Charge of Productions.

THE preparation of one hundred and fifty-six Paramount and Artcraft pictures, each of five or more reels, and aside from the short subjects, presenting a general standard of quality and drawing power that will far exceed even the product of our own studios in the past, is a task of truly gigantic proportions. That the most tremendous motion picture undertaking ever attempted by any organization in the history of the screen has been allotted to the producing forces of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the fulfillment of this schedule is readily evident.

With the best efforts of the greatest galaxy of players, directors, writers and technical experts in the industry at our command, it is only natural to expect notable achievements from the producers of Paramount and Artcraft pictures during the next twelve months commensurate with those of the past years, and more so, for our organization has been augmented with new genius and facilities. It is further natural to expect that the motion picture industry on the whole will be made a far greater enterprise than ever before as a result of the increased possibilities of our producing department.

Jesse L. Lasky.

Appearing in Paramount pictures, produced in the East and West, will be the following stars: Marguerite Clark, Lina Cavalieri, Billie Burke, Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex, Ethel Clayton, Wallace Reid, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Pauline Frederick, Vivian Martin, John Barrymore, Lila Lee, Dorothy Gish and Bryant Washburn. In Artcraft pictures there will be Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, George M. Cohan, Elsie Ferguson, William S. Hart and Fred Stone. D. W. Griffith and Cecil B. De Mille also will produce Artcraft pictures of super-quality and drawing power. In addition, there will be staged a number of special productions under both the Paramount and Artcraft trade-marks.

Mary Pickford's first two Artcraft pictures are "Captain Kidd, Jr.," a comedy which played one whole season on Broadway and was produced by Cohan & Harris, and "The Mobilization of Johanna," by Rupert Hughes. In the new vehicles, "Our Mary" will continue to show ever-increasing artistry which with each successive picture further enhances her popularity.

Following such sensational successes as his Artcraft releases of the past year have evidenced, Douglas Fairbanks, in his own language, will, to a greater extent than ever, hit them in the eye, knock them over, roll them down hill and leave them all laughing when he says good-bye. The famous comedian of the screen has already lined up a program that it would seem will make it easy for him to fulfill his expectations.

Elsie Ferguson's record of the past year is evidence sufficient of her great hold on the American public as a film favorite, justifying every promise which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation made for her when she was yet untried on the screen, since she has not only fulfilled all that was claimed for her, but has gradually risen to a pinnacle obtained by only a few who seek the public's favor. Her new Artcraft pictures, during the coming year, will be produced with the same care and limitless resource as has marked all her previous subjects.

Bill Hart, the Beloved "Bad Man."

William S. Hart, the most beloved "bad man" in the world, will also produce a new series of photoplays for Artcraft release. There is something of the art of Remington in his pictures, something of the humanity of Bret Harte; but there is unmistakably something of the tenseness of William S. Hart in each production, which has been responsible for the hold this man has upon his American public. His plans for the coming year present a most fitting contribution to followers of Artcraft pictures.

"Hit-the-Trail Holliday" can bear witness to the fact that George M. Cohan in the right picture is the type of film favorite the American audience wants to see. His pictures for the coming year, based on famous stage productions written by himself, will go far to reaffirm the judgment of those who have seen his previous screen successes.

D. W. Griffith and Cecil B. De Mille, the two famous masters of screen production, will stage for Artcraft release further epoch-making cinemas such as have placed them foremost in their profession in the past. Productions that will exceed in merit even "The Great Love," "Hearts of the World," "Joan the Woman" and "Old Wives for New" are promised.

Marguerite Clark, in a series of productions under the direction of Marshall Neilan, of which the first, "Out of a Clear Sky," will be completed early in autumn, is another important card in our production plans. The combination of Miss Clark and Mr. Neilan offers an unusual producing team. For years these two have been co-workers at our studios, Neilan having appeared as leading man in some of Miss Clark's productions. He now returns as a director, full-fledged as disclosed by his work in recent Mary Pickford pictures, and Miss Clark and he have entered upon their association with an enthusiasm that guarantees extraordinary Paramount pictures.

The debut of Fred Stone in motion pictures as an Artcraft star will unquestionably be one of the most interesting events in the autumn and will be regarded by millions of photoplay fans, to whom his name is a household word, as an event of great importance. Mr. Stone's first picture, a circus story by Anita Loos and John Emerson, a comedy directed by Chet Withey. will be followed by "Johnny Get Your Gun," taken from the comedy of the same name, which had a long run on Broadway. Others will follow and many surprises will be screened as a result of the marked originality and individuality of this famous player.

Shirley Mason will be given vehicles of particular adaptability to her youth, beauty and talents. Her initial subject is entitled "Come On In," in which Ernest Truex, the youngest comedy star on the American stage, will appear in her support. This is a piece of particular timeliness by Anita Loos and John Emerson, and produced by Mr. Emerson. It is a comedy of the training camps and should strike a responsive chord in the breast of every photoplay fan in America.

Ethel Clayton is among the few motion picture artists who have held their places through the years that the cinema has emerged to its present great vogue. Miss Clayton will be starred in Paramount Pictures offering the type of drama for which there is constantly growing demand. Her first production will be an adaptation of the famous drama, "Leah Kleschna."

John Barrymore, Too, Is Coming Back.

The return of John Barrymore to Paramount Pictures marks the reappearance on the screen of a man who is making rank as a leading American actor. Among his first pictures to be produced are "On the Quiet," the famous farcical comedy by Augustus Thomas, which has made millions laugh, and Maximilian Foster's popular story, "Something to Do."

Dorothy Gish will make her debut as a full-fledged Paramount star during the coming year. As a result of her extraordinary work in the leading comedy-tragic role in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," she is becoming one of the much-discussed women artists in America. Announcement of the titles of her first pictures will be made soon.

For more than two years it has been my belief, that given a young woman extremely talented and blessed with unnsual beauty and charm, the Famous Players-Lasky organization, with its extraordinary resources for photoplay production and exploitation could not only popularize this young woman in the eyes of the American photoplay fan, but could justly live up to all the promises made because of the quality of the productions to be released.

Lila Lee comes to the Paramount ranks after a success of more than five years under the most highly competitive artistic conditions in America. In that time she has risen from the ranks of a child actress to a great favorite among vaudeville audiences because of her sweet personality, her inherent theatrical instincts and her characterizations and impersonations. Known from coast to coast as "Cuddles," Miss Lee is only fourteen years old. Special attention is being given to her early productions which will be made at our West Coast studios, the first of which is "The Cruise of the Make-Believe," by Tom Gallon, and the experiment of launching a film star into the Paramount firmament will be watched with close attention by our producing force.

Wallace Reid in the coming year will be consistently starred in Paramount comedy dramas, which give him an opportunity to appear to his best advantage in modern themes and situations. His popularity has become tremendous as just reward for his close attention and faithfulness to his work. The productions that will set him off to best advantage his next year should largely enhance that talent which has made him one of the most capable actors in films today.

Lina Cavalieri, the famous star of the opera as well as screen, will be given subjects befitting her regal bearing and great dramatic capabilities. Lucien Muratore will also be seen in one of her Paramount pictures, "The Rose of Granada."

Three Ince Stars Will Continue for the Year.

The Thomas H. Ince stars, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett, have been welded so effectively into the list of Paramount star features that the promise from this noted film producer that these three favorites will continue next season in the type of story which experience has proved them best suited for should be sufficiently reassuring. Mr. Ince, one of the most important factors in modern photoplay production, will continue to supervise the work of these three young stars whose wide popularity is the reward of exceptional talents properly developed under the care of a master.

The unanimous verdict of exhibitors and public following the release of Miss Burke's "Let's Get a Divorce" has proved unmistakably that photoplaygoers desire to see her in the farcical comedy in preference to any other type of story. With this in view, we have secured the services of Edward Childs Carpenter, author of "The Cinderella Man" and other notable stage successes, to write the first picture for Miss Burke.

Pauline Frederick's three Paramount Pictures for the coming year are all of different texture than the type of photoplay she has recently done. Two of her new season's productions are finished. They are entitled "Out of the Shadows" and "A Daughter of the Old South," both of them giving Miss Frederick every opportunity for a portrayal of her great dramatic talent.

Bryant Washburn, one of the most popular young screen comedians of today, and who will be remembered for his exceptional work in "Skinner's Dress Suit," "Twenty-one" and many other hits, will first appear in one of Cecil B. De Mille's special Artcraft pictures. He will then star in a series of Paramount pictures to be produced at the West Coast studios. In vehicles particularly adapted to his talents, Mr. Washburn will be seen in what we expect will be the greatest hits of his career during the coming year.

In addition to the activities of the stars great things are expected from the staff of directors and authors staging Paramount and Artcraft pictures and presenting the most notable array of creative producing talent ever assembled. With such a program of pretentious work before us there is little wonder that we should take pride in our activities for the coming year and expect to achieve not only the greatest production record in the history of the photoplay, but to place on a new level the photoplay art in general.

Paramount-Artcraft's Success Series

Mary Pickford in Eight Revivals Heads List of Popular Stars in Attractive Reissues.

THE inauguration of the Success Series comes into existence by particular request of exhibitors throughout the country, it is announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which will distribute, commencing September 1, one reissue a week under this title. The pictures which have been selected for the Success Series were subjects in which stars made their reputation and they will be new to present theatergoers. The canvass of exhibitors, it is said, has indicated that they have practically a new audience today and that a great army of people have been converted to motion pictures in the last few years. Practically all of the old-time regulars, it is pointed out, will likewise be interested in seeing them again.

Many exhibitors were unable to secure bookings on these pictures because of the fact that the distributors preferred to shelve them rather than allow worn out prints to be shown. The Success Series, therefore, provides an organized outlet for such bookings as well as rebookings, sufficient to warrant the making of new prints with modern technical improvements.

The list of Success Series, with a few explanatory lines concerning each picture for the information of the exhibitor has been especially prepared by the Moving Picture World as follows: There will be eight pictures starring Mary Pickford.

Mary Pickford Heads the List.

"The Eagle's Mate" shows Mary in the role of a gently reared girl of the hills who is thrown in with moonshiners, but finally wins the man of her choice. James Kirkwood is the director.

"Caprice," the play in which Minnie Maddern Fiske starred. Owen Moore plays opposite. A country girl is brought suddenly into a society environment, finds herself out of place and returns home to educate herself.

"Hulda From Holland," by Edith Delano, directed by John B. O'Brien. Friendless Dutch girl lately arrived in America finds not only a home, but happiness and a sweetheart.

"Hearts Adrift," directed by E. S. Porter. Spanish girl, cast away on a South Sea island, becomes the common-law wife of another castaway and is happy until fate throws the real wife of the man she loves into her life.

"Behind the Scenes," by Margaret Mayo, directed by James Kirkwood. Contrasts the drama of life with the glamor of the footlights. Miss Pickford is seen in one of the best characterizations of her early career.

"The Dawn of a Tomorrow," by Frances Hodgson Burnett. An ignorant slum girl is enabled by a mysterious power which she but vaguely comprehends, to save her sweetheart from the gallows.

"Rags," by Edith B. Delano. A girl rises from the lowest strata of life to a position of social importance and finds it possible to marry the man she loves.

"Esmeralda," directed by James Kirkwood; story by Frances Hodgson Burnett. Based upon the separation of Esmeralda from her sweetheart by the unexpected finding of a fortune on the farm suddenly developing social ambitions of her mother.

Miss Clark Stars in Six.

Six of the Success Series will be Marguerite Clark features. "Wildflower," directed by Allan Dwan, story by Mary Germaine, is the production in which Miss Clark was introduced to the screen. She portrays the character of a child of nature, who knows nothing of the meaning of love until she meets the one man in all the world for her.

"The Crucible," from Mark Lee Luther's story of a girl who has been unjustly condemned to a reformatory because of a simple girlish prank; how she triumphs and in the end is rewarded.

"The Goose Girl," William C. De Mille's scenario of Harold MacGrath's novel; directed by Frederick Thompson. A princess is stolen by gypsies and subsequently adopted by peasants. She falls in love with the king of a neighboring country and shares his throne.

"Gretna Green," by Grace Livingston Furniss. Romantic comedy of the picturesque period of the early nineteenth century when elopements to Gretna Green added a dash of excitement to life.

Still Waters," by Edith B. Delano. Comedy-drama having a circus for its setting.

"Miss George Washington," by Lewis Allen; directed by J. Searle Dawley. Story of a girl who told a fib—and then many more of them.

Miss Frederick's Half Dozen.

Pauline Frederick also will be seen in six features of the series. "Sold" tells of the wife of a poor artist who poses for another and is misjudged. Hugh Ford directed.

"Zaza," from the story and play by Berton and Simon. Directed by Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford. Screen interpretation of the role presented on the stage by Rejane, Bernhardt and Mrs. Leslie Carter.

"Bella Donna," from Robert Hichens' novel of the treachery and punishment of a woman swayed by uncontrollable passion.

"The Eternal City," by Hall Caine. Directed by Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford. Production photographed in Rome, Italy, where the scenes of the story are laid.

"The Woman in the Case," from the play by Clyde Fitch. A story of a wife who never loses faith in her husband, though he is accused of the murder of a friend.

"Sapho," from the pen of Alphonse Daudet. Directed by Hugh Story. The story of an artist's model who forsakes fame and notoriety for the love of a young student.

Dustin Farnum Has Four.

Dustin Farnum will again be seen in four of his best known pictures. "The Virginian," by Owen Wister; scenario and direction by Cecil B. De Mille. A monument to "the West that was."

"Captain Courtesy," a stirring story of the early days in California when the Mexicans were in authority there.

"The Gentleman from Indiana," directed by Frank Lloyd. Booth Tarkington's delightful love story presented on the screen with all its idyllic charm.

"The Parson of Panamint," by Peter B. Kyne; directed by William D. Taylor. This is a story of the crude, virile life in a typical mining town in the days of '49.

Victor Moore's "Chimmie Fadden."

Three pictures of the series have Victor Moore as their star. "The Clown," by Marion Fairfax, is a romantic comedy of the "big top." Cecil B. De Mille directed.

"Chimmie Fadden," dramatized for the stage by Augustus Thomas from E. W. Townsend's book. This was one of Mr. Moore's greatest successes on the stage as well as on the screen. Scenario was by Cecil B. De Mille, who also directed.

"Snobs," by George Bronson Howard, was directed by Oscar Apfel and is the laughable story of a milkman who suddenly inherits a title.

Farrar, Farnum and Barrymore.

Geraldine Farrar will again be seen in "Carmen." The scenario is by William C. De Mille, and Cecil B. De Mille directed. The operatic star will also be seen under Mr. De Mille's direction in "Temptation," a story of a prima donna by Hector Turnbull; and in William C. De Mille's screen version of "Maria Rosa," Angel Guimera's tragedy of a Spanish peasant girl.

William Farnum will be seen in "The Redemption of David Corson," Charles Frederick Goss' noted story of a man's regeneration; and in "The Sign of the Cross," Wilson Barrett's great play of the struggle of Christianity against Paganism.

John Barrymore makes his reappearance in four of his greatest comedies. "Are You a Mason?" by Leo Ditrichstein, is the story of a married man who pretends to join a lodge in order to stay out nights. "The Man from Mexico," by H. A. Du Souchet and directed by Thomas Heffron, is a tale based upon a trip to Mexico which the leading character took only in his imagination. "The Dictator" is a comedy-drama by Richard Harding Davis, which chronicles the adventures of a young American who becomes dictator of a small republic in South America. "The Lost Bridegroom," though funny, is also thrilling, showing Barrymore in the role of a crook. Willard Mack wrote it and James Kirkwood directed.

Jack Pickford Features Five.

Five features starring Jack Pickford are included in the series. They are "Seventeen," Booth Tarkington's humorous story of "puppy love," which Robert Vignola directed; "Great Expectations," adapted from Charles Dickens' novel and directed by Robert Vignola; "Freckles," Gene Stratton

LEADING PLAYERS OF THE SUCCESS SERIES

Porter's story of a runaway orphan, directed by Robert Marshall Neilan; "What Money Can't Buy," the famous George Broadhurst play which tells of the quest of a rich young American for the love of a princess, directed by Lou Tellegen, and "The Dummy," from the play by Harvey J. O'Higgins and Harriet Ford, based upon the kidnapping of a child and the triumph of a boy detective.

Eleven With Various Stars.

In addition to these there will be eleven special productions as follows: "The House of the Lost Court," mystery story by Mrs. C. N. Williamson, in which Viola Dana is starred; "Jim, the Penman," John Mason's first screen play from the drama by Charles L. Young; "The Country Boy," by Edgar Selwyn, directed by Frederick Thompson and starring Marshall Neilan, a story of the downfall and regeneration of a small-town youth who migrates to the city; Frank McIntyre in his comedy of the stage and screen, "The Traveling Salesman," written by James Forbes and directed by Joseph Kaufman; Fannie Ward in "The Cheat," the story of a woman's struggle to preserve her honor, by Hector Turnbull and directed by Cecil B. De Mille; an all-star cast in David Belasco's great play, "The Girl of the Golden West," which was directed by Cecil B. De Mille; an all-star cast in "The Old Homestead," Denman Thompson's stage classic of American country life, directed by James Kirkwood; William H. Crane, in "David Harum," the delightfully quaint story of rural life by Edward Noyes Westcott; Theodore Roberts in "Pudd'nhead Wilson," the Mark Twain story of law, love and finger prints, the late Frank Mayo presented on the stage; Bessie Barriscale in "The Rose of the Rancho," the dramatic tale of ranching by David Belasco and Richard Walton Tully, produced under Cecil B. De Mille's direction; and Blanche Sweet in "The Warrens of Virginia," David Belasco's Civil War drama which William C. De Mille scenarioized and Cecil B. De Mille directed.

"It will be noted," said a Famous Players-Lasky Corporation official, "that every one of these pictures carries the best artistry these stars have displayed. In reissuing them, they will be revivified with all the modern technique of the photographic art, which will make them even more attractive than when first released. These reissues will be handled in the laboratory in the same manner as a new production, from which they will not be distinguished in this respect, especially as we are only using such pictures as can appropriately be handled in such manner."

Seven Players New to Artcraft-Paramount

Jesse Lasky Outlines Past Performances of His Company's Recent Acquisitions.

SEVEN new stars who will be seen in Paramount and Artcraft Pictures during the coming year starting September 1, in addition to the many former stars of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who will again be seen in pretentious productions, have already been signed up, it is announced. Six of these stars will appear under the Paramount banner. They are Ethel Clayton, Jack Barrymore, Lila Lee, Dorothy Gish, Bryant Washburn and Shirley Mason, Fred Stone, who has just arrived at the Hollywood studio in California, will appear in Artcraft Pictures.

The production activities of these players will come under the supervision of Jesse L. Lasky. "These additional stars," said Mr. Lasky in outlining their work for the coming year, "are the brightest lights of the stage and screen, whom we deemed eminently fitted for stellar roles under the Paramount and Artcraft banners and when their names are added to the list of players now appearing in our productions, the greatest ensemble of public favorites in the history of amusements, either on the speaking stage or the screen, is presented.

"Fred Stone is unquestionably the most famous comedian on the speaking stage today, possessing not only dramatic ability, but a marked individuality. He is renowned for his eccentric acrobatics, which made him a popular favorite from the time he appeared with a circus many years ago. It is a significant fact thaat Fred Stone plays have had the longest run of any similar attraction ever launched, some of them being presented successfully for two and three years without interruption. We anticipate that Fred Stone's Artcraft pictures will be booked for long runs in all photoplay houses, for without doubt, if Fred Stone can pack a house for a year, his photoplays will be worthy of a long run in cinema houses. In "Jack o'Lantern," Mr. Stone during the past season drew record business on Broadway.

"Ethel Clayton is already too well known as a motion picture star to require comment, but I can predict that this star will shine even more brightly in the elaborate Paramount vehicles in which she will appear.

"Jack Barrymore returns to the Paramount fold with a record which makes his individuality as a comedian notable. Several years ago he appeared in pictures produced at our studios and established on the screen a new type that could not help but take immediate hold upon the patrons of the photoplay. Since his last appearance as a Paramount star he has won added laurels on the speaking stage.

"Lila Lee is a new name to the photoplay world. It is a name, however, that will before long become a household word, to use the old phrase, of the great motion picture public. Under the care of masters of the cinema art the talents and beauty of this young lady of fourteen years, already evidenced on the stage, will be brought out effectively. For several years we have been looking for just such a person as Lila Lee.

"Dorothy Gish is another Paramount star who will bring new patrons to the theatre in addition to the established picture patrons, for her prominence in big D. W. Griffith productions has made her popular with theatergoers as well as the regular followers of film plays. Her wonderful characterization of the grisette in 'Hearts of the World' has given her new prominence in the eyes of the entertainment-seeking public.

"Bryant Washburn is the latest addition to the Paramount roster. He has been a screen favorite of particular prominence for the past few years and his exceptional work in recent photoplay hits will be remembered.

"Shirley Mason also brings to the Paramount fold, youth, beauty and exceptional talents. She is seventeen years old, but has had a great deal of experience both on the stage and on the screen. Appearing opposite Miss Mason, in her first Paramount picture, and Anita Loos-John Emerson production, will be Ernest Truex.

"It will be noted that these stars are well established as leaders in their respective branches of the profession and are well fitted to enter a '100 per cent. organization.' They will prove valuable assets to all first class houses catering to intelligent people, for they have repeatedly proven their talent for entertaining their audiences and their names are well known in every community where newspapers are read.

"Our recent announcement regarding a change in policy whereby we will present subjects of cheerful theme followed careful investigations extending back for many months and as soon as we were assured of our ground we began to take steps to secure the services of the most talented people along these lines, who would bring with them not only the dramatic qualities desired, but a personal following which would insure box office success."

Fifty-Two Paramount Comedies for Year

Twenty-six Subjects from Sennett Studios, Ten Arbuckle Films and Sixteen Flagg Pictures.

FOR the coming season, commencing September 1, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will increase its distribution of Paramount comedies to fifty-two releases, one two-reeler every week. These comedies will come from the studios of Mack Sennett, Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle and James Montgomery Flagg, it is announced, presenting the best efforts of these three famous producers of popular motion picture fun.

In announcing the releasing plans in connection with these comedies, Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, said. "Mack Sennett will produce twenty-six comedies for the year, one being released every other week. The success of these pictures has made them world-renowned and exhibitors well know their mirth-producing qualities. Mr. Sennetts' career in the motion picture world as a producer of comedies goes back to the inception of the industry. His wonderful ability of turning out fast moving comedies with many new bits brought about by his great technical genius as well as his rare sense of motion picture humor has been established for some time past. His company will celebrate its triumphs of the past year by enlarging its scope and bigger and better laughs may be expected in these pictures, if such a thing is possible, during the coming year.

"The Roscoe 'Fatty' Arbuckle organization will stage ten Paramount Arbuckle comedies, each of two-reel length. 'Fatty' Arbuckle has become a national institution and his comedies have consistently maintained a popular demand. The policy of production has been a most liberal one and no effort or expense has been spared to insure laughs. In limiting himself to but ten pictures a year, in which he will personally appear and also act as director, Mr. Arbuckle brings to the exhibitor assurance that this brand of comedies will continue as a most desirable adjunct to any program.

"Sixteen James Montgomery Flagg comedies will be produced and work on the first two reeler, has already been started under the supervision of Jack Eaton, directed by Martin Justice, whose O. Henry pictures are well remembered. These comedies have become established with patrons of the motion picture theater, and under the new arrangement whereby they are to be released under the Paramount trademark they are a tremendous reinforcement to the humorous releases. The finest and best theaters in America have been showing the James Montgomery Flagg pictures with remarkable success in the past, and the new series for Paramount will be the most pretentious attempts yet made by Mr. Flagg and his associates, who have laid out some very ambitious plans for the coming year.

"This combination solves for the Paramount exhibitor the perplexing question covering the comedy situation in a most satisfactory manner."

To Issue 104 Educationals in Year

That Is the Schedule Arranged by Famous Players-Lasky—One Holmes and Pictograph a Week.

IN preparing the short subject release schedule for the coming year, starting September 1, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has arranged for the presentation of 104 educational subjects, which offers the release each week of one Paramount Burton Holmes Travel picture and one Paramount Bray Pictograph. The distribution of these films during the coming year will be largely increased throughout the country, and various plans in connection with their production indicates that their scope will be considerably enlarged.

Speaking of the new plans for the short subjects, Walter E. Greene said: "Paramount-Bray Pictographs have made a niche for themselves as 'the magazine on the screen,' and have presented some remarkable scenes during the past year. For the coming year one will be released each week. These new releases will be of great added interest and present a wider variety of subjects treated than ever before, one of which involves a new treatment of fashions, never before disclosed on the screen. The animated drawings idea, giving clear explanations of many scientific subjects in a way never before possible and which have created wide comment, will be extended considerably.

"Paramount Burton Holmes Travel Pictures are having a greatly increased demand and are much more in vogue among the better theaters catering to intelligent audiences. The prestige of Burton Holmes is not to be underestimated in showing these subjects, for the famous lecturer and globe trotter is particularly a favorite among those who seek knowledge of foreign things as well as those who admire beauty of nature. One of these films will be released each week during the coming year.

"The wonders of the world have been brought to the screens of American motion picture theaters by Mr. Holmes. The world war has burst the shell of nations and has excited curiosity in the minds of the public in distant countries. Cities and countries that heretofore have been merely names of passing interest have now become imbued with modern historical significance as they become associated with the great drama of life and death that is now being enacted and this has brought into interest the peoples of the entire globe. Thus the Burton Holmes subjects for the coming year will be of greater interest than ever, particularly in that they will involve an intimate presentation of scenes and conditions resulting from the war 'over there,' Mr. Holmes having left America recently to take pictures in England, France and other countries of the Allies."

Square Dealing Aim of Sales Force

So Says Al Lichtman, General Manager of Distribution for Famous Players.

THE principles which govern the relations between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its field force engaged in the selling of Paramount and Artcraft pictures have been set forth for the benefit of exhibitors by Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution.

"The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation laid its foundations upon the principles of square dealing, justice and honesty and the ideal of creating and doing something better than anyone else," said Mr. Lichtman. "These principles and ideals are being constantly instilled in our sales force at the periodical meetings of the district branch managers, held at the home office; through the medium of letters, office and inter-office memoranda, personal interviews and in every conceivable way which presents itself.

Al Lichtman.

"To the end that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation may render 100 per cent. service to each of its customers, big or little, our men are being thoroughly imbued with the idea that the reputation of the organization lies entirely in their hands, and that if they are not adhering strictly to a policy of square dealing, justice and honesty in their transactions with their customers—our customers—they are undermining the principles we are striving so hard to maintain.

"The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation demands of every member of its field force that he shall know; first, what he is selling; second, why he is selling it; and third, why it is worth selling. These are the Three Rs of salesmanship, yet it would astonish the industry, if a check could be made of the thousands engaged in selling films, to find out how few have learned them. They make sales, good-will, more sales.

"There, in the last analysis, is the root of the whole selling proposition. No business succeeds unless it is continually going forward. No business can go forward without increasing its sales. And there can be no increase in sales without the good-will of customers. That is a cardinal principle of all business, and every salesman of Paramount and Artcraft pictures is required to apply it. In meeting his customers he must have enthusiasm and transfer it to them, but in the shortest time possible, for the exhibitor—the only kind of exhibitor he should be doing business with—is a busy man.

"We teach our salesmen that the man brimful of belief in himself and his goods and bubbling over with enthusiasm and vitality is bound to affect the other fellow. He is going to affect him in direct proportion to his own enthusiasm. A man's success with a proposition is only limited by his faith in it, and once a salesman has that faith and puts it across to his customers he need not fear that there will be any request for reductions on one score or another.

"The entire proposition is one of service, and it is my opinion that when the exhibitor has become acquainted with what we are doing along these lines the word 'service,' when coupled with the name of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will take on a new significance."

WORLD BRANCH MANAGERS IN TOWN.

Three World branch managers dropped in at the World home office last week and looked over the new World pictures, which are scheduled for release within the next few months. These were Fred Salinger, Pittsburgh; R. B. Smeltzer, Washington, and C. A. Thompson, Cleveland. All declare the outlook for business during the summer and fall is exceedingly gratifying. They also report that a number of legitimate houses are going to show pictures because of their inability to secure road attractions on account of the increased railroad fares.

FAMOUS PLAYERS SIGNS WANDA HAWLEY.

The acting of Wanda Hawley in "Old Wives for New" and "We Can't Have Everything," both Cecil B. De Mille special Artcraft productions, has brought her a long term contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Miss Hawley has been in picture work only about a year but her rise has been rapid.

GRINDING THE CRANK WITH THORNTON FISHER

"THE DIRECTOR'S DILEMMA" OR "NO WONDER THEY DIE YOUNG."

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

WHAT a splendid picture "Joan of Plattsburg" is! Mabel Normand in this Goldwyn offering has endeared herself to fans everywhere. The picture is sane all through and very timely, to say nothing of the scenes "inside the lines" at Plattsburg. Good comedy here when Joan gets mixed up with the men in their "over the top" drills. It now has the indorsement of the "First Lady of the Land," cabinet officers and millions of fans. Robert Elliott, always dependable, plays the lead perfectly, and caused "Ohs" and "Ahs" among the girls. As a critic says, this is a "patriotic wallop." Two things I would suggest to little Mabel: Learn to toe out, especially when descending stairs wearing white shoes; another—do not display the ivories so widely, as it gives to her otherwise handsome features a vacant expression when staring. We are spared actual battle scenes in France, and how the house applauded when "Johnnie came marching home" up Fifth avenue!

Mrs. Ayer put on the same program "Selfish Yates," by odds the best Hart offering this season, skilfully directed by the star. While we get the same old idea of a soul awakened, the luring of the heroine by the villain, the rough and tumble fight between the men, still somehow it took hold of us in front. I liked the funeral scene—a new touch in a Hart picture—and the compelling work of Jane Novak as the pathetic heroine. Harry Dunkinson, a newcomer with Artcraft, had a fat part, into which he fitted physically. A well balanced company, but Master Butterworth as Hotfoot got the laughs, for he was decidedly clever all through.

"A Weaver of Dreams," with little Dana doing her customary emotional work, went well. But why do they not give her a leading man nearer her own age? Clifford Bruce is a splendid heavy, and fits in elsewhere all right, but opposite dainty Viola is a misfit—so the fans think, as they did in recent pictures. What got us strong in the "Weaver" was the novel introduction of the middle-aged couple hugging a romance of long ago. Clarissa Selwyn, with her beautiful eyes and stateliness, and Russell Simpson made a picture long to be remembered. Some rebelled at the flashback picturing the hideous wreck, as the directors went a bit too far here; but it may be necessary to "rub it in" and leave little to our intelligence or imagination. Nothing finer in outdoor photography has been seen in a long time, the principals standing out like paintings; some of the scenes seemingly tinted in sepia. A young thing back of me said, "That feller don't know a good thing when he has it"—referring to the lover's caddishness and bad taste in choosing the doll-like girl to Judith, the heroine. Dana gave us fine touches here in sacrifice, but my companion said she was well rid of the man anyhow. We were spared the customary ending and two-lip stunt.

In "Masks and Faces" (done in England) Forbes Robertson certainly made good. What a cast! Maybe the support of his own people over there had something to do with the success of this. In it we have a Terry, a Boucicault, a Du Maurier, the only George Bernard Shaw; Sir Beerbohm Tree, Sir Arthur Pinero, Sir James Barrie, Irene Vanbrugh, who plays "Peg" deliciously; Lillah McCarthy, much liked here, and others with international names. It was distinctly English, and an excellent screen interpretation. No wonder this picture is indorsed by the National Council of Women and strongly commended.

After seeing "The Guilt of Silence" we went over to the Fenway to see "The Seal of Silence," a big picture put out by the Vitagraphs for Earle Williams, Grace Darmond and others, well directed by Tom Mills, whose work on the O. Henry pictures has been superfine. Here we get a story with a doctor, an uncongenial mismated wife and a young girl—making an interesting triangle. It had many new ideas, especially on the kid end, with four-year-old Pat Moore to handle. We liked the professional side of the story and the entire consistency, also the proper ending with the skies cleared. Clean picture; good for reissue at any time, as most of the Vitagraphs are.

Another good play for the screen, "Her Decision," with an excellent cast. I went twice to see this just for the work of J. Barney Sherry, who has a decidedly "high-water mark" part and holds true to the character. While the plot is not entirely original, it is so well worked out in such capable hands as to give it new angles worth while. Here we get the employer and his stenographer, whom he marries, knowing well the girl thinks she loves another (who is a ne'er-do-well, and gets his innings later on). The part of Martin Rankin could not be in better hands, and Gloria Swanson develops the character perfectly. This is a fine Triangle picture and to be commended to the limit.

"Lend Me Your Name" was seen twice, as I hoped to find something to enthuse a bit over, liking young Lockwood. Here he undertook to double, but was quite the same, forgetting, as the masquerader, to cut out the facial twists of the dyspeptic, and these were not natural. Best thing about this is the scenery and the fine support, for the valet and the impossible doctor were funny and the leading women excellent. Lockwood's fall in the brook was the cause of much merriment, even among the staid patrons of the Exeter.

A corking circus picture, good for all classes, is "The Biggest Show on Earth," with its Barnum-like title and so cleverly directed by the only Ince for Enid Bennett and a capable company. This included Melbourne MacDowell, who makes a typical circus owner with his loud watch fob and all else that shouts. Then when daughter goes to a swell school she, too, lives up to the circus "mold of fashion" and wears clothes that arouse varied comments. What we wondered at was her stunt with the lions, for it looked perilous; but Enid never turned a hair. Bets were made as to how it was managed. There were good camera shots and some fine sets where the quality reigned. As Colonel Trent, the aristocrat (rather the hubby of one), Carl Stockdale had a most congenial part. Young Rodney, the lover, stood pat in spite of mother on the circus question. Good twist on dad's part in giving away the source of their income from said circus.

Score another for the Japanese actor, Hayakawa, whose latest seen here is "The White Man's Law," directed by James Young most creditably. Pretty daring theme in making the white man the villain and an eastern Hindu a hero! Jack Holt has a part in keeping with his former ones, and I never could see why he should be cast as a goody-goody, for his features forbid it. My neighbor could not quite see why he should commit suicide in such an abrupt manner when the Arab had good cause to kill him when opportunity was there; but this is of the unexplainable. Anyhow it gives a novelty to customary killing off of the bad 'un. Joe Swickard does a good piece of character work. And does not Maym (don't like that name) Kelso look well as first lady?

Rubes, somewhat overdone, form the comedy element in "Mile-a-Minute Kendall," a good vehicle for Jack Pickford and sister Lottie, who does the naughty stunt very well. It jarred a bit to know that brother and sister played together in such parts. Louise Huff is at all times good, and her introduction through a soapy window was clever. We had the same week the other sister, Mary, in "M'liss," but somehow it fell short of her recent pictures. Not yet has she duplicated her most remarkable work in "Stella Maris," by all odds her very best.

What a pity Benjamin Chapin has gone out of our lives! But what a memory he has left in his wonderful portrayals of the great Lincoln on platform, stage and screen! I feel glad that he lived long enough to give us pictures of such great value in many ways. We feel a bit proud over here that Henry, Hadley, a native of Somerville, has completed the first symphony written for motion pictures. Mr. Hadley has been seriously thought of as a successor to Karl Muck, former leader of our symphony orchestra, and now an interned alien in Georgia, where he has organized an orchestra for other Germans—United States prisoners.

We are glad that Frank Mayo has made good and now with the World Film; of the fact that Vernon Steele is to play opposite Mme. Petrova, and that Walthall has gone back to his first love—Griffith, who made him famous as the Little Colonel in "The Birth of a Nation."

British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

THE case of the long film, pro and con, is the all-absorbing topic of the moment in those rare intervals when film men can find time to discuss other matters than war, its ramifications and restrictions upon the industry. It is now some months since a prominent exhibitor laid a definite complaint of padding features at the door of the modern, multi-reel producer. The question was taken up by the exhibitors' association, and the metropolitan branch of that body filed a resolution of protest to the joint Kinematograph Trade Council, the objection being to the padding of films more than to the measured length, although a shorter standard was generally recommended. Frank Goodwin pointed out at the time that the exhibitor had often no alternative but to show the long film. It was usually of undoubted advertising value, was woven around a star and had a famous title. If Mr. Goodwin's statement was representative of most exhibitors' views—which, by the way, it is not—the resolution becomes a candid admission of shortsightedness on the part of the exhibitors. Less than a year ago the London agent of a newly established American house returned fifteen negatives to the head office as useless for the English market. They were all two and three reel features; first-class subjects at that, if the samples I saw were any criterion. The agent in question since returned to the States, but four of his films have returned "in extenso" as four and five reelers and have been sold off territorially at satisfactory prices; an experience which to an extent justifies Will Barker's innuendo that the exhibitor often shuts his eyes to the increased length of a film so long as it is delivered to him as so many reels.

At another city in the north has the Famous Players' version of "Sapho" gone "under the hammer," as they say in the army. A moralist of the standing of T. P. O'Connor sanctions the film in his capacity as censor, but the York Watch Committee, thriving on the thrice-purified air of the cathedral city, stubbornly refuse its exhibition.

Malvina Longfellow has been in England a few months already and probably numbers her film engagements more than her stage bookings. She sustained the role of Jacynth in the Samuelson production, "Holy Orders," dramatized from Marie Corelli's novel; played lead in "Thelma," and is now posing as the figure of Britannia in a series of propaganda subjects being issued by the Government Department of Information.

Charles Urban's second visit in official capacity to the U. S. A. has convinced him that there is plenty of room in the States for the British film.

Major Paul Kimberley, the representative of Lubin and Thanhouser pictures, has added still another responsibility to his existing long record of war activity. This is in the postion of superintendent of the home propaganda section of the Government Kinematograph Branch. Major Kimberley's special task will be in connection with the distribution of the shorter propaganda films—the regular releases, so to speak—of the different departments concerned. So that the official films shall not be issued to the exhibitor haphazard he proposes to attach them as "trailers" to the biweekly news reels, the length of each not to exceed 150 feet. "The Gaumont Graphic," "The Pathe Gazette" and "The Official Topical Budget" have agreed to the extra footage, which will not, of course, be charged to exhibitors.

Another innovation of the state department, now under the direction of the champion Canadian hustler, Lord Beaverbrook (better known in New York as Sir Max Aitken), is the despatch throughout the countryside of a fleet of automobile moving picture exhibitions. They have been specially detailed to exhibit the official films in rural villages and hamlets where no moving picture theater exists.

Woolwich, the arsenal city, has hitherto been as a barred and bolted door to the cameraman, but one of the recent official topicals holds back the curtain and reveals wonderful glimpses of the doings, mostly by female labor, within the walls.

One of the sincerest friends of the moving picture in the days it needed friends most, it is a matter of general regret that the late actor-manager, Sir George Alexander, did not appear in but one or two film productions. His most notable screen appearance was in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," the first British film to fetch a big price in the States.

E. Temple Thurston, the popular novelist, lecturing at the Stoll Picture Theater Club, decries the old ways of some producers in the matter of "cut-backs," as they are termed in the American trade. A man who has led a fast youth would be shown enjoying himself in a dance hall, but that does not convince the public that he is reprehensible, he argues. Many feet of film are absorbed like this and all the time the people are wanting to get on with the story, but the producer won't let them until he has show them the dissipations of the hero in the only way he knows.

Indian Notes

By S. B. Banerjea.

IN spite of the fact that the times are so abnormal the Indian cinema trade does not appear to have been affected. Some time ago it was feared that this trade would be paralyzed; that the cinema proprietors would be compelled to raise their admission charges, while giving, perhaps, one change of program weekly. The fear has not yet materialized. In fact, all the leading cinema proprietors are not only giving two complete programs weekly, but some of them give three changes. This is proof positive of the fact that the cinema trade is going very strong. It should be stated that the programs very seldom include rubbish films. I am, of course, speaking of the present. But who knows what will happen in the near future?

I am glad to report that Kirkee now boasts a cinema theater. It has just been opened near the railway station. Attached to it is a fine refreshment room, an excellent garden, and it will have several side shows. It has been named the Royal cinema.

Our Bioscope king, Madan, is erecting a new theater to replace his present Elphinstone Bioscope on a new site in Rangoon.

Yet another new theater! It is being opened at the Ferozepur cantonment. The military element will be strongy represented in the management.

Among other films, the New Alexandria of Bombay has shown the following: Anthony Hope's "Sakhy of Kravonia," the "Ware Case," "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," "Life Guardsman," "Sorrows of Satan," "Masquerade at Sea," several Chaplin comics and "All the World a Stage." "The Strange Case of Mary Page" also has been finished.

I hear that the proprietor of this fine theater is shortly transferring his interests to the management of the New Majestic cinema, which has just been opened in Bombay. I hope it will continue to maintain its reputation under the new management.

Mr. Ducasse of Calcutta has gone to Bombay with a number of complete pictures. He is giving one complete program each day. Should this venture prove a financial success he will, in the near future, open a theater of his own in that city.

His Bijou is maintaining its reputation as a first-class

theater. Just look at the program he has provided us with since I wrote last about him: "The Haunted Pajamas," "Sirens of the Sea," "Pay Me," "Phantom's Secret," "Flower of No Man's Land," "Two Men and a Woman," "Yoke of Gold," "Extravagance," "Man Without a Country," and a number of American comics.

The New Majestic was opened with "Robespierre." During the last two weeks several fine American films have been screened, including "The Gray Ghost."

The Imperial cinema has completed the exhibition of "The Fatal Ring," and has also screened installments of Pathe's History of the War and several American comics.

The Royal Opera House of Bombay has shown, among others, "Saintly Sinner," "The Man Who Took a Chance," "The Girl in Checkered Coat," the "Circus of Life" and "The Woman Who Was Nothing."

The Bombay Excelsior has screened the "New Exploits of Elaine" to crowded houses.

At the Empire (Bombay) "Stranded in Arcady," one of the new series of "Pathe plays," has been exhibited to packed houses. The management has completed "The Neglected Wife."

At the Napier "The Mysteries of Myra" is now being screened. I learn that this theater has already become a financial success.

At the picture house of Messrs. K. D. Brothers we have seen "The Labyrinth," "Man in a Taxi" and several British films of no particular merit.

The Cinema Palace, which is now under the management of Krishnadas Brothers, has just completed the exhibition of "The Purple Domino." It should have been shown at one of the Calcutta theaters first. However, it is not too late yet. Perhaps the management will be able to induce the authorities of the Presidency theater to take over the film.

Madan, of the Elphinstone, has shown "Second Mrs. Tanqueray," "The Deemster," "Peggy," "Fall of Nation," "The Mysterious," "Who's Your Lady Friend?" and several American comics. He has also booked "Patricia." His "Fun Fridays" are always well patronized.

At his New Cornwallis the exhibition of the "Goddess" has been completed. "The Mysteries of Myra" has just been started.

At the Albion he has screened "Two Little Vagabonds," "Alone in London," "The Romantic Journey" and "The Shielding Shadow." "The Great Secret" is now being shown.

At the Ripon old friends mostly are screened. I cannot commend this practice. The Calcuttaites want fresh food. They get more than plenty of it at the Bijou. Films like "The Chance of a Lifetime" will appeal to Europeans, not to Indians.

At the Presidency a serial of 30,000 or 36,000 feet is screened every Sunday and public holiday. The patrons do not mind sitting from 11:30 a. m. to 6 p. m.

At the Bioscope theater we have seen the "The Wrath of the God," the "Master of the World" and other films, which, though old, are new to the Calcuttaites. "The Wrath of the God" is a film calculated to excite racial ill-feeling. I am afraid if it be screened in a place like Rangoon or Mandalay, for instance, there will be hooting, and police interference will be necessary.

At the Karachi Kohinoor "The Shielding Shadow" is being screened, while the Emperor has shown "Patricia" and other films of note.

The Wellington cinema (Madras) has exhibited "Gentlemen of the Jury," "A Social Buccaneer" and several American comics. I trust its management will arrange to screen serials, which always draw crowded houses.

Certain Indian theaters still continue their prize shows. The Picture House of Calcutta has a children's prize show every Saturday at 11 a. m. Certain Bombay theaters offer watches to their patrons. A Calcutta theater once gave away books to every patron. These shows draw extra crowds.

Newman Plans to Classify His Theaters

Will Have Three High-Class Houses in Different Parts of Kansas City and Will Make Each Appeal to Individual Clientele.

FOUR years ago, on June 10, 1914, the Theater Royal, Kansas City's first high-class downtown photoplay theater, was opened. Practically on its fourth birthday Frank L. Newman, owner of the Royal and Regent, announced a new Newman theater, to be erected at 1112 Main street. With reference to his new theater Mr. Newman says: "Throughout the entire eleven years of my experience it has always been my dream to build a theater especially for moving pictures which would seat two thousand people. When the opportunity came for me to secure this ideal location I resolved to realize it. I expect to have something as fine as anything in America, to install every possible modern convenience, which will make it the last word in a photoplay theater. If it is possible we intend to have the theater cooled by a refrigerating system. The architect is at present studying the problem. Some of the features will be a mezzanine floor between the first floor and the balcony, which will be furnished as a salon for both men and women. Aside from this it will also have rest rooms and a nursery."

Mr. Newman, with the three theaters, will be enabled to stage his pictures each in the vicinity most suitable and where it will have the strongest drawing capacity. For example, such stars as William S. Hart, Theda Bara, Madame Petrova will probably be run at the Regent and any other features perhaps a little too strong for the Royal. The Royal will provide a suitable audience for Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark and others who appear in another type of photoplay.

At the Newman the idea will be not so much to feature the star as the production. In fact, Mr. Newman's idea is apparently to give his theaters an individuality which will stand for the best in motion picture plays.

Mr. Newman seems to feel that it is possible to create a reputation for his houses as such aside from the programs which he presents. Moreover, the fact that he has three houses will make it possible for him to secure releases in such large quantities that he can discard a certain per cent which have objectional features and are not up to the required standard.

Although eleven years' experience might almost warrant it, Mr. Newman does not feel that he knows every turn of the business. He is arranging to leave Kansas City about the middle of June for an extended coast to coast trip for the purpose of "seeing what the other fellow has" in the way of innovations. Mr. Newman will probably be gone about six weeks.

Fox Names Eight District Managers

Assistant General Manager Robbins Will Look Out for Philadelphia, Washington and Buffalo.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by the Fox Film Corporation's sales districts in the United States and Canada. The appointments were effective June 11.

Herman Robbins, assistant general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, will be responsible for the territory embracing Philadelphia, Washington and Buffalo. Lewis Levin, who is also connected with the home office will preside over the sales in the territory taking in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas.

Paul C. Mooney will be district manager of Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Cincinnati, and Clyde W. Eckhardt will have charge of Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Minneapolis and Salt Lake City. George Mann will supervise the territory embracing Los Angeles and San Francisco, and Harry F. Campbell will continue as district manager of Boston and New England. Albert W. Eden is made district manager of Seattle and the Northwest, and Vincent McCabe remains as district manager of Toronto, Montreal and St. John, N. B.

"Britain's Bulwarks, No. 7" (Pathe).

CONDITIONS existing along the front at St. Quentin after the retreat of the Germans are pictured in this number. It shows the flooded areas through which the British cavalry advanced, the engineers working to rebuild roads and bridges, the ruins of many villages, troops resting between marches, and the capture of some German prisoners covering the rear. Such pictures do much to bring the actual conditions at the front home to the observer.

"Britain's Bulwarks, No. 8" (Pathe).

Further scenes on the British front in France, in and about St. Quentin. This gives a number of intimate views of the British troops on the march, resting in camp, repairing railroads and preparing trenches. A view of the men waiting to go over the top is also included. Further scenes give an idea of the ruin wrought by warfare in that region.

"Rainbow Bridge" (Educational-Newman).

Of unusual interest is the Newman camera trip to the Rainbow Bridge found in the rocky wilds of the Western States. The Newman party started from Gallup, New Mexico, and journeyed to Arizona and Utah, sure-footed mustangs being used as a means of transportation. Following for a distance along the rim of the Canyon de Chelly they finally enter the canyon where they are faced by walls of solid rock from 800 to 1,200 feet in height, which have to be surmounded in order to continue the journey. Monument Valley presents an unusual sight with its stone monuments rising at intervals from 300 to 1,300 feet in height. Over trackless trails of stone and ledges sometimes but a few inches in width they finally arrive at their goal, the Rainbow Bridge, which forms a perfect natural arch 309 feet in height, 277 feet in width and 30 feet in thickness. It is easy to imagine that few have found their way to this freak of nature; therefore the pictures of this desolate portion of the country brought to us by Mr. Newman are doubly valuable.

"Through the Nation's Parks" (Educational-Newman).

A reel of beautifully photographed views of the nation's parks is herein presented. These views have become familiar to patrons of moving picture theatres during the past year or two; but it is still quite possible to dwell on some of the featured beauties of these parks, such as for instance, Handkerchief Pool and the Paint Pots in Yellowstone, the beautiful Mirror Lake of Yosemite, or the various picturesque spots in Great Glacier Park, without becoming stale. This Newman has done, and done it well. One of the interesting features of the reel are the bears, showing King, the monarch of the Yellowstone bears, and several lesser members of the tribe feeding and fighting.

"Making Peanut Butter" (Universal).

A subject of considerable interest appearing in the 77th issue of the Screen Magazine shows the making of peanut butter. The raw peanuts are dumped down a chute to the roaster, from which they are taken when roasted to exactly the proper flavor, and placed in a hopper for hulling. The bad ones are culled out and the good ones are placed in a machine which grinds them into a butter. The peanut butter is then placed in jars of various sizes, labeled and sealed and made ready for the market.

"A Twentieth Century Cooper" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting subject appearing in the 125th issue of the Pictograph shows us the manner in which barrels are made. Each detail is shown from the putting of the staves together in the form to the heading of them by automatic machinery.

"War Garden Hints" (Paramount-Bray).

The planting of potatoes is given attention in the 125th number of the Pictograph of the "War Garden Hints." Here we see a young woman preparing the ground for the planting, choosing the potatoes to plant, preferably medium-sized ones with plenty of eyes, the soaking of them in a solution of formalid to prevent scabbing, and then the cutting and planting of them. Having seen this demonstration one can scarcely fail to know considerable about this particular science.

"To All Canoers" (Universal).

Lessons in "safety first" methods of handling oneself in a canoe are given in the 77th issue of the Screen Magazine. The main points emphasized are don't change seats or stand up when canoeing, sit or kneel on the floor to be safe; don't stand on the gunwale unless you are an expert swimmer; exercise care in landing. It is also illustrated that an overturned canoe is a good life preserver.

"Wonders of Insect Life" (Universal).

The 77th number of the Screen Magazine gives a fine series of views, and much information concerning various kinds of insects which frequent the garden. Among these is the aphis or plant lice which are shown in magnified form on pea vines. The Lady-bug, which is a useful insect, is also introduced, showing its larva feeding on plant lice. Then there is the tufted grub of the tussock moth, which is very destructive, the grubs of the parsley butterfly and also their transformation, and the tomato grub parasite, showing its eggs on the back of its victim.

E. W. Hammons Establishes New Exchanges

Visit to Middle West Affords Glad Tidings of Educational Outlook.

E. W. HAMMONS, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, spent the third week of June in the Middle West on a flying visit to the Educational exchanges. While in Chicago and Detroit, Mr. Hammons established new exchanges in those cities, which will ensure a much better distribution of the concern's scenics, travels, animal pictures and cartoon comedies than has hitherto been possible. Announcement of these exchanges will be made shortly.

The number of first run houses contracting for Educationals throughout the United States is increasing rapidly. A notable instance is the yearly contract just entered into between Moore's Theaters Corporation of Washington, D. C., and the Educational. All the International cartoon comedies, including the Katzenjammer Kids and Happy Hooligans, will be put on by Tom Moore the first three days of each week at the Garden or the Strand theater. Mr. Moore herein follows the example of S. L. Rothapfel of the New York Rialto and Rivoli, and Harold Edel of the New York Strand, who have played up Educational films for years.

In the Far West a striking instance of the drawing power of scenic Educationals comes from the Columbia theater, Portland, Oregon, where "Alaska Wonders in Motion" was booked for a half week, but on account of the enormous demand was carried over to fill the entire week of May 19.

Mutual's First Outing-Chester Release

"An Ex-Cannibal Carnival" Comedy of Life of Ex-Head Hunters of Fiji Islands Due for Public Appearance.

THE first of the Outing-Chester series of travel pictures, which are being released by the Mutual Film Corporation, will appear June 30, and is entitled "An Ex-Cannibal Carnival." This picture constitutes a comedy of the life of the ex-head hunters of the Fiji Islands, who have now adopted meatless days, and who welcome white strangers with dancing and a drink of "Kava," instead of threatening them with unwilling participation in the evening meal.

The second of the series, due for release July 7, has already been reviewed in these columns and takes the spectator on a delightfully thrilling trip to the great South American cataract, Kaieteur. It was exhibited some weeks ago at the Strand theater, New York City, winning much praise for its interesting quality and splendid photography. The educational market today is offering nothing better in general good quality than the Outing-Chester Pictures.

Items of Interest.

The group of films entitled "Colonel Roosevelt's Exposition Into the Wilds," 2,000 feet of which was recently exhibited at the Strand theater, New York City, is owned by the Rondon Commission, of which Colonel Rondon is the head. The money realized on the sale of the pictures will be used, according to Luiz Reis, sales representative of the Rondon Commission in this country, for the furtherance of the education and civilization of the natives of interior Brazil under the supervision of the Brazilian government.

The eightieth issue of the Universal Screen Magazine contains an inspiring series of views taken on May Irwin's farm. To those interested in farming for profit this will be of value. This particular issue, which is not due for release until July 20, also contains considerable information, accompanied by a number of close-ups on the beetle, the scarab and the cricket, and some attractive pictures of prize-winning dogs and cats.

A new one-reeler about to be released by the Educational Films Corporation of America is entitled "Cigars for Kings and Millionaires." The region illustrated is the Vuelta Abajo district in the Pinar del Rio province of Cuba.

The second of the "Mexico Today" series, exhibited at the Rivoli during the week of June 9, gave a detailed illustration of the Necaxa dam and power plant.

"Our Invincible Navy," the splendid natural color production made by the Prizma, Inc., was exhibited at the Strand theater the week of June 16. This is the same series of pictures which ran at the 44th Street theater for several weeks during the winter. The Topical Review of the previous week contained the Educational Films Corporation's film, "The Friendly Bee," and interesting views from the potash fields of Trona, Cal., from the Hearst-Pathe News.

Thomas Meighan

IN Marguerite Clark's forthcoming production for Paramount release, "Out of a Clear Sky," which is now being completed at the eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the star is fortunate in having the support in the leading male role of Thomas Meighan, one of the best known and most popular of the screen's leading men. In "Out of a Clear Sky" Miss Clark plays the part of a Belgian princess who is being forced into an obnoxious marriage with a German nobleman. She comes to this country and, seeking a hiding-place in the mountains of Tennessee, meets a young mountaineer, portrayed by Mr. Meighan, who assists her to thwart the plotters.

Thomas Meighan.

Mr. Meighan's popularity is by no means confined to the picture-going public, for he is one of the most sought after leading men in the various producing units of the Famous Players - Lasky Corporation. His services have been in such demand in Paramount and Artcraft pictures that he has frequently been found working in two or more productions at the same time. He has been leading man at one time or another to nearly all the feminine stars of the organization.

Previous to this Marguerite Clark subject Mr. Meighan had the chief male role in support of Elsie Ferguson in the big western subject, which will be an Artcraft picture, adapted from "Pierre of the Plains," and released as "Heart of the Wilds." Mr. Meighan plays the part of Sergeant Tom, a Northwest Royal mounted policeman, in which capacity he takes part in sensational scenes, and as the lover of Miss Ferguson has some extremely dramatic moments.

Goldwyn Managers Hold Sales Conventions

Two-Day Meetings, at Which Future Policy is Outlined, Take Place in New York, Cleveland and Chicago.

TWO-DAY sales conventions of Goldwyn's managers and the salesmen from all nineteen of its American branches were held simultaneously June 22 and 23 in three cities—New York, Cleveland and Chicago.

In each instance an executive of Goldwyn's home office organization was present in charge of the regional convention, bringing with him the new sales policy of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for the season, which begins in September. Managers and salesmen were impressed with the fact that next year they will have productions featuring six established stars, in addition to the Rex Beach pictures, and that instead of twenty-six releases there will be more than fifty.

The eastern district convention was held in New York, and was presided over by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn. Present were: Samuel Eckman, Jr., manager of the New York City branch; George A. Hickey, Buffalo; Herbert W. Given, Philadelphia, and G. F. Lenehan, Washington. Salesmen from all of the offices in the territory also attended.

Alfred Weiss, a vice-president of Goldwyn, had charge of the central district meetings, which were attended by H. A. Bandy, manager of the Cleveland office; J. F. Flynn, of Detroit; C. C. McKibbin, of Pittsburgh, and A. J. Pincus, of Cincinnati.

The Middle West convention, held in Chicago, had Harold Bolster, another vice-president, and Messrs. Aaron J. Jones and Nathan Ascher as its heads. It was attended by H. J. Bayley, manager of the Chicago branch; Richard C. Fox, of Minneapolis; Paul Bush, of St. Louis, and Richard Robertson, of Kansas City.

The salesmen in every division of the territory were called in to the convention cities to hear the voice of the representative of the home office and to learn from him direct of the good things Goldwyn has in store for the coming producing year.

The western states convention is held in abeyance pending the arrival on the Pacific Coast of a Goldwyn executive, leaving in a few days with the official draft of the sales policy.

Baseball Close-Down Affects Sunday Shows

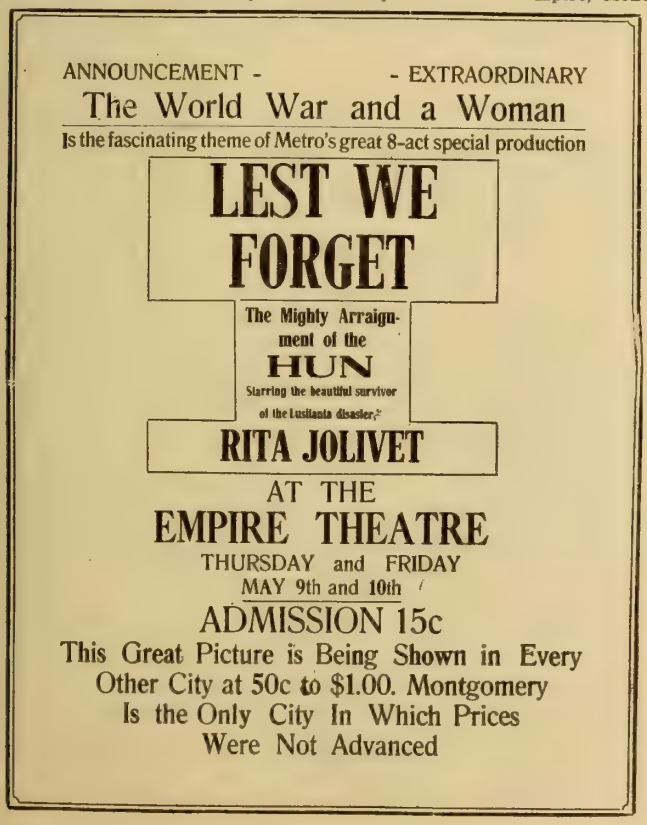
Demand for Seventh Day Pictures Increased in Nashville as a Result of Less Entertainment.

AT a meeting of southern league baseball officials in Nashville on June 10 it was decided to close down the premier Dixie organization on June 28. This action is expected to have an important bearing on the Sunday moving picture situation in Tennessee, and especially in Nashville, where an active fight has been waged for the past several months in an effort to get the shows opened on Sunday.

The effect of the baseball closing has been to take Sunday baseball away from Nashville, Memphis and Chattanooga, thereby leaving Sunday moving pictures as the only method of entertainment on the seventh day. Chattanooga was accorded Sunday pictures after a vigorous fight. Military authorities advised that a place of recreation was needed for the various camps in and around the city, so the shows were opened, and are running full blast on Sunday. In Memphis the shows also are running, yet the mayor of Nashville absolutely refuses to permit the houses to open and charge admission or allow contributions to be made by the audience.

The Nashville theaters are continuing to run several large uptown houses on Sunday, charging thrift stamp admittance. No profit is realized, and the owners are under a heavy expense in pursuing the policy. Each entrant is required to buy a thrift stamp at the box office, and, of course, permitted to keep the stamp. The moral effect of running a few shows, even at a loss, is expected to show the desire of Nashville for Sunday amusement, and should prove of benefit in the end.

Advertising for Exhibitors



Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Proofreading.

PROBABLY one of the chief contributing causes of poor advertising is to be found in poor proofreading, both by the management and the printing office. The printer is supposed to read proof only for the mistakes of his compositor. The rest lies to the advertiser, who is supposed to catch errors in names and titles made by himself and also to pick up the errors due to illegible writing and which may not fairly be blamed upon the compositor. Also he gets a chance to head off blunders the compositor so often makes and the proofroom does not catch. The other day a correspondent from Trenton sent in an advertisement of the Lyric theater in which Elsie Ferguson was announced in "Barbering Sheep." Of course the proofreader should have been sufficiently familiar with book titles to know that Barbary Sheep was intended, yet both the proofreader and the management permitted the hideous blunder to be aired in print. It is carelessness plus stupidity plus laziness to permit such a break to pass unnoticed, and yet no week passes which does not bring into this office examples of poor proofreading almost as bad. Any composing room foreman will be glad to show any advertiser how to read proof. It is no great mystery, and may be mastered in an hour, so far as the marks are concerned. The hard part is to develop the intelligent scrutiny that makes the errors apparent. Give more attention to proofreading. Do not leave it to the printer. He doesn't care a whoop whether your ad reads properly or not. It is not classed among the worries of his sinful life. It is up to you to see that you get what you want rather than what the printer thinks you should want. Go a step further than this. Get your copy in early and do not be afraid to tear apart a make-up that does not seem just right. Some of the samples sent in are disgraceful. And these errors react against the house. The patron is apt to argue that if the manager does not know how to spell a title or the name of a star, he is lying when he says that a play is great or a star unusually good. They lose faith in the announcement, and not without reason, and the fans are far better informed as to titles and spelling than many exhibitors seem to be, even though the latter may have the printed copy right in front of them for reference. To announce the title of the Hitchins novel as "Barbering Sheep" is not only to confess laziness, but ignorance of common literature that a live manager should be ashamed to own up to. Read your proofs, and read with care.

A Page to Be Read.

Here is an example of a page advertisement that does not try to carry too much type just because it happens to be a full page and not a two fives. It is sent in by H. C. Farley of the New Empire, Montgomery, Ala. Much more might have been said, but the chances are that the bold display makes the few simple lines carry greater conviction than would a crowded display. If you are accustomed to crowding a couple of hundred words into a few inches it is sometimes difficult to take a whole page and say even less, but the little you do say is far more apt to be read.

A Little Too Formal.

Annabel Davidson, who does the advertising work for the City, Strand and Rialto theaters, Brockton, Mass., sends in some samples asking for a criticism. We think from her signature that she is a newspaper graduate, but evidently she has not spent much time in the composing room during her newspaper days. Her advertising is generally good, but a bit too formal. It is all nicely lined off or boxed in or fenced around with border. The left hand example in the top cut is a three tens. It comes already cut from the page, so we cannot see what it had to fight in the way of other display, but the three-point rule border is a little too light if it is close to other large displays. It will be noticed that it all runs regular lines across the space save where the two smaller cuts break the space. Evidently the printer thought that white space was no good, for he has picked out a type for "Ambassador James W. Gerard's World Famous Story" which too completely blocks the film title. The "Graphically pictures in" should have gone in a light ten point, with the following line about as it is, but with the "world famous story" cut down to another ten to give some white space with which to show up the title. The text here is the weakest of the set sent in. There is no real fuss made over the film, no allusion to its long run on Broadway, no hint of the vivid scenes in the story. This was a chance to fairly bubble over, but the opportunity was not accepted and the announcement is rather dead. The printer helps a lot with his choice of type. That last line never should have been played up as it is. It could have gone in an eight point in the same space and would have looked even more conspicuous. There is a certain abruptness of announcement in the Rialto space "A thrilling tale of two borders, Canadian and Mexican," sounds too clipped. It does not sound interesting or inviting because it is too bald. "The story of a man who headed South from the Canadian border and reached Mexico," would have roused more curiosity. The two serials are also scamped. "The eighth story of 'The Son of Democracy'" is not so good as the chapter title would have been and the same holds good for the Vitagraph story. Better copy shows in the Strand space, but the diagonal line points the wrong away. Since we read from left to right, it is easier to read a diagonal if we start from the lower left-hand corner and read upward. Compare this with the "Intolerance" advertisement and you will find that the latter is much more easily read, though in part this is due to the lesser angle of ascent. This is apparently the New Bedford printer's limit in display work. The "Intolerance" space is six tens. The copy is fairly well written, but it does not get the reader gravely excited. It is a trifle too regular in its layout. Carrying the panel for the title clear to the right-hand margin would have killed some of the space, but would have broken the regularity and would have presented a better layout. The matter it displaces could have been set in eight point to almost as great an advantage. This regularity of make-up and a certain lack of jazz in the announcements are the chief faults. The general effect is slightly above the small town average, but could be improved if the printer can be induced to use some judgment in the choice of type faces. The best way to induce judgment in a printer is to mark the size and type to be used and make him follow instructions. Left to himself, he is certain to make an effort to fill the space with type as large as will go into it.

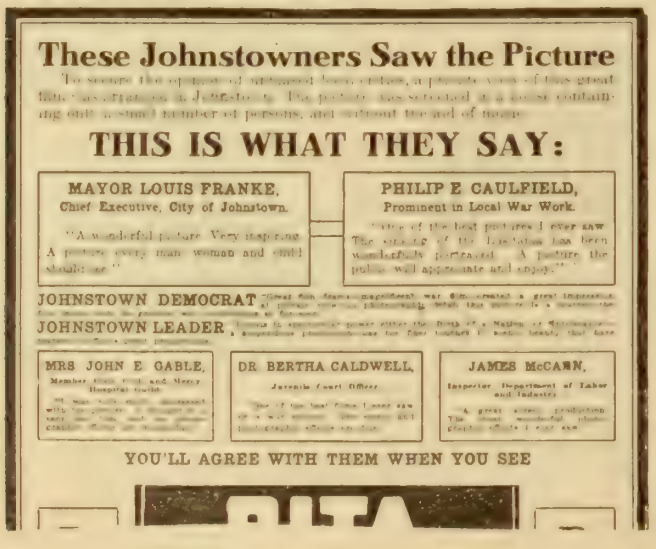
Half Addressed.



The Century, Brooklyn, sends out a weekly program and to save time it has half of the address already written in, for "Brooklyn, N. Y.," is printed on. This saves a lot of time in addressing and costs nothing since the envelope has to be printed up with the corner card. This latter is nicely done. There is a panded card with the name of the house and the management, the address and "Program for next week." Above and below are printed in box head Gothic "If not delivered in three days, return to" and "postage guaranteed." This last will insure the return of matter going out under one cent postage. The cheaper forms of addressing machines are the real solution of the mailing problem, but if for any reason one of these cannot be put in, the half-printed address is the next best help.

Here's Something New.

L. W. Barclay, of the Grand Amusement Company, Johnstown, Pa., operating four houses, offers something that is new to us when he writes:

> I am inclosing several ads on two of our houses the Grand and the Parkview. The stunt we used on "Lest We Forget" might be used to advantage by others, so long as the picture they try it on is good. It brought excellent results for us here.
> When we booked "Lest We Forget" it was with the knowledge that we'd have to push the prices up to a quarter to make the picture pay. We had the exchange send us the film for a private Sunday showing two weeks ahead of the playing date and had the city officials, newspapermen, and other local folks on hand to look it over. Then we used their comments on the film in our advance advertising.
> The other ad we are sending show about our usual run of newspaper "pull."
> The one big trouble in the theater advertising proposition is the lack of really good cuts. The stuff the producers send us is generally very bad, and this is rather hard on the house in the middle-sized city that can't afford to have special layouts drawn for cuts on the various pictures.

Have you let that second paragraph sink in? They advertise the film with local indorsements gained from a private showing. This will not be worked exactly in states where Sunday shows are permitted, but look at the top of this three-column advertisement and think what it would mean if you could do the same thing. If you cannot call up the film for a prior showing, perhaps you can take the formers of opinion to some nearby town where the film is being shown. It is worth the money if you have something you want to show an extra profit. The full advertisement is three fourteens, which is doing nicely for a small town, and the display is well balanced. The group cut shows a smaller form of the same advertisement, a three nines. The Nazimova advertisement is a four elevens. The real advertisement is just below the portrait. The small type shows the trade paper reviews. We like better, however, the four sevens for Theda Bara. It recalls past successes in the same house and tells what the new story will contain. But best of all the work is the single ten for the Grand; the one on the extreme left. It begins "Well balanced. That's the term that describes the program at this theater, not on occasion, but always." The house that can live up to that billing is already half way to success. It is more than half way, for the well balanced bill will look better than a well chosen feature of three or four times the rental cost and a poor comedy that completely kills the effect. Johnstown seems to be entitled to its place on the advertising map and we are sorry that Mr. Barclay is just putting in his claim. He should have come in long ago, but now that he has started we hope that he keeps on coming.

Philadelphia Programs.

Jay Emanuel has left the Park and Jefferson theaters to become one of those despicable film salesmen one of our contemporaries takes so much delight in roasting. We always knew that Jay would come to some bad end, living in Philadelphia as long as he has, but we didn't suppose he would ever become a salesperson. Usually he has been the buyer, whether it was films or wet goods.

We could tell that Jay was either away from the Jeff-Park or else off on a buying trip, for the last monthly program is a screamer. In working over a program reader to suit two houses the grammar becomes mixed and you are told that you are on your way to the best photoplay houses in your vicinity and that you do not have to hunt for it. All the way through the singular and plural numbers are badly mixed. But the program is as bad. Ethel Clayton is announced in "The Witch" instead of "The Witch Woman," Henry B. Walthall is announced in "Rundrom Brown" instead of "Humdrum Brown," the article is omitted from "The Bluebird," "The Brass Check" and similar titles, Cecil De Mille's "The Whispering Chorus" is translated "Whispering Love," Jack Pickford is appearing in "His Majesty," which is more suggestive of His Royal Highness than of "Bunker Bean," Madge Kennedy is showing in "Little Wife" instead of "Our Little Wife," and shades of Jim! "Sir Jef. Robertson" is seen in "Masks and Faces" instead of "Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson." We do not recall such poor preparation before. It's the limit. Even a new manager is supposed to have a little intelligence and can get his billing from the house dope if he cannot carry it in his head.

Lubin's, Vineland, N. J., uses a sad blue stock and it sets too much copy in too small a space. A vest pocket should not be expected to carry elaborate billing and even descriptions. A change in stock would help and less type would help more.

The Rex, a negro house, opened May 8 and announces it will "make no distinction in race, color or creed." The Paramount people should slip over and book the Lincoln Cycle in there. The program is not badly prepared, but is too profuse in the use of superlatives. The patron is led to expect too much.

The Bridesburg uses a similar program, a plain white 4x6. It announces a weekly bill, daily change, and offers six admissions on the week, tax paid, for 65 cents. Presumably the admissions are limited to the week for which it is sold. The general admission price is not stated, but if it is 15 cents, this strip ticket is a good [illegible]. The days are nicely dated and not too much copy is used, with a good choice of display types.

The Fairmount, a Zimmermann house, gets a rather messy looking job of printing. The ink offsets and the borders are off their feet. The days are not dated and the too-common error is made of giving the same display to star and play, which detracts from the display of both.

The Regent and Victoria are now using the two-front-pages idea, the manner of folding determining whether it is the Regent or Victoria program. It gives a very casual mention of "Tarzan of the Apes" as the attraction at the Victoria. It looks more like an underline than an announcement of the current attraction. Someone must be fast asleep over there. Even with a film above the average you must advertise to make money.

There seems to be an utter lack of aggressiveness in the Philadelphia program. It is a wonder that they even get out programs.

Knows Better.

Someone around the Grand theater, Williamsport, Pa., with a trick signature that might be J. something Bedford, sends in a three nines with this K. C. B.:

No advertising staff artists.
A small town paper.
Must lay out ad in detail to get any kind of results.
Small theater.
Space limited.
Enclosing you one of our ads.
Think it better than some we have seen in your department.
Think it is a damsight worse than most.
Hope to do better * * * if
You will just hop on to this.
Don't be too hard on us.
This is just a start for a poor boob.
Who thinks.
He may do better some day.
We're ready for the pan, go to it.

P. S.—Get us right, we are not trying to be funny, we're dam serious.

We think the correspondent knows he has got a pretty good looking advertisement, but one good advertisement does not make a publicity man, and we would like to see more samples. You will note that he makes his layout which is why he gets a good type display. We think that we would have played up the local player more strongly even at the expense of the small type bank that follows. The second bank is argument enough, and so there was room and to spare. As it is there is a little too much small type in both sections of the ad to make really good display. On the other hand, the panel work here done effectively shows a good use of rule work. There are two distinct announcements held together by the break which is something different from one play announced in two sections. And we like the restraint of the underline. It is not intrusive, and yet it is there to be seen. But we think we would have shortened those panels a little to give three lines and a better drop to the "on the same program." This would give greater emphasis to the double feature, though we can't see why anyone should want to sit through ten reels.

Should Be Able to Spell.

Anyone who lives in Punxsutawney, Pa., and is liable to spell the name of the town correctly should be able to tackle anything, but in a recent issue of a local paper, out of three houses the Gem advertises Norma "Talmage" and the Majestic announces Mabel "Norman." The missing D is supplied by the fan, it is to be presumed. More than that the quotation "The little girl you can't forget" is spoiled in the Normand advertisement by merely quoting "little girl" instead of the entire catch phrase. It is not recorded that either house offers a prize for misspelled words, but if they did———!

Circusing the Kaiser.

W. L. Woodin of the Keystone Opera House, Towanda, Pa., sends in a circus bill he got out for The Kaiser. "Circus bill" is what he calls it and circus bill is right. We don't know where Mr. Woodin learned how, but he doesn't have to back down before Dexter Fellows and the rest of the adjective slinging crew; not that Mr. Woodin offends in this regard, but because he has produced a piece of paper with the real circus pull. It is a sheet 11x25 and was evidently got out to drag in the surrounding towns, for the entire county is warned by name to come and see it at the Keystone or forever after lose their chance. This is the first honest-to-goodness hustle advertising we have seen for The Kaiser. It was made to be circussed. It brings in the most money when it is circussed, and yet few Exhibitors seem to have gone at it from the proper angle for the entire clean-up. What if the film does more than make good with an indifferent advertising campaign? If there is one ten-cent piece coming to you that you didn't get you have lost some money on the film. We wish we could reproduce this bill, but the yellow stock prevents. It is ideal for its purpose both in layout and copy. Mr. Woodin is "there" with the goods. This holds good for all sensational subjects, whether they are propaganda or not. You must make a fuss over them to get your money, and the more fuss you make the more money you will get, and we take it that is what you are in business for. Lately we told how S. Barret McCormick spent $4,000 and cleaned up on the Gerard film. Mr. Woodin cleaned up just as much in proportion sending this circus paper into the surrounding towns. Don't use small throwaways. They won't do. You never saw a real circus put out a 5x8 throwaway. Neither should you when you want to raise a riot. And mind you the bill is not glaringly sensational. It does not fairly drip blood. It just reads to get your interest, that's all.

Imported Blotters.

One of the dangers of having advertising done out of town is a possible change of bill. The Third Street, Easton, Pa., had to overprint the face of the blotter recently and then print on the blotting side because their blotters were printed in New York and sent down to them and the bill for the week was changed while the programs were on the way down. Mr. Buss, by the way, has gone into the photographic division of the Signal Corps and is studying at Columbia University.

Loud But Permissible.

Distributed matter should be carefully considered, especially stuff that is liable to come into the hands of children. Hennegan has got out an ingenious advertisement for "The Kaiser" that would be outside the pale for any picture but a strong propaganda. It is a card 2¾ by 9 inches, with the upper 3½ inches fouled over on itself. At the top the text reads, "Take off his mask and give him"; just below is a circular window showing a red "H" on the under card. The rest of the fold is a partial picture of the Kaiser matching with the lower half of the under picture. Raising the card transforms the Kaiser into the Devil and the red H now becomes the initial letter to "Heartrending and Horrible Cruelty." The idea is clever and even permissible, but we think it would have been better to have left the H out where the piece is apt to come into the hands of so many children. Even less good is the epitaph adorning the back page. Even in propaganda film not all things are permissible in the advertising matter. Someone who writes from Cincinnati, but says he is a West Virginia exhibitor, sends the novelty in.

NOTICE.

Owing to illness, Mr. Sargent will be unable to reply to any inquiries whether a return envelope accompanies the questions or not. No exceptions to this rule can be made, perhaps, for several months.

Camouflage.

BECAUSE the synopsis is merely the story or a story, it does not follow that the story should not be told with care. It is still more important that you stick to the story and refrain from seeking to impress the editor with your literary skill. Too many beginners, and not a few better practised writers, seem to think that if they can interest the editor in the way the story is written they can make a sale. This is an error. Most editors can tell the difference between verbiage and plot. If you have your heroine make a pie do not devote several paragraphs to telling how delicious that pie is. That will not show on the screen. You may make the editor's mouth water, but you are trying to sell him a story and not a pie, so advertise your story and not the pastry. All that will show on the screen is that the heroine makes a pie. Tell that and then go on to the next fact. Do not enlarge upon the pie or how adorable Dora looks with her cheeks flushed with the heat from the stove and an adorable dab of flour on her pert little nose. The color will not show and the star may have a beak like a parrot. Tell about the pie and then what happens to the pie, but leave out the rhapsody. This holds doubly good in the case of a comedy story. Don't try to make the editor laugh at your words, but at the scenes your words conjure up—and it is seldom that the two go together. Tell what will be funny and you can be as solemn as a henpecked man at the marriage of his best friend and still impress the editor, but try to write something that will be good enough to print and you'll find that it should be printed instead of filmed and that you have sent it to the wrong man. Give the editor a good plot and he will not care whether you are a literary genius or the graduate of a correspondence school. All he wants is plot, a clear, understandable plot, and the less you camouflage it with words the better. This does not mean that you should cut down to the barest mention of the facts, but that every phase should exemplify the plot rather than your cleverness of expression. Do not say that "Marie breaks Ben's heart and their engagement at the same time." Say rather that Marie breaks her engagement and add that Ben is heartbroken. The former phrase may sound smart, but the latter gives the facts in their order. You will have all you can do to get the story down plainly and attractively without trying to dress it up with smart phrasing and meaningless sentences. You can tell your story plainly and yet vividly. There is a difference between the attractive presentation of facts and an effort to be smart. You must be interesting if you would interest the editor, but interesting him in the story and not in your method of expression.

Don't Grouch and Work.

Don't try to do creative work when you feel that the whole world is wrong. You'll probably write sour, cynical stories that no one wants, and you'll not be sufficiently cynical to be clever. You don't have to bubble over with joy in order to write good stuff, but the better you feel the better your story is apt to be unless long practice has made you proficient in doing your stunt no matter what your personal feelings. Don't ever argue that you feel too rotten to do anything else, so you'll write a story. That may work after you have been on the job a dozen years, but it never works with the beginner and it is apt to leave an after effect that is not easy to eradicate.

Hold to Your Character.

Don't get the idea that you can make too many people interesting. If you can interest an audience in just one person, that is all you need do. If you are writing for a star, it is even more important that all the other persons and events be made a background for the star, yet writers will persist in wandering from the track and writing in a lot of side developments in which the star has no part whatever. This will not do. The audience must be presented a single question, and all of the action must contribute directly toward the answer. Side action is interesting only as it applies to the response to that question. The fact that Jim chokes John is interesting only because if he succeeds in his attempt at murder John cannot marry Jane as you want him to, not so much because you are interested in John as because Jane is, and you are interested in all that concerns Jane's happiness. It is this centralization of interest that makes a play. The lack of it spoils all chances of success. Pick out your chief character in advance and write all of your action around that character. Do not try to write three or four lines of distinct but related action and then unite them at the finish. Be clear and explicit.

Study the Wants.

If you hear that a certain company wants stories of a certain type, study that type of story. Don't shoot in a lot of stuff you think might suit. Make certain that it does suit exactly. Not long ago we advised a writer that a certain type of story was wanted. The result was a slapstick comedy that was hardly strong enough for a reel when the demand was for a light comedy-drama in five reels. The author simply went ahead without investigation and sent in the product, still ignorant of the company's actual wants. It does not pay, as a rule, to write material to suit one particular company, but most assuredly it does not pay to send in any old idea on the off chance that it might possibly get by. You can at least select from the material at hand the types of stories best suited to the advertised needs.

Write Ready Mades.

We know of an author who is filled with an ambition to write for a certain star, and he will not be deterred by the fact that this star has a personal author who prepares all of her scripts, generally from published novels. As the star has a marked personality and the author writes to suit this personality, it follows that the stories are not available for the use of others, and so the effort is completely wasted unless persistence is at last rewarded in the shape of a staff job. The star system makes for the special staff writer. Pray for the abolition of the star system and the use of star stories, and in the meanwhile write stories that are stories and not merely vehicles for a certain star. The Chaplin business heads are particularly irritating in this respect. If an author queries the company he is cordially invited to send in, and then he gets his script back with the statement that all Chaplin comedies are specially written. Naturally, in view of this fact, he imagines that he has been asked to send in that any suggestions he has to offer may be appropriated. In reality the business end, through a mistaken idea of friendliness, welcomes the script, which is then turned over to the script department which gives the reply which should have been sent in the first place. It is not dishonesty, but merely a bungling policy of trying to make friends for the brand which has a decidedly reverse effect.

Propaganda Stories.

It is useless to try the open market with propaganda material. Most of this material is written by arrangement with those interested in the propaganda, particularly with propaganda not having to do with the prosecution of the war. The outsider cannot know the particular points the propagandists wish to emphasize, and so their stores are apt to fall short. The general scheme is for the propagandists to interest some company in the making of a story. The producing company either has the story written or refers to some author whom it thinks can do the work. In either case the continuity writer confers with the society as to the exact points to be brought out and the plot is changed and revised until these points are clearly emphasized. The free lance writer stands no chance at all unless he works with strong influence at his back. This applies with double force to the war propaganda. Here the story must be carefully written and exactly suit. Merely riding your own hobby will not serve.

Get Action.

Don't write the synopsis of a story until you have sat down and have seen it acted before your mental gaze. The ideal way to write a synopsis would be first to do the continuity and then make the synopsis from this continuity, offering the synopsis only for sale. Then you will be certain that your story can be made in action. It has happened more than once that a company has bought an interesting story only to find that the idea cannot be told in action. This has resulted in a film so stuffed with leaders that the story fails to score, and the author and not the poor judgment of the editor is blamed for the result. The mere fact that you are writing synopsis and not continuity does not release you from the need of writing material that can be worked into a continuity without trouble. You still need technique, even though you may not seem to use it.

In Summer.

Don't get the idea that just because it is hot weather you cannot write. If you are looking for an excuse to loaf, that is as good an excuse as any, perhaps, but there is no real excuse for loafing. Write in the bath-tub or under the trees, if you will, but keep on writing, or you will find when the weather cools off again that you must do much of the work over again. Better ten minutes work once a day, every day, than a hundred minutes work once a week most weeks. Get the habit of regularity and you will find that work becomes a pleasure or, at least, is robbed of much of its drudgery. In the summer your vitality very probably will be lowered by the excessive heat, but if it gets so hot that you cannot think you would do well to see a physician. Take a couple of weeks off, if you will, but do not lay off the entire summer. You'll be all out of practice in the fall.

Reversed Emotions.

If you only knew it, you should be obliged, sometimes, to the man who sends back your script. It might be worse if he made it.

TECHNIQUE OF THE PHOTOPLAY

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. Manufacturers' Notice.

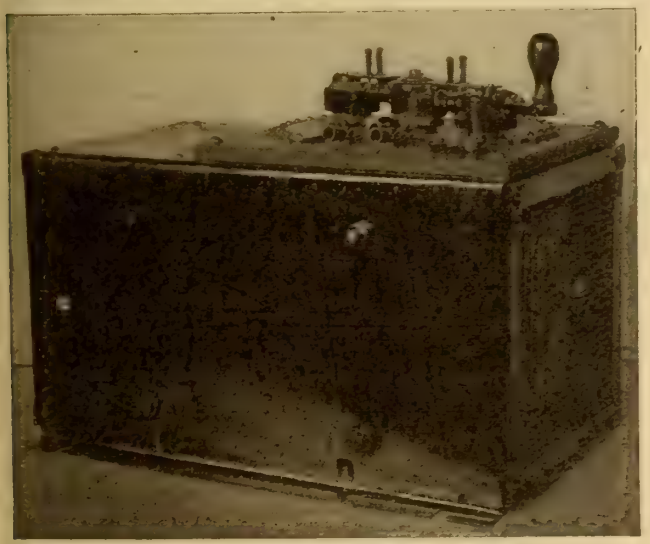
IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

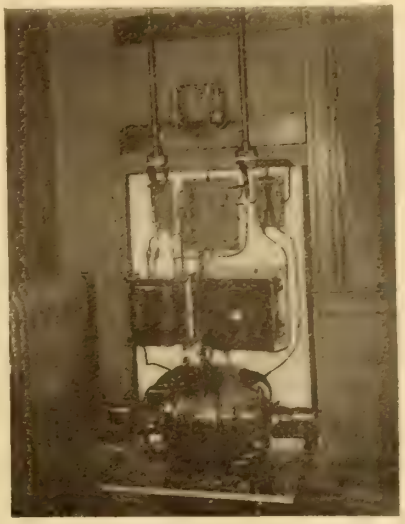
Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.



Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

The Wagner Converter.

The purpose of my visit to St. Louis was primarily to examine the Wagner Converter and set before our readers such details with regard to it and its performance as may seem desirable. The Wagner Converter is well known to the motion picture fraternity, having been on the market for four or five years. It is a compact apparatus, having a very satisfactory electrical efficiency, as has been proven by former tests published in this department at the time of my last visit to the plant.



The Wagner Company's outfit is a current rectifying device of the converter type. As between the regular motor-generator set and the converter the difference consists in the following: The motor-generator is nothing more nor less than a D. C. generator of suitable amperage capacity and voltage range driven by an alternating current motor designed to work at the line voltage and frequence of the supply circuit. The converter, on the other hand, consists of one machine only, which in general has the performance of a standard D. C. generator. It has a commutator, and the brushes on the commutator end have exactly the same function as the brushes on a D. C. generator. In addition to the commutator, however, there are two or more slip-rings mounted on the shaft on the opposite end from the commutator. These rings will be seen at the left in the illustration and the commutator at the right. The slip-rings are connected to a small, stationary A. C. transformer, the primary side of which is connected to the A. C. line.

The impressed A. C. voltage and the resultant direct current voltage bear a fixed relation to each other; for instance, if 50 volts A. C. be impressed at the slip-rings then the D. C. commutator will deliver 75 volts. If more than 75 volts D. C. is required an A. C. voltage larger than 50 volts must be impressed on the slip-rings. This is accomplished by providing the A. C. transformer with special, higher voltage taps. In other words, the machine is, by means of the transformer, which is an integral part thereof, adjustable either for the purpose of obtaining a higher direct current voltage at the lamp or to compensate for fluctuations in line voltage. This is accomplished by means of a change in tap connections in the transformer, the coils and connections of which are seen just above and to the left of the converter. The switch leading to the alternating current supply is the two-pole, single-throw switch immediately above the transformer. In addition to this switch a four-pole switch will be seen to the right of the two-pole switch just mentioned. This four-pole, double-throw switch is marked "Start" on one side, the other side is marked "Running." In order to start the converter throw the four-pole, double-throw switch into position marked "Start." Leave the switch closed in this position until converter has reached approximately normal speed, which will occur in ten to fifteen seconds. Then throw the switch into the position marked "Running." The machine will now be ready to deliver D. C. current on the commutator end. One peculiarity of the machine is that the polarity of the brushes on the D. C. side cannot be predetermined. Sometimes the top brush is positive and sometimes negative, and this makes necessary an additional two-pole, double-throw switch in order to change polarity. This switch is shown in the upper right-hand corner of the switchboard. If it should happen that the converter has picked up with wrong polarity all that is necessary is to throw the double-throw switch in the opposite position.

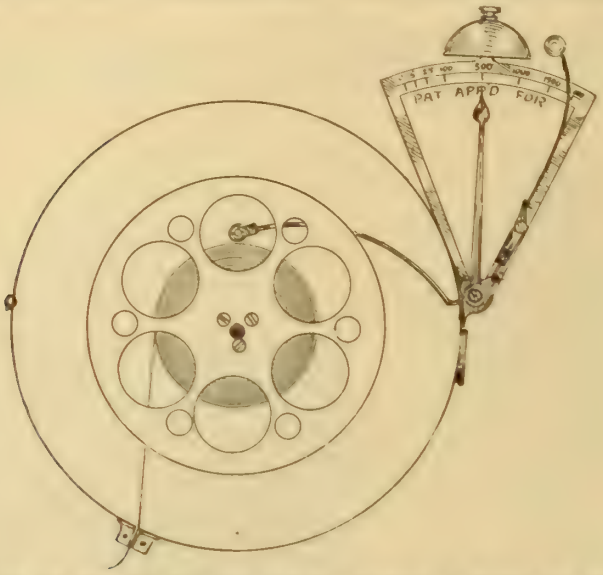
50 Ampere Wagner Converter Installed at the Victoria Theater, Watertown, Mass.

In order to obtain a steady arc it has been found essential that a certain amount of resistance be introduced between the arc and the D. C. supply. For this reason a certain amount of resistance is connected into the D. C. line. This resistance is shown in the right, lower corner, just above the converter. It is inclosed in a pressed steel, ventilated case.

In cases where two arcs are to be fed from the same converter, and where it is desired to gradually increase the brilliancy of one and decrease the brilliancy of the other a duplex resistance, or, as the Wagner Company term it, "Duplex Arc Regulator," is used. This resistance makes it possible to gradually decrease the brilliancy of the arc in use, and to gradually increase the brilliancy of the arc to be used. It is by this operation that the act of change-over is accomplished. The cutting out of resistance on one arc and cutting it in on the other is accomplished by simply moving this handle from one extreme position into the other extreme position. The arc of the idle machine is thus gradually developed to full brilliancy, and the arc of the running machine gradually extinguished.

The manufacturer claims a machine efficiency of from 70 to 75 per cent. when operating on 220 volts A. C. supply. This, however, does not include the resistance loss. The Wagner machine is mechanically well built; also the materials used in its construction are high grade. The Wagner Converter is built for single phase or polyphase current. One improvement that has recently been adopted is to make it possible to operate the arc even in case of a break down in the converter. In this case the arc will be connected directly across the leads of the A. C. transformer. In others words, the leads, which normally are connected to the commutator brushes, will be connected to the leads of the A. C. transformer which normally would be connected to the slip-rings of the converter. This arrangement is known as "Emergency A. C. Supply."



While at the Wagner plant I had the privilege of talking with Mr. J. F. Jones, of the sales department, and Mr. H. Weichsel, of the engineering department.

Film Indicator.

The J. K. E. Company, Seattle, Washington, have submitted working model of their indicator, designed to warn the operator when to prepare his second machine for the change-over. The operation of the device is quite clearly shown in the illustration, except as to the "trigger," which is adjustable and may be set to ring the bell at any desired distance from end of reel.

The operation is entirely mechanical and, barring possible variation caused by out-of-center reel hubs, or out-of-center film roll caused by some other agency, such as, for instance, a humped-up hub spring, ought to function with at least very reasonable accuracy. I would, however, suggest the making of the component parts, aside from the frame itself, a trifle more substantially. Of course there is nothing in the operation of the device to call for strong parts, but it seems to me the trigger part is unnecessarily light; also the coil spring is too light.

It does not ring the bell loud enough. However I believe the model submitted is mostly hand made and very likely the finally finished, ready-to-be-marketed device would not be properly subject to these criticisms. But there is one change I would by all means advise, viz.: so arrange that the roller at end of arm in magazine will run on film track. In fact the arm should in my judgement, end in a fork, without rollers. True the arm is very light but it is nevertheless possible, with the roller not rollering as might happen that a scratch could result. The scale of feet would be approximate only and not even that when a large-hub (5-inch hub) reel is used. This is however, of slight importance. A convenient catch holds the magazine arm up out of the way while treading.

Altogether, within its limitations as a mechanical device, the indicator is basically well designed. I shall be very glad to have the opinion of several practical theater operators who are using the device as soon as they have been marketed. One thing makes me particularly willing to recommend its purchase without hesitation and that is the unequivocal statement of the company. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. You cannot very well lose on that proposition. Address of company supplied if stamped post card is sent for same.

An Odd Mixture.

> It is not often that you hear from a fellow out in the sticks who is trying to solve the light ray problem. I have spent 12 years at the crank, two of them in the Forum, of Omaha, then one of Omaha's best. Came out here at good salary and have ample time for study and experiment. As you no doubt know there are eight different kinds of light rays, of which the visual has three distinct rays. Light rays travel by vibration, and before the eye can see them the vibrations must be 500 or more per second, which is the rate for low red. Hot iron, which looks black to the eye, gives off light rays, but the rate of vibration is too low to make them visible. I do not believe we shall ever solve the light ray problem until we have condensers and lenses which will focus all vibrations at an equal distance at one time. There came upon the market a concave screen. It was a failure because the lens used therewith was ground for a flat surface. I claim that with a lens ground for a concave surface such a screen, would help solve much of the difficulty of securing a perfect sharpness of definition. (You are badly twisted, brother. The concave screen was introduced because the lenses in use WERE designed for use with just that kind of a screen, or at least were not corrected finely enough, if that is the right word, to secure sharp definition all over the flat field. But the concave screen set up other troubles which were worse than the one which it did remedy. The concave screen had little or no value except with short focal length lenses.—Ed.) And here is another theory in which I think you will bear me out, viz.: If we could filter out all the light rays but the ultra violet we would have a perfect screen illumination. The Amberlux Lens is a step in that direction. (Are you not putting that backwards? The Amberlux filters out the ultra violet, which is presumed to be injurious to the eyes. I think, from what you say further on that you must mean precisely the opposite from what you have actually said.—Ed.) In this connection let me say that inasmuch as the mercury arc rectifier tube gives off a large percentage of ultra violet rays it ought never to be installed in the projection room. The light from the tube, if allowed to flood the projection room, will in time work serious injury to the nervous system of the men therein. To sum up, we will never get the acme of result until we have a condenser or lens which will filter out all unnecessary rays and focus all rays at the same point. (Some considerable lens. Ed.) I have perfected a process for cooling the light ray at the condenser so that when it reaches the aperture it is cool enough to allow of the film being stopped in the full power of the ray for ten minutes. Has such a thing any commercial value?

I have given this letter space as a somewhat queer mixture of fact and impossible ideas. I am not very well up in the various light ray vibrations, but broadly what the brother says on that subject is true, but its utilization in projection is quite another matter. The "focusing of different rays at different distances from the lens," of which he speaks, is nothing more or less than chromatic aberration, and lenses may easily be made to correct that fault. The trouble is that such lenses are too high in price to use for condensers until such time as condenser breakage can be entirely eliminated. That is what puts the quietus on this particular thing. The question of rectifier tube rays being injurious to health is a serious one indeed, though it has no bearing as applies to actual use of the instrument, but merely as to its location, or the suppression of its tube light, a thing this department has long insisted upon, though for other reasons than the one now set up. Paint your rectifier tube black, and keep it painted black, as and always has been my advice if the instrument is in the projection room. As to the ray-cooling process that is easily done, but to date all processes have either been too cumbersome or too wasteful in light absorption. If you have something really practical from all view points it should have commercial value.

Maryland Law.

Recently a law proposing to govern the licensing of projectionists was introduced in the Maryland legislature. The act as originally presented held a clause requiring on the examining board "one master electrician to represent the building inspector's office of Baltimore City." This the exhibitors insisted be changed to read, "One exhibitor duly licensed to operate motion picture machines." This may be all very well, but it looks a bit queer to find exhibitors insisting on representation on a board of this kind. It is quite possible they have in mind the preventing of licensing of any but high grade projectionists who are expert in their business, but there will be those inclined to question that proposition. The projectionists, through their representative, G. Howard Kingston, opposed this change, but conceded it when it was agreed that instead of designating another member of the board as "one licensed moving picture machine operator" it be, "one moving picture machine operator, a member of the moving picture operators union." Now I know I shall not be at all popular when I say I am opposed to that also. I do not think it is right or proper to incorporate into law the proposition that a board member shall belong to any specified body. In my opinion the whole thing, as applies to both projectionist and exhibitor members of the examining board, is wrong, both in principle and in practice. I do not blame the projectionists for insisting on the insertion of this clause when they found the exhibitors insisted that they themselves be represented on the board, but I do object to the whole proceeding as tending to in a measure defeat the very purpose for which such a board is formed. Members of the examining board are state officers, and as such cannot, without prostitution of their office, interest themselves in but one thing, viz.: The qualification of candidates for license to project motion pictures. If this is all that they have in view then why are Maryland exhibitors and projectionists so very anxious about having representation on the examining board? Personally, I strongly suspect the exhibitor wants to get just as many men licensed as is possible without too much fussing about competency, while the projectionists want to limit license, and maybe temper the wind to the shorn lamb to some extent in some instances. The exhibitors tried to get the proposed age limit of 21 years reduced to 18, but in that they failed. The original draft proposed that applicants for license should have at least one year of experience under a licensed operator, or two years' experience operating a moving picture machine. This was cut to "six months experience operating a moving picture machine," which is, if the exhibitors secured the change, as I understand they did, an example of a man handing himself a vigorous slap on his own face. This by reason of the fact that, while the inexperienced projectionist works injury to the whole industry, he injures the exhibitor more than any other one individual. There has always been more or less trouble between Maryland projectionists and exhibitors over the examining board make-up. In my humble opinion this is something worse than a lot of energy wasted. I believe the projectionists will be willing to keep hands off the make-up of the board if the exhibitors will do likewise, and that both would be gainers if this were done.

Take-Up Trouble.

Edward Rosen, Frankfort, Maine, has trouble with his take-up, which he describes as follows:

> Am an interested reader of the department, and have obtained much valuable information therefrom. From your descriptions of theaters I find that although I am now operating in a small town still our equipment is not so far behind the times, though we are constantly trying to improve. Have a Power's Six, which has been working very nicely, but all of a sudden when machine is in operation the crank will go around two, three or maybe four times alright, then once or twice it will go very hard, varying that way. It runs alright without the film, or with the film allowed to drop free upon the floor. Why should it be different when lower reel is in action?

That is rather hard to say. When it is running hard test the film between the lower sprocket and the fire-valve of the lower magazine. It is pulled very tight—much tighter than when machine runs easy—hen the trouble is in the take-up tension or in the take-up belt. Maybe or some reason the belt slips freely on the small pulley in all but one ection of its length. If that is it, then tighten your belt and adjust our take-up friction, which is too tight. If it is not in the belt hen examine the take-up tension very carefully, taking it apart. Also ake its spindle out and examine it. The trouble lies in the take-up, nd, knowing this, a little ingenuity in testing the various points in-olved (belt, spindle, and friction) should locate it.

Suggests New Form of Handbook.

B. A. Aughinbaugh, Mingo, Ohio, arises to remark:

> "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread," says the poet, so I am constrained to once more obtrude myself upon your notice. Your masterpiece, "Motion Picture Handbook," makes me feel that if you were to publish another book, or even a pamphlet or series of articles in the projection department entitled "Projection Troubles and How to Correct Them" it would find instant favor. You will doubtless remark: Well, what is my Handbook for anyhow? Allow me to explain. Let us suppose a projectionist notes a floating, up-and-down motion in his picture. The first question is, "Where shall I look for the seat of this particular trouble?" The answer is doubtless contained in the Handbook, but it takes considerable search to find it. If there were a heading, "Up and Down Motion of Picture on the Screen," followed by the various possible causes all this searching would be eliminated. Might say this idea occurred to me after reading Henry Ford's Manual for his automobile. For example, the Manual has one heading, "A Knock in Engine." He then describes the various kinds, and tells how to distinguish them from each other; also he sets forth the means for correction. The whole psychology of the matter is this: We note the result of mechanical troubles before we note the troubles themselves, hence the trouble results should form the headings of a book rather than the troubles themselves. This fact is proven by the number of times you have yourself been obliged to refer owners of your Handbook to certain passages therein. Get a Ford Manual and examine its make-up. Does it not help the novice to correct or to find troubles quickly? I am having this floating, up-and-down motion in one of our American Standards (this machine, too, just came back from the factory, where it was put into supposedly first class condition), and I'll be hanged if I can adjust it out, or find the answer in the Handbook, which I have come to regard as my Projection Bible.

I have long realized and recognized the value of the form of instruction book you describe, yet I deliberately chose the form I use in the Handbook. Why? Well, for the simple reason that I want the men who have charge of the projection rooms to have REAL, GENUINE KNOWLEDGE. If you had such a convenient trouble finder, Friend Aughinbaugh, you doubtless would use it wisely and well, but how many would do that? How many thousands of projectionists would place reliance in the aid of such a book, when in trouble, instead of equipping themselves with real KNOWLEDGE. I regard such a book, as applied to projection, as the equivalent of what you, I think, call "cribbing" in examinations. I want the projectionist to have comprehensive knowledge of his business, and that he cannot and will not get without study. The man who owns a handbook and studies it as he ought to study it won't have to search very much when he gets into trouble, because he will have the necessary knowledge stored up in his mind where it should be. I am not so much concerned about the "novice" nowadays. If the novice will serve a competent apprenticeship, as he should, he won't be a novice when he takes charge of projectors. And right there lies the big trouble. For some inexplicable reason men imagine they can jump in, spend a week or two in a projection room, and, presto, they are projectionists. It can't be done. If the Ford owner, through lack of knowledge, ruins or injures his car, it is his car, he is the loser, and it is his privilege to raise merry hallelujah with his own property if he sees fit. But neither the films or the machinery ordinarily belong to the projectionist, and that is very different; also he can do large damage to the screen result if he lacks knowledge, and that works injury to all concerned. For these reasons, genuine knowledge is necessary to the projectionist. As to the trouble in your Standard projector the answer is to be found in General Machine Instructions in the Handbook, but it is scattered through several instructions. No man could tell you what is the trouble without knowing just what sort of jump it is. It may be due to dirt on face of intermittent sprocket, improperly adjusted tension springs, intermittent sprocket itself not true (rare these later days), intermittent sprocket shaft sprung (almost impossible with Standard), worn intermittent shaft bushings, excessive wear or loose adjustment of intermittent movement, worn intermittent sprocket, old films or films with inaccurate perforations.

Please do not imagine I am taking a swipe at you, Friend Aughinbaugh. Your case is exceptional, you being a school principal and interested in projection for the school benefit only. Yours is a separate field from the regular theatrical work, and one demanding quite different treatment, but in my position it is very hard to differentiate.

All Wrong—But Right.

H. H. Burg, secretary-treasurer Tacoma Theater Managers' Association, has this to say concerning an article in May 4 issue:

> Concerning your "apologies, the Man Is Right," page 493, May 4 issue, you are all wrong! Punches are bad. Indicators get out of order. There is one way to detect the change-over time which never fails, provided the projectionist be not reading a paper or talking to a visitor, viz.: Split a long subtitle, leaving at least three feet of it on end of reel, and attaching the rest to next reel. The first reel can be faded into subtitle of the second reel without the audience knowing the change is being made. The subtitle at the reel end to be the change sign, of course.

No Friend Burg, I am NOT "all wrong"; also I am not wrong at all. If you will examine the back numbers of this department you will find that I have advocated the plan you suggest as excellent in cases where it can be used. But it has its faults, also they are serious ones. You say it will work "unless," and the very fact that there is an "unless" constitutes one weakness. Of course, if projectionists are careless an indicator most likely will get out of order. But that is precisely one of the things the projectionist is in your operating room for, viz.: To keep things in order, and if he is too shiftless or careless to do it I would respectfully suggest that he first be reported to the Tacoma union, and then, if the fault continue, that he be fired bodily. If he is so careless that he won't keep a simple indicator in order I think you will agree that he is just the one who will very likely be "reading a paper or talking to a visitor." Also, I might remark that you yourself are open to just criticism if you allow visitors in your projection room while the show is on. Your subtitle splitting has serious faults, to wit: (a) It requires the disarrangement of reels when received from the exchange and the return of them to former state when they leave the theater—something of a task if it be a seven or eight-reel feature. In this connection it is useless to say the producer should arrange the subtitles as suggested. This department expended a lot of energy trying to get them to do that very thing some time ago, but without success. Two or three of them promised, but that was all. They later made excuse that they could not get their directors to incorporate suitable subtitles at proper places. (b) Long subtitles rightly situated for such a purpose are by no manner of means always to be found. (c) The subtitle fails in another important item, viz.: It does not and cannot give warning in time to light second lamp in time to get it properly burning.

Personally, I am not very enthusiastic over the indicator, but a postive-acting, simple mechanical indicator which can be arranged to give two alarms, one to light the lamp say fifty feet before change, and one at exact time of change, has advantages sufficient to justify its installation cost, and the projectionist who won't keep it in order has no place in a projection room. Please let it be understood, Neighbor Burg, that this little discussion is all in the best of feeling. I was glad to have your views. It is by discussion that we advance. As long as we sit tight like a lot of supposed-to-be wise owls and hug our own views to our breast we won't get ahead very fast. And so it is with discussions of this sort. It makes us think. As soon a I read your letter I dug up that May 4 issue; I then marshaled my facts on both sides, with result that I find my views are or seem to be correct, viz.: Either an incorporated-in-the-negative change over sign (which it seems utterly hopeless to get producers to do) or some form of indicator.

High Class Work.

> Dear Mr. Richardson: I want to tell you of some high class work I saw in Des Moines, Waterloo, and Dubuque, all Iowa cities. The best projection I have ever viewed, and I have been pretty well all over the country in the past four years, was in these cities. In the Garden theater, Des Moines, the screen result was very high class, and it remained so through the entire show. In Waterloo, I visited the Crystal, Plaza, and Palace theaters. In all my experience I have not seen a better screen result than that at the Palace. I did not meet the projectionist, as I was told the union assessed a fine of fifty dollars (presumably on the projectionist in charge.—Ed.) if anyone was caught in the projection room. If you ever get near Waterloo, Iowa, drop in at the Palace. The projectionists at the other houses certainly are clean-cut men who are delivering the goods. I met the man at the Plaza. I saw some coloring put on at the Palace. It was very good indeed. How is it done?

Um, Brother Bowthy, why don't you send in a few details? You say the work was very fine, but do not detail its points of excellence. But anyhow I am glad to know the men in these theaters are doing good work. As to the coloring, why you have not described it sufficiently to enable me to say how it is done. It is possible to work color effects in a very limited way by the use of carefully selected colored glass held in the light ray, but nine times in ten where this is attempted it is over-done, the effect leaving very much to be desired

Proper Presentation of Pictures Musically.

Orchestral Balance.

THE wise exhibitor sees the handwriting upon the wall and is increasing the number of men in his orchestra. He sees the tendency towards a large ensemble and notes the wonderful possibilities to be derived from a big body of musicians. In the first place it is good showmanship, as it gives his theater a distinction that will be sure to draw a better class of patrons to his box-office. This patronage takes up of the slack in his expense line, and though his overhead has been increased he will not feel it appreciably. A poor orchestra of any size is the most expensive adjunct to his business.

When an orchestra is to be augmented, or a larger one installed, there always comes the vexing question of instrumentation. What shall the orchestra consist of? How many violins should be used? How many string and wood-wind will be necessary to balance the brass section or vice versa? Is a harp needed or can a piano be used instead of second violins and violas?

There has always obtained a sort of general rule as to what constitutes an orchestra of a particular size. This rule has been followed more or less as a matter of course without any serious thought being given to the results. As a consequence, if an exhibitor desires a ten-piece orchestra he tells his leader to get him one, and the leader secures a collection of men playing the following instruments. Piano, cello bass, flute, clarinet, cornet, trombone, drums and another violin beside his own. This really is a vaudeville orchestra completely top-heavy in the brass section and totally unsuited to properly play pictures.

It has never been thoroughly understood why American vaudeville houses adopted this combination because of the many points against it from the musical standpoint. It is entirely overbalanced, the string section being almost worthless when the brass is playing, while the wood wind portion, as represented by the flute and clarinet, sounds peculiarly out of place. When the drums have a forte passage the entire orchestra is lost in the tumult of sound.

At first the performing artists tried to use music arranged for a concert orchestra, but had to give up the idea because of the conspicuous "holes" in the orchestration. It meant that all acts desiring even a respectable accompaniment were forced to have their music specially arranged. It became the reason for "Show-fly" music, and one of the longest strides backward that music in America has ever taken. English and foreign artists laughed at us and then swore lustily. In spite of all criticism this combination of musicians became permanent in the variety theaters throughout the country and are still with us, much to our chagrin.

Orchestras of this make up are to be found in many picture theaters and are worthless as an agency for picture portrayal. Many expedients are resorted to in order that the music will be at least bearable. Frequently the leader will insist has cornet and trombone to obtain a soft effect, but this becomes monotonous in time. Cello solos are introduced and are found effective, but if overdone, lose their variety value. If your orchestra be overbalanced no amount of ingenuity will cover up the fault.

In our opinion a ten-piece orchestra should be made up entirely of strings and wood wind, with the trap drums for an occasional effect. A combination consisting of two violins, second violin, viola, cello, bass, flute, two clarinets and drums would be ideal for a thousand-seat house, a piano to be used to give tonal color and relieve the orchestra. The second violin player could double without the necessity of employing an extra man. Of course each player would have to be an expert on his instrument, because he could not depend upon the piano to cover up his solos of omission or commission. The music would be most soothing and yet would be able to rise to any occasion requiring volume. The use of the harmonium with the instrumentation would be excellent, as it could well take the place of the brass without introducing its blatancy.

People have gotten beyond the point where noise will suffice their musical needs. They call for better music, more artistic rendition and more intelligent selection. They do not want to be entertained, as some leaders seem to think, by the music, for their purpose in coming is to see the picture presented in the best possible way. It is the business of the orchestra to accompany the feature, not play away from it by giving a concert. Therefore, the smoother the quality of tone the sweeter the playing, and the fewer the breaks in the music the greater will be the satisfaction of the audience.

For the inroads made by the organ in picture playing, the orchestras have nobody to blame but themselves. Musicians have been looking for jobs, and when employed they have ceased to think about improving their position. They take it for granted that because the combination is the same as they have been accustomed to lead that it fits the situation. They never consider the acoustic properties of the theater; they never think of beautifying their surroundings; they let their lights shine in the faces of the people, and as for seeking a better solution of their instrumentation problems, that never occurs to them.

Orchestral balance is not always possible, even in a careful selection of instruments. Sometimes, because of acoustic propensities, it may be necessary to "hide" the orchestra, allowing the sound to come through a curtain. Again, it may be necessary to change the positions of certain men or shift the whole orchestra to obtain the best results. The exhibitor depends on his orchestral leader to give him the best possible music with what he is given in the way of an orchestra. The first thing the leader must get is balance, and the way he gets it matters little. Change your men, change your instrument, change your position, change your seating arrangement, but get perfect tonal balance.

The contention may be raised that by dispensing with the brass in a small combination, the playing of the pictorial will suffer. It is a mistaken idea that it takes brass instruments to make a march sound well. Naturally a march will sound better with all brass as in a band, but we have heard a seven-piece orchestra "put over" marches with all the vigor and swing of a vaudeville combination and with a better balance. Brass instruments should not be added to any orchestra until the number of men playing have reached fourteen. When we speak of brass we do not include in this classification French horns which are really of the wood-wind family in their tonal relation.

The lack of balance in almost every case is found among the small orchestras, but once in a while we come across this fault in symphony aggregations. The habit which we have fallen into of dropping the viola and second violin parts, using the piano instead, is probably to blame for the scarcity of "filling" to be found in some symphony orchestras. The tonal quality of the piano prohibits its use in a large orchestra if proper balance be desired. The piano is not originally an orchestral instrument, but its wide range and facile execution has made it the stand-bye of the American orchestra. In small combinations it is frequently necessary, and when played artistically, becomes a wonderful orchestral aid, but it is not needed in large orchestras and only tends to spoil the beauty of tone.

No set rules can be laid down for orchestral balance. Much depends upon the size of the orchestra, acoustics must be considered, individual playing enters into the problem, and instrumentation plays a large part, but after all, it lies with the leader to judge whether his orchestra is balanced rightly. Tests should be made from all parts of the theater, listening to the playing of a variety of numbers. If a leader will take up this problem conscientiously and solve it, his gratification will be the fact that it will remain a credit to himself and a box-office asset to the theater.

Music At the Rivoli.

With neatness and despatch and perfect artistry. These two trite sayings sum up the fine show presented at the Rivoli, during the week of June 9. The full two hours were knit together with a continuity that is seldom found in motion picture presentation. The costuming and "sets" used for the singers were in strict keeping with the songs' interpretations, while the lighting upheld the usual high standard of the Rivoli in this respect.

Erno Rapee conducted the overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," by Nicolai, with a little different interpretation than is usually given to this well known number. His work is constantly improving and his results are becoming more clearly defined. He is gaining a broader sweep in the use of his baton, coupled with a more definite beat that will eventually stamp him as one of our best conductors in pictures.

This overture was produced in 1849, about a month before the composer's death, and the opera to which it belongs still holds the stage. Founded upon Shakespeare's play of the same name, it is a delightful musical setting of that rollicking comedy, and there is much charming melody and clever orchestration in it.

The Scenic, showing "Mexico Today," was beautifully fitted by the use of La Feria Suite, by Lacombe. This was indeed a happy selection, inasmuch as the first two numbers were all that was required to play the entire reel, besides being admirably suited to the picture.

Miss Gladys Rice sang "Mighty Lak' a Rose," a little negro melody by Nevin, "Suwanee River," played by the organ, served as a prelude to this song, and immediately established the coming atmosphere. As the curtains swung back there was disclosed a "set" representing a hut, bare of furniture, save a cradle, which was rocked to and fro by the singer dressed in the costume of the Civil War times. The orchestra accompanied the singer unconducted, with no lights showing in the stands. The idea was splendid, but the accompaniment was poor. It is sufficiently difficult to follow a singer under the best of conditions, so why handicap both orchestra and vocalist by dropping the director. His presence would not have been conspicuous, the effect would have remained and a smooth performance insured.

The music for the pictorial was well chosen, and especially so when the pictures of the Marines were shown. The spotlight effect upon the flags hung a few feet in front of the proscenium arch was stirringly patriotic. It made one's blood tinkle with the love of country.

Following this the orchestra struck up "Over There," dying away as the curtains were drawn aside, showing us an old man seated in a chair by the window where the light streamed in upon his spectacled and blind eyes. Seated by him is a girl who does his seeing with the glowing eyes of devoted affection. Marching is heard in the distance and Greek Evans (for it is he) sings "The Americans Come." This song is strongly reminiscent of "The Veteran's Song" which held all England in the time of the Boer War. It has a martial swing and is intensely descriptive of the fulfillment of the hope that the Americans will come to turn the tide of battle.

Never have we been so favorably impressed with Mr. Evan's voice. It showed a richness that we hardly thought possible, while his top tones rang out with the clearness of a bell. The song suited him admirably.

The feature was "Hit-the-Trail Holliday," a comedy by George Cohan. It was well fitted though it required nothing but the lightest treatment. The opening showing Rome, Egypt, London and New York had special excerpts to indicate the atmosphere, which we considered par excellence. This little touch evinced the careful thought given to details that has made the Rialto-Rivoli shows what they are and which must be followed by every theater in the country eventually, if they present pictures properly.

Music At the Symphony.

The long-delayed opening of the Symphony theater occurred on June 14, when a private showing was given to warm the house. This home of the motion picture should be a big success. It is well laid out with every possible appointment for the convenience of its patrons. There are no posts to obstruct the view and the balcony arrangement is ideal and different.

Naturally the first performance is a bit ragged and we will not criticize it in the usual way. After the musicians have had a chance to acclimate themselves to picture playing there will be no question as to merit. The Symphony orchestra is composed of fifty musicians of more than ordinary calibre, conducted by Carlo Ronchi and his assistant, Enrico Leide. These leaders are excellent musicians and should give a good account of themselves when they have had a little experience in picture fitting.

The overture, which consisted of excerpts from "La Boheme," was rendered with true traditional interpretation, and though a little long for a picture show, was duly appreciated by the large audience. Mr. Ronchi certainly knows his "Boheme," and from this first taste of Italian opera we can expect some fine examples in the future.

The "Dance of the Hours," from the opera "La Gioconda," by eight ballet dancers and Mlle. Clara Tosca, was the finest thing we have seen outside of grand opera, and even there it has not been excelled in artistry. Some years ago you will probably remember it as it was put on at the Hippodrome, of New York. You will remember the furore it occasioned. To our mind this little divertissement shown at the Symphony is far and beyond it, in point of all-around excellence. Mlle. Clara Tosca compares favorably with the celebrities of the Terpsichorean art, and her miniature ballet ably supports her. This one number should be seen by every music lover who can get into the theater, and our opinion is that it will hold the boards for some time. At least we hope so.

The next best thing on the programme was the first number, called a Patriotic Tableau, and showing the village of Chateau-Thiery as it was being sacked and burnt by the horrible Hun. The music for this was wonderfully effective, and the lighting effects and fire scenes made the village seem intensely real. This was followed by good-looking young ladies appearing enwrapped in flags, representing the Allied nations. During this part of the tableau the orchestra played the National airs of each nation, and played them from beginning to end. This made the posing very long and slowed up the performance. A strain of each would have given the number more snap and is always good showmanship in the presenting of incidental numbers in the picture business.

A Mutt and Jeff comedy was shown and the organ played it. This is bad picture presentation musically. The organ is not suited to follow comedy matter. It spoils the fun and cannot give the necessary grotesqueness to convey the spirit of burlesque to the auditors. The organists at the Symphony are Harold Smith, formerly of the Broadway, and Mr. Cooper, who is also well known about town. Here we have a duo of tremendous possibilities. They are both long experienced artists in picture playing and one can rest assured that the organ portion of the programmes will be right up to the highest standards.

The feature was "The Unchastened Woman," featuring Grace Valentine. The picture does not give wide scope for musical setting, but the music used was satisfactory. The picture deals with a psychological subject with little physical action and, musically must have been a hard nut to crack for the first attempt at picture fitting in this new theater.

Altogether, the music was very good and great are our expectations. This theater is featuring its music, which is the right idea. It has the orchestra capable of doing big things. It has the conductors known for their musicianly ability, ably assisted by excellent organists. All it needs is time and experience to build up a name for picture settings that will set yet another high mark of perfection.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

CITY OF DIM FACES (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "A Japanese Sunset"—Deppen, of "Japanese Reverie"—Bartlett. This is a Chinese picture and of course the Chinese atmosphere must be held throughout. Chinese music is very limited, and a judicious use of the traps will aid materially in conveying the necessary effects. We would suggest that the opera "Iris," by Mascagni, be used, if possible, as it has wonderful [illegible] possibilities. The following list may be helpful to the leader in selecting for this picture:

Hop Sing—Chinese Fantasie ..... Kaizenach
Sultan's Guard—Patrol ..... [illegible]
Chinese Wedding Procession—March ..... Hosier
In a Chinese Tea-Room—Andante ..... Lange
Lady Picking Mulberries—An Episode ..... Kerbey
Sunset Land—Moderato ..... Kawata
Oriental Nights—Valse ..... Grant
Chinese Highbinder Patrol ..... Johnson
First Born—Chinese Serenade ..... Johnson
Chinese Serenade ..... Puerner
Ching
Chinese Patrol ..... Puerner

Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

ELEVENTH COMMANDMENT, THE (Advanced Motion Picture Co.—Six Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Elysium"—Speaks, "Peacefulness"—Borch, or "Extase"—Ganne.

"Extase"—Ganne.

The character of this picture is a modern drama of the tense variety. You will need rather classic stuff for this feature of the heavier nature. A good effect can be made by carefully selecting quiet numbers to fit the scenes where the heroine is shown, and where you are not playing her theme. Long selections will fit till you reach the fifth reel, when you will require a misterioso, followed by a dramatic agitato, a dramatic andante, a dramatic tension and an agitato. Close then with the theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the producers.

KAISER'S SHADOW, THE (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Unnecessary.

This is a picture filled with dramatic events of the time of war. You will need agitatos, a few misteriosos, and a furioso. There is a good opportunity to use the Marseillaise Hymn, and you may be tempted to incorporate the Star Spangled Banner in the fourth reel. Do not use our national anthem, but select some other well known American patriotic air. The scenes are laid in Berlin and an American city. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

LAST REBEL, THE (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante Semplice and Southern. Suggest "Pleading"—Wood, "Southern Reverie"—Bendix, or "Ponderings"—Langey.

This feature is divided into two parts, one portion showing a story during the Civil War times, and the other enacted fifty years later. The atmosphere of both is Southern, yet a distinction should be made in the music transition to strongly emphasize the different periods. Open with old Southern melodies, getting in suitable numbers to fit the darky characters. The music of the later period should be chosen after careful research work. There is much pathos in the feature, and you should note the fight with the band of thugs and the attempted drowning of the heroine. No cue sheets are available for this picture, so it would be well to get a pre-viewing if possible. It deserves a good musical setting.

MADAME SPHINX (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest "Premier D'Amour"—Benoist, "Enchanted Hour"—Mouton, or "Serenade"—Jeffery.

This is a mystery story wound about the murder of the guardian of the heroine. Open with the first movement of the Unfinished Symphony which will carry the action nicely to the end of the first reel. You will then need some dramatic tension stuff, misteriosos and agitatos. Note the big fight in the Apache den which lasts for almost five minutes. A long hurry will fit this. Close with the second movement of the unfinished. Cue sheets have been discontinued by the Triangle Film Co.

ONLY ROAD, THE (Metro—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato and Spanish. Suggest "Serenata"—Crespi, "Serenade"—Tarenghi, or "La Paloma."

Here is your chance to get some Spanish atmosphere into your setting. The action takes place on the Mexican Border and is intensely dramatic. You will need some misteriosos, agitatos, dramatic tensions, and so forth, but try to select your incidental concert numbers with a view to their Spanish flavor. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

SOCIAL QUICKSANDS (Metro—Five Reels—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Impish Elves"—Borch, "In the Shadows"—Finck, or "Mussdora"—Leigh.

This is a comedy drama enacted in society of wealth and position. Light and trippy music will be needed almost entirely. A few two-steps, one fag, and some light waltzes. Note the piano solo towards the end of the third reel. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

STOLEN ORDERS (Brady Production Co.—Eight Reels)—Theme for Miss Gordon—Andante. Suggest "Andante"—Mendelsohn, "Wedding Morn"—Luscomb, or "Meditation"—Leigh.

Melodramatic music in large quantities will be needed for this feature. It is a war picture, the action taking place in America. When the balloon is chased by the aeroplane don't use a galop, but select a number with sweeping string effects and vivace in tempo. Note the fight between the hero and the German diplomat. Be careful to refrain from using too much obvious German music. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World Film exchange.

You may not be able to fight, but you can save and buy War Savings Stamps.

Another Interesting Letter from France.

HERE is one of the most interesting letters that has reached this department from one of the boys who is turning the camera crank for Uncle Sam over there. The letter is from Sergeant Harry Thorpe to Lieut. Victor Fleming, both of whom were formerly the men behind the camera with Douglas Fairbanks, but lately of the Photographic Division of the Signal Corps.

> Dear Pal: I haven't written you for some little time, but the hardest thing to do in this country, I find, is to write letters, even when one has the time you never have the inclination. I have sat around by the hour and have tried to bring myself to write, but when you are so far from home you just think what's the use.
> It is raining again today. I said AGAIN, where I have been for the last two weeks it rains most all the time, though it does break at times during the day for a few hours, and then I go out and do some work.
> It is beautiful section of France, and as the cats are good and I get fairly good quarters I do not mind the rain so very much, but oftentimes it is taking when something big is going on, and then I am out of luck, although it has to be pretty bad to keep us from shooting. You'll say so if you get a chance to see some of them in the States.
> I am the first one of the bunch to get a promotion, am a Sergeant in the U. S. Army. Now what do you think of that? Am also the first one to get into the field and rate the first line trenches. Oh, yes! I have been UP THERE and heard the big ones whistle and the little ones too, but the prettiest sight is to see the shrapnel and high explosive break around and in the midst of a covey of planes from two to three thousand feet up in the blue.
> I will send you a picture of myself in the outfit we have to wear when up close to the front, and if you think as a crack to work in an outfit of that sort you're all wrong. There are a million things I would like to tell you that I can't, but if you come over you will learn awfully fast. I am tickled to be out of the place you are in. I laugh when I think of you giving the dope to the boys there, knowing nothing yourself of the conditions here and what we are up against, and to say you have no conception of it is putting it mildly. I met an officer yesterday that you outfitted, remember you saying that you were going to keep it for yourself or else like it; well, for my part anyone that wants his kind can have it. He told me about the boys there, said that he had quite a chat with you, also added that you were all buck privates when he left, that of course was an answer to a query I put to him. I have wondered at different times if the bunch had been made colonels or major generals, and how the drilling was coming along, but there is consolation for me in the fact that maybe some of them will come over and get a chance to see what an honest-to-God war is like.
> I think that I have grabbed some pretty good stuff this time out, hope so at any rate, as I expect to have to work and earn anything I may get in the service. ——— is doing the cooking at headquarters, ——— and ——— are putting on leaders, and ——— is in charge of a stock, while ———— and myself are in the field. The Honorable Mr ——— is punching a typewriter, and damned glad of the chance to keep out of the way of the babies that whistle so.
> I haven't had a line from the States as yet, don't know when I will, but it doesn't bother me any, you would be surprised how little I miss them. The U. S. A. seems like some place I visited some time or other, I have a vague recollection what it is like and that is all. I love France, and if they turn me loose after the war I will do no hurrying to get on the other side. I will probably get to the big town for a little stay before long.
> Well will close now, Vic, have told you all I can for this time, will just add another line don't come over here with the idea that you are going to get anything you don't work for and earn. Regards to all the boys.
> Best regards to yourself, from your old pal,
> HARRY THORPE.
> P. S.—I often eat and sleep in some queer places. Day before yesterday I sat in a village blown to pieces by the Germans eating my lunch, which consisted of a can of beans and quart of champagne, some contrast, eh, Vic. I am sending Douglas a German helmet through the courtesy of the officer who I am now working under. He took it off a German who was bumped off by our men in a recent scrap. The helmet wasn't all he got in "No Man's" land, he grabbed a bunch of good negative with his M. P. camera. If you get over here you may meet him, he is 1st Lieut. E. H. Cooper of the Photographic Division, and has been mighty fine to me.

Recent Motion Picture Photographic Patents.

Abstracts by E. K. Research Laboratory.

1261800. H. R. Evans.

A Two-color Motion Picture Projection Apparatus in which red and green views are simultaneously displayed before two adjacent gates, the light rays from such gates being directed by double reflection prisms to a pair of lenses to throw superimposed images upon the screen. The film is advanced to the extent of one picture space at each cycle, and consequently each picture is projected once at each gate.

1262954. F. E. Ives.

A projector for Motion Pictures in Natural Colors in which two complementary colored picture areas are arranged transversely beside each other on the film. The pictures are projected through separate paths through reflecting prisms and finally thrown in a common registering path upon the screen.

1260324 J. G. Capstaff, Assigned to E. K. Co.

A method of printing on film, coated on both sides. By using an emulsion which absorbs violet and ultra-violet light and printing only with such light none of the rays pass through one sensitive layer to injuriously affect the other.

1260355. P. Artigue.

Apparatus for Taking Motion Pictures comprising a translucent background upon which shadowgraphs are thrown from the rear and photographs taken of the shadowgraphs and the background.

1260336. E Keen, Assigned to W. P. Dunham.

An apparatus for Producing Motion Picture Drawings or Cartoons. A set of transparent films, each bearing an element of the picture, are superposed and retained in adjusted position, the elements coalescing to form a picture, which is formed onto a negative film. The positions of different elements are then readjusted and another picture taken on a fresh area of negative film. By repeating this method motion picture pictures are produced.

1261648 P. H. Terry.

A method of Making Motion Picture Films. The stationary elements of a series of pictures are first photographed upon the film, and then a series of representations of the moving elements in successive positions are taken, the portions of the film containing the imprint of the stationary elements being masked during the photographing of the moving element.

1260337 (See 1260338.) R. M. Craig.

A Motion Picture Film bearing sound records on one face and motion pictures on the other. The sound records consist of transverse lines composed of thin layers which are opaque to infra-red rays, but transparent to the visual projecting light. Infra-red rays are directed through the moving film toward a selenium transmitter which is connected with a "loud speaking" 'phone behind the screen. The motion picture images are transparent to infra-red rays, and do not interfere with the sound reproduction. Conversely the sound records, being transparent to the projection light, do not interfere with the exhibition of motion pictures.

1260338 (See 1260337.) R. M. Craig

A combined Motion Picture Apparatus and Sound Reproducer. A special film bears both pictures and sound records. The latter cooperate with a beam of light to operate a selenium transmitter with a "loud speaking 'phone behind the screen.

1261272. E W Myers, Assigned to Masterroll Perforating Mach. Co.

An Apparatus for Synchronizing Music and Motion Pictures. An electrical switch is driven by the motion picture apparatus to flash a light to the musician at proper intervals, marks on the moving roll of music corresponding to such flashes.

1261979. T. T. Tuttle.

A Motion Picture Film, the edges of which are reinforced adjacent the perforations. The edges are softened by cement, and fabric cut on the bias is stuck to them.

1260891. F. A. Gildersleeve and W. L. Trice.

A Film Feeding Mechanism for motion picture cameras is reciprocated longitudinally of the film by means of a cam groove on the periphery of a rotary drum, while the film gripping claws are oscillated transversely of the film by means of cams on the end faces of the drum.

Distribution Plan for Coming Year

Walter E. Greene Outlines How Famous Players Will Issue 208 Major Productions.

FEATURE productions to the number of 208 will be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation during the coming year, commencing September 1, aside from the short subjects. The distribution of these pictures will be handled under the supervision of Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of this department.

The new distribution plan calls for the pictures to be circulated on the star series basis which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has found very successful during the season now drawing to a close. However, this system will be enlarged upon and improved to such an extent, it is declared, that every exhibitor in the United States will be able to show Artcraft and Paramount pictures without regard to size or location of his theater. The distributing facilities of the Famous Players-Lasky organization have been enlarged in keeping with its increased producing arrangements, so that this company will be able to take care of double the amount of exhibitors it is now serving.

Walter E. Greene.

The demands of the public for better productions requiring increased expenditures, it is pointed out, are being anticipated by this big organization, and with full appreciation of the necessity to keep down to a minimum the cost of the films to the exhibitor, plans are being made to increase the circulation of the product so that the multiplicity of theaters served will absorb the rising cost of productions. By this increased circulation of films the distributors will be able to obtain a return that will warrant a steady improvement in even their own high standard of quality, at the same time keeping the price within the means of all exhibitors.

"In our usual course of progress we have found it necessary to increase our output, and in the list of the new season's releases may be found box office attractions which we are confident will prove second to none in the field and of a variety sufficiently broad to suit the various tastes in all parts of the country," said Mr. Greene, in speaking of the distribution for the coming year.

"With the increased product exhibitors desiring the best pictures will have an opportunity to make the Famous Players-Lasky product the foundation of their year's program."

This policy of broad circulation of Artcraft and Paramount pictures, it is pointed out by Mr. Greene, comes at a time when they are at the height of their popularity, due to the high quality of these pictures and the drawing power of the stars as well as the tremendous national advertising and publicity campaign which has been conducted during the past year in behalf of this product.

The future advertising and exploitation plans, it is promised, include even a wider scope than those heretofore employed and will be conducted in a manner that will give exhibitors an opportunity to tie up with the drive, thus deriving direct results therefrom.

"Our plans for the coming season," said Mr. Greene, "are the most gigantic ever conceived in the world of amusements and reflect the confidence of this company in the stability of the motion picture industry as well as our faith in the motion picture exhibitors of the country. Every exhibitor who thoroughly knows the field will appreciate the importance to him of this undertaking, as it particularly gives him the choice of affiliating himself with an organization that will protect him from the changing exigencies of war times and will insure him under all conditions an adequate and dependable supply of motion pictures that will meet the critical demands of the public.

"Our service to the exhibitors will increase in proportion to the increased quality of our product and our plans for distributing same. We pledge ourselves to give every aid within our power to assist our customers in their effort effectively to present our product to the public.

"Progress-Advance, our exhibitors' weekly, will be made of greater service. Special care will be devoted to the preparation of accessories which will include on each production the widest possible assortment.

"Service is the keynote of all success, and it will be our desire to render service in this direction during the coming year that will be entirely in keeping with the general progress of the industry.

"Above all we have very keen appreciation of the good-will of the entire trade, and it will be our particular aim at all times to seek the good-will of all exhibitors of America."

Buxbaum With Famous Players

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has engaged H. H. Buxbaum to fill the important position of Special Representative to Exchanges in connection with the work of the distribution department. Mr. Buxbaum has been associated with film distribution for the past four years and is well known in this branch of the industry. With the General Film Company, four years ago, he started his motion picture activities and was later promoted to the position of controlling business manager at the New York headquarters. After three years with that concern he left to become special representative for Pathe in its distribution department. Prior to his connection with the motion picture business Mr. Buxbaum performed some notable work with the Harriman Bank, one of his ideas being the use of armored motor cars for collections and the delivery of currency, safeguarding the clients of the bank who hitherto had used their own messengers.

H. H. Buxbaum.

Shortly after his engagement by the Famous Players-Lasky organization Mr. Buxbaum left for the Cleveland exchange of that company, where he will begin his activities in behalf of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures. Mr. Buxbaum is the third special representative recently appointed by Famous Players-Lasky to enhance the co-operation between the home office in New York and its exchanges throughout the country and to assist exchange men in solving problems with which they are confronted daily. The two other special representatives are J. W. Allen, formerly manager of the San Francisco branch, and C. Lang Cobb, formerly at the New York headquarters in charge of short subjects.

ELECTRICAL WIZARDS TO SEE "A DOG'S LIFE."

Through the courtesy of the First National Exchange of New York Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" will be the feature amusement event of the annual meeting of the executives of the General Electric Company, which takes place the week of July 1 at Camp Edison, Association Island, Thousand Islands, New York.

SHERRY TO MAKE AN ANNOUNCEMENT.

Owing to lack of time before going to press, it was impossible for us to include in this week's paper the initial advertising announcement of William L. Sherry, which will be made in our July 13 issue.

Hayakawa Names First Two Productions

Japanese Player Will Be Starred in "His Birthright" and "The Temple of Dusk."

WITH two productions announced, a large staff of salesmen in the field and studio operations in Los Angeles running at top notch, the making and marketing of the Haworth Pictures Corporation's series of special productions starring Sessue Hayakawa are well under way. The distribution of the pictures is to be handled out of the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation.

The first two productions on the schedule are "His Birthright" and "The Temple of Dusk." The initial productions will be available for pre-release September 1. These first productions were selected by Hayakawa and his directors, William Wothington and James Young, who will alternate in directing his productions, after a thorough consideration of the best available dramatic material. The plays chosen were finally decided upon as being the most effective vehicles for Hayakawa's talents and containing dramatic elements that will appeal most strongly to the public taste at the present time.

Sessue Hayakawa.

Sessue Hayakawa, admitted by foremost dramatic critics as the greatest Japanese exponent of dramatic art, was born in Tokio in 1889. Upon completion of his education in the schools of the Mikado he came to the United States and entered the University of Chicago, where he made a thorough study of Shakespeare and translated the works of the master into Japanese. Later he returned to Japan, where he formed a company and produced the works of Shakespeare, scoring a remarkable success in the role of "Othello." When he returned to the United States he brought with him his own company—the Imperial Dramatic Company—which appeared on the Pacific Coast, and made a decided impression on critics and public alike. He was immediately importuned to enter the silent drama, and joined the Ince forces. After a year with that company he accepted an offer from the Jesse Lasky company, remaining with it for three years.

Hayakawa first appeared on the screen in "The Typhoon," which was followed by "The Wrath of the Gods," and was immediately acclaimed as one of the greatest mimes in dramatic roles since the inception of the silent drama. In "The Cheat," in which he appeared with Fannie Ward, he achieved a triumph, the critics and public uniting in the verdict that it was a remarkable piece of dramatic work. This production confirmed their opinion that he was without doubt one of the most distinguished actors of the day.

In March of this year Hayakawa formed his own producing company under the name of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, and completed arrangements with President James M. Sheldon, of Mutual Film Corporation, for the release of his productions. The actor has some very definite ideas on the production of photodrama, and will incorporate these in his productions with the same artistic thoroughness he has given to his individual dramatic work.

Hayakawa a Disciple of Danjuro.

"In these first productions and others which are to follow," he said a few days ago while discussing his work, "I am happy to say I will have splendid opportunity for the kind of acting which most appeals to me and, I am sure, makes the most profound impression upon the audience—the repressive, natural kind, devoid of gesticulation and heroics. Danjuro, idol of the Japanese stage, was this sort of an actor. My aim is to be like him, and if I succeed I shall feel that I have not labored in vain before the camera."

Immediately upon the formation of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, after the first production had been decided upon, Hayakawa sent several of his company to Japan, among them Kamatsu Ori, Humri Ojato and Unjo Tamara, to film scenes for the initial production. They have just returned, bringing with them about four thousand feet of film taken in Tokio and Yokahama and in the wonderfully beautiful Mt. Fujiyama region.

Marion Sais will be Hayakawa's leading woman in "His Birthright." Miss Sais gave up a contract covering a period of eight months, during which she was to play the principal role in a serial production, to become a member of the Hayakawa company. Tsuru Aoki, wife of the star, has an important role in this production. During the past four years she has appeared in a number of photodramas in which her husband has starred.

Mary Anderson is the ingenue of the company. Howard Davies, who has an important role, was a vaudeville actor before entering filmdom.

"His Birthright" is being produced under the direction of William Worthington. "The Temple of Dusk" will be under the direction of James Young.

Gail Kane to Have Her Own Company

The First of Her Productions, Which Will Be Released Through Mutual, Is "Love's Law."

GAIL KANE is to appear in a series of feature productions, which are to be produced by her own company. This announcement is made by the star simultaneously with an announcement from James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, of a contract for the distribution of the Kane pictures. The producing organization will be known as "Gail Kane Productions."

Miss Kane's first picture goes into work at New York studios within ten days. The story chosen is under the working title of "Love's Law." It is an original scenario by Joseph Franklin Poland, a picture author with a long list of important successes.

"Miss Kane's pictures will constitute an important addition to the schedules of the Mutual Film Corporation," remarked Mr. Sheldon. "The organization of 'Gail Kane Productions' is also a significant move in the present trend in producing activity. More and more the tendency is toward individual, specialized production rather than quantity production by large organizations handling a large number of people.

"This is of importance to the exhibitor in that the specialized one-star company can be expected to support that star to the utmost of her box office value. Productions so made can also be expected to bear more of the individuality of the star than pictures made under the usual conditions. The one-star company tends to give the star a control of the artistic aspects of the product to a degree comparable with the hold which the author or the painter has on his work.

"It will be of interest also to the scenario writers, authors and agents that there is an attractive market for vehicles specially adapted to Miss Kane's requirements."

Sherry Names Exchange Managers

G. Culham, Shelton.

To Make Educational Child Picture

World Film Purchases Scenario from Mrs. Backus, an Authority on Juvenile Training.

THAT the motion picture industry is fast becoming a favorite with educational authorities is demonstrated when the army undertook, through the screen, to instruct several medical units in France how to treat wounds and the care of patients along new lines.

Colleges and schools followed suit, and astronomy is now taught in many institutes with the aid of the motion picture. The elementary schools are about to do the same thing, and evidently it will not be far off when the millions of American school children are taught their three "R's" with pictures and stories.

World Pictures has predicted this change, and with the purpose in view has purchased from Mrs. Bertha A. Backus, of Providence, the scenario, "The Quest of the Latchstring," which will be used expressly as a lead for the little World star—Madge Evans.

Although children are the main factors in this production, it is a story suitable for adults seeking refined entertainment and is also educating for the youngster. Mrs. Backus has made a specialty of educating children for seven years, and has taught in the Willimantic school, Willimantic, Conn., which is known as the "model school," and at the State Normal School, New Britain, Conn.

Mrs. Backus lectures to various teachers' institutes and instructs them how to conduct the model class.

Petrova Moved by Negroes' Singing

After Getting Pledges for $23,000 in Savings Stamps She Attends Services at Colored Church.

Atlanta, June 23.

MME. OLGA PETROVA, whose appeals at the Forsyth theater yesterday won pledges from her hearers to buy $23,199 worth of War Savings Stamps, today realized a girlhood dream when she heard an audience of southern negroes sing their own melodies for her. When she arose to address the negroes after listening to their crooning melodies she was so touched that she wept.

Mme. Petrova was introduced to the negroes by W. Woods Shite, Sam C. Dobbs and Harry Hernance, prominent Atlantaians, as a woman who had come from a country that had for a century felt the oppression of war. Mme. Petrova sat through it looking into the upturned faces of many who, not so long ago, were slaves. They sang for her a famous negro folk song, "Down by the Riverside" with its refrain, "Ain't Goner Studay War No More." And when the star arose she spoke with earnestness and inspired appeal.

At the Forsyth yesterday Mme. Petrova was greeted by tremendous audiences. The record exceeds that of any other city she has yet visited on her tour.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of June 23 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE STRAND.—"Her Final Reckoning," a Paramount picture staring Pauline Frederick, was the main attraction at the Strand theater the week of June 23. Jules Claretie, the famous French dramatist, is the author of the stage play that furnished the plot of the picture. The production is very artistic. The sixth instalment of the Outing-Chester scenics, "Smiling" Billy Parsons in "Dad's Knockout," and the Topical Review completed the screen program. Cora Tracy was the soloist.

RIALTO.—"Tempered Steel," the fourth special production starring Mme. Petrova, and written by George Middleton, was the star feature at the Rialto. Jane Novak, Melborne MacDowell and Robert McKim are in the cast. Scenes on the Vigar Canal near the City of Mexico, a comedy and the Animated Magazine were also shown. Mlle. Madeleine D'Espiony and Sascha Fidelman were the soloists.

THE RIVOLI.—"Flying with the Marines," sensational pictures of Marine Corps aviators, headed the bill of pictorial and musical numbers. The other features were O. Henry's "Sisters of the Golden Circle," the second series of Marty McHale's "Who's Who in Baseball," and the Animated Pictorial. Tulle Lindahl, Lieut. B. C. Hilliam and Julia Beverly were the musical stars.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER.—First half, Rhea Mitchell in "Honor's Cross," and a new number of "The Eagle's Eye." Second half, Dorothy Dalton in "The Mating of Marcella."

FORTY-FOURTH STREET THEATER.—Twelfth week of "Hearts of the World."

PARK.—Fourth week of "Sealed Orders."

BROADWAY.—"The Yanks Are Coming."

MONTAGUE LOVE ENTERTAINS SAILORS.

On Wednesday, June 19, Dorothy Green, the screen player, arranged to have a number of vaudeville artists go to Ellis Island, in New York Harbor, where a large number of sailors of the navy are at present quartered, and give a performance. The crowd gathered at the Battery and were transported to the island on a Government submarine chaser. The screen was represented by Montague Love, a star of the World Film Company, who related a number of amusing stories.

The entertainment, which was managed by W. T. Granlund, publicity director of the Marcus Loew theaters, and Al Piantodosi, the composer of popular music, was greatly enjoyed by the audience, composed almost entirely of "Jack Tars," and every act brought forth applause.

GARSON LEASES GRIFFITH STUDIOS.

Harry Garson, manager of Clara Kimball Young, has just completed arrangements with D. W. Griffith, whereby Miss Young will produce her pictures this winter at the Griffith studios, Hollywood. Upon completing her next picture, "Cheating Cheaters," here in New York, immediately upon her arrival in July from the West, Miss Young will return at once to California to continue operations on the Coast for the entire season.

Mr. Garson has also arranged for his own producing company, headed by Blanche Sweet, to continue work there after Miss Sweet has made "The Unpardonable Sin," by Rupert Hughes, here in New York. She will start work on the production July 1.

THEDA BARA REPORTED ILL IN LOS ANGELES.

Word just received by the Fox Film Corporation is that Theda Bara is ill at her home in Los Angeles. Although the illness is in no way serious, it is said Miss Bara is under the care of a physician.

The same telegram stated that Miss Bara's illness would not hamper work on a play which she is producing, "The Message of the Lilies" is the tentative title, but this is to be changed.

Canadians Disagree as to Policy

Conditions Vary Widely in Different Provinces—Toronto Working Under Full Steam and Montreal Wants to Close for Summer.

A FEATURE of the present summer situation in moving picture circles of the Dominion of Canada is the diversity of action among exhibitors of various cities. The attitude of the theater men of Montreal, for instance, is in direct contrast with the exhibitors of Toronto; while the exhibitors of Winnipeg seem to be following still another line of action. In Vancouver the exhibitors are more or less isolated with their views, while conditions in New Brunswick are quite unsettled because of the recent enactment of a provincial law providing for an amusement war tax.

The decision of many Montreal theater managers is to close up shop for the summer, while in Toronto every exhibitor is working full steam ahead and does not even talk of closing for any period. Probably more than a dozen large and small picture theaters of Montreal were closed temporarily or permanently during a period of two weeks. How many more will follow suit remains to be seen. In Toronto several small theaters have been reopened, and one theater, to seat 1,000 persons, is being built. Two downtown houses of prominence have just been redecorated for the summer season. Quite a number of Toronto houses are also giving special matinees regularly for children and otherwise. Several more theaters, in the central section, have reached the decision to open mornings.

In Winnipeg the Provincial Exhibitors' Association has issued a printed appeal for more patronage in order, it is declared, to maintain a high standard of shows. A few weeks ago all the theaters of any account in Winnipeg raised their evening admission prices from 20 cents to 25 cents. One or two small houses in Winnipeg have been closed, but at least one theater has been reopened after being remodeled.

In Vancouver the exhibitors recently took joint action to make an important change in policy. They had been paying the provincial war tax for seven months, but the tax bills became such a formidable item that it was resolved to call upon the patrons of the theaters to pay their own tax. Slightly higher admission prices have also been the rule in Vancouver.

Regular Houses Unaffected by Converted Theaters.

Another development in various cities has been the conversion of various dramatic and vaudeville theaters into moving picture houses for indefinite periods. The Grand Opera House, Toronto, for instance, has been presenting pictures for two months, and this fact has apparently not affected the patronage at regular picture theaters.

In Montreal several dramatic and vaudeville theaters have been used for the presentation of picture productions. These have been His Majesty's, Princess and Orpheum theaters. The outstanding success among Montreal theaters has been Loew's theater, it is declared.

Both Toronto and Montreal have had about eighty moving picture theaters, although Montreal has a population of some 300,000 more than Toronto. Yet Montreal theaters do not seem to be doing so well as those in Toronto. One reason for this difference, it is argued, is that no less than forty Toronto exhibitors have been advertising regularly in newspapers and others have been paying considerable attention to neighborhood advertising.

There has been an increase in the tariff on imported films, a reel tax has been announced, provincial and civic licenses have been increased, or are about to be increased, and practically every province now imposes a war tax on patrons. In spite of these assessments the picture business in Toronto and some other cities has been considered good.

Another activity that is more or less general is the selling of theaters or leases. In many cities one or more theaters have changed hands during the past few months, and there always seems to be a buyer whenever a theater is to be sold in a number of cities. This is partially due to a movement on the part of two or three large exchange companies to acquire theaters.

Canadian Embargo Hits Theater Publicity

Order in Council Bars Importation of Photographic Matter. Officials Refuse to Pass Posters and Other Advertising.

FOLLOWING the passage of an order in council at Ottawa, providing an embargo on the importation of photographic matter, fruit, high-priced automobiles and other articles, the Canadian customs department refused to pass posters, printed pictures and other advertising matter accompanying moving picture releases, which were being brought into Canada from the United States. Just how the customs officials could class lithographs and printed stills as photographs is difficult to see, but this is what was done.

The Exchange Managers' Association at Toronto immediately got busy in the matter. It was declared that the exchanges and exhibitors could get along better without the posters than without the photographs.

No decision has yet been made by the government.

Manitoba Association Appeals to Public

Printed Declaration Asks for Better Backing of Picture Show as a Necessary Industry.

THE Provincial Exhibitors' Association of Manitoba has made an appeal to Winnipeg citizens for increased patronage because local moving picture theaters are facing a serious crisis, it is declared. The support of the public is required, it is asserted, in order to maintain the present high standard of moving picture entertainment.

In the printed appeal, which has been widely distributed, the exhibitors tell of the manner in which the governments have been inclined to view the theaters as a luxury rather than a necessity. The declaration is made that the future existence of a number of picture theaters depends to a great extent upon the response of the public to a "genuine effort to supply a high-class product at a slight increase over the old rates. Unless the response continues—yes, unless it increases—there is no doubt but that certain moving picture theaters in this city will close their doors, either part or all the time."

The comments of several representative exhibitors are also published. Manager Davis showed where current presentations included high-salaried and prominent stars, good orchestras and music often written expressly for the one production; yet the admission price was not high. Manager W. P. Wilson, of the Lyceum theater, pointed out that it had cost just $975 to bring "My Four Years in Germany" through the Canadian customs alone. A year or two ago the duty and war tax on the same feature would have been only $270. Mr. Wilson also referred to the various dominion, provincial and civic taxes and license fees.

Canada Decides to Alter Tax on Reels

Proposed Flat Rate of 15 Cents a Reel a Day as Used Not Fair to Small Theaters.

INTIMATION has been received by the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario that the Canadian Federal Government has decided to make a change in the tax on reels. It was proposed to impose a tax of 15 cents a reel a day on all films as they were used. It was pointed out, however, that a flat rate would prove a hardship on the small theaters, where as many reels of pictures are shown regularly as in the large houses. Further, it was shown that the large theaters paid more for their pictures, and a flat rate would be a proportionately higher assessment on the rental charge for pictures for the small theaters.

The Canadian government has not yet made any public announcement regarding a change in arrangements for this tax, nor has the nature of the revision been stated to the Ontario association. Considerable correspondence has passed between representatives of the association and the government, and the object was obtained, it is declared, without the necessity of sending a delegation to Ottawa from Ontario centers.

Announcement has been made by the Ontario association that a new secretary and organizer for the organization has been appointed. The man chosen is a Mr. Scott, of the Bryant Press, Limited, Toronto. At a recent general conference of the association in Toronto M. R. Nutting, a former publisher of Montreal, was named for the office, but Mr. Nutting's appointment was not confirmed.

President Bailie, with other officers, is trying to instill more co-operative enthusiasm into the exhibitors of Ontario outside of Toronto. Mr. Bailie has been able to line up many Toronto exhibitors for the association, but he declares that the outside exhibitors "are asleep." Not long ago he sent out ninety personal letters to out-of-town exhibitors, asking for their support, and he received only three replies. The association is busy with several legislative matters, but he finds it difficult to secure the co-operation of many exhibitors.

Kleine Starts Soldiers Letter League

Film Distributor Inaugurates Nationwide Movement to Fortify Morale of America's Fighting Men.

GEORGE KLEINE, who is distributing the big patriotic picture, "The Unbeliever," which is doing so much toward encouraging enlistment in the army and Marine Corps, like every other American citizen has his whole mind and energy devoted toward the success of the war and is bending every effort in the direction of the welfare of the army. Mr. Kleine is sponsor for "The Soldiers Letter League," a movement that will interest every man, woman and child in America and be a vast aid in the success of the cause for which our soldiers and sailors are fighting. Mr. Kleine said:

"The success of the battle belongs to the army of the greatest morale—the morale of the army depends upon the morale of the nation. The army and navy are but the arms and the nation is the body—the force of the blow that the arms can deliver is wholly dependent upon the strength and will power of the body. To my mind the most important factor in keeping the courage and spirits of our soldiers at the front up to the highest pitch is the letter from home. As a traveler with frequent absences from home I have known what a great stimulous it has been for the day's work to get my letter from home with all its welcome news. It has put sunshine in the cloudiest days and made great tasks seem light. So it is with almost every other man. Even wars become commonplace in the busy routine of our lives and we are apt to let days slip by between our letters to the Soldier Boys and create long lapses without realizing it. But they realize it—and there is no despair in the world like the hopeless feeling that your family and friends have forgotten you.

Send Soldiers Cheer and Keep Troubles at Home.

"So I am starting the Soldiers Letter League that no one will have opportunity to forget for a minute. I will have the co-operation of every moving picture theater in America. They will all have slides to be thrown on the screen at the beginning and end of every afternoon and evening performance that will arouse the spectator to his duty to write to the Soldiers and to write CHEERFUL letters—we should pack our troubles in our OWN kit bags. The soldier should have the news that is encouraging and helpful. Every little domestic thing will interest him and news about the kiddies is especially interesting. We should let him know that he is fighting for a concrete purpose and not an abstract principle. He is fighting so that his little brother will not have to do it over again. He is fighting for the protection of his mother and sister, and he is fighting for the protection of his native land—for the cause of justice and freedom. They are the cause of God —so they cannot and will not lose.

"I shall also have the co-operation of every minister, priest and rabbi in America in the success of the Soldiers Letter League. Every time their congregations are assembled they will be pledged to ask the members if they have written their letters to the boys and urge them not to overlook it—to look upon the matter as a sacred family duty.

"Requests will be forwarded to every lodge and society in existence here to make the Soldiers Letter League a part and parcel of their minutes and regular routine with the special request that they send lodge or society letters to the members of their organizations who are at the front.

"Every theater program on the most important page will bear the message of the Soldiers Letter League and I think that soon every newspaper in the land will carry the line 'write to your soldier boy to-day—cheer him and encourage him' at the head of the editorial column. In fact no avenue will be left untraveled that will lead to the success of the movement. The letter to the soldier will do more toward a quick and final victory than even the bullet or sword."

Mastbaum Memorial Is Dedicated

Many Leading Men in the Business Go to Eaglesville to Open Sanatorium Building.

MEN prominent in motion picture and theatrical circles of Philadelphia, New York and other cities journeyed to Eaglesville, near Norristown, Sunday, June 23, to participate in exercises attendant upon the presentation and dedication of the Stanley V. Mastbaum Memorial Building on the grounds of the Eaglesville Sanatorium.

This building, a much needed addition to this home for persons of both sexes, was erected and will be presented to the sanatorium by the many friends of the late Stanley V. Mastbaum, the necessary arrangements having been made by the following committee: Lawrence D. Beggs, chairman; Abe L. Einstein, secretary; Abe Sablosky, John McGuirk, Frank W. Buhler, Charles Segall, Louis Sablosky and C. J. Cunningham. The Rev. Dr. Leon H. Emalah, one of the most widely known Jewish rabbis in Philadelphia, offered the opening address and the address of presentation of the building was made by Judge Patterson, of the Common Pleas Court of Philadelphia County. Chairman Lawrence D. Beggs, on behalf of the memorial committee, turned the building over to the board of officers of the sanatorium, and on their behalf Louis Gerstley received it.

Universal to Continue War News Service

Company Announces That Its Two Releases Will Continue to Present Army and Navy Subjects as Before.

CORRECTING the impression which has prevailed in some quarters to the effect that official war films are to be issued through only one releasing organization, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is emphatic in declaring that both the Universal Current Events and the Universal Animated Weekly will continue regularly to present the latest official war pictures.

Universal exchanges have been deluged with inquiries requesting confirmation of these reports. The managers of these exchanges took the matter up with the home office, with the result that the following wire was sent to every one of the branches controlled by that company.

"Any statement that Universal Current Events and Universal Animated Weekly would not contain war news absolutely untrue and represents unfair competition. You can positively assure all exhibitors using both releases that we will continue to set the pace in issuance and presentation of war subjects."

As proof of the statement contained in this wire, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal organization, declares that according to arrangements effected by his company and the Committee on Public Information, Universal is assured of a regular weekly supply of war film.

"I have just received word from the editor of the Animated Weekly department that he had received one thousand feet of the latest war news issued by the Creel organization," said Mr. Laemmle, "and that enough footage to take care of all our requirements will be obtained regularly. Therefore, the impression that has been allowed to spread that only one company would handle subjects of this nature in the future is not only absolutely unfair to Universal but to every film company which markets news weeklies."

Wolbert to Produce Bluebirds.

William Wolbert, pioneer director and previous to the era of the films a stage actor of note, has been engaged by the Bluebird producers to direct Monroe Salisbury. The first production will be a French-Canadian story, "That Devil Bapteese," written by Bess Meredyth.

Wolbert comes to the Bluebird studios after three years with Vitagraph.

Five Cent Houses Passing in Portland

Oregon Picture Man Ascribes This Healthy Sign to Many Contributing Factors.

ALL indications are that five cent theaters in Portland, Oregon, will soon pass out. The reason is that persons that have patronized the nickel shows are being lifted among those who like to pay 20 cents for photoplay amusement, and the business men who liked to come in and see a few reels while resting are too busy to seek this diversion.

G. T. Holtzclaw, Circle theater, the big first class five-cent family theater, has come to this conclusion, and he will undoubtedly make a change in his policy to meet the situation soon. A dearth of appropriate short subjects is another drawback to the five-cent theater at this time. Mr. Holtzclaw says his evening business is excellent, but that the matinee crowds upon which all five-cent theaters must depend are no longer the rule in Portland.

The Portland Amusement Company, controlling nickel houses in the workingmen's part of the city, is also noting the difference in the matinee business. War time conditions, leaving few persons with leisure hours, is the cause.

The Circle will undoubtedly go to 10 and 15 cents, with the longer feature show as its policy.

Farrar Again Faces the Camera

Popular Singer Already at Work on Three Stories at Goldwyn's Fort Lee Studios.

NOW that Geraldine Farrar has begun work at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee on her first Goldwyn production it will be violating no confidence to tell of the big surprise received by Reginald Barker, the director engaged by Goldwyn to make Miss Farrar's productions.

Barker arrived last week from the Pacific Coast in a hurry, bringing with him several assistants and a portmanteau of Goldwyn manuscripts which Samuel Goldfish had telegraphed for the moment he signed the Barker contract. Before the manuscripts arrived Mr. Goldfish had left for the East and Barker alone was there to register "surprise" and "shock."

Geraldine Farrar, Her Director, Reginald Barker, and Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn's Art Director, at Goldwyn Fort Lee Studios.

In the first place there wasn't an operatic story.

And there wasn't a costume story.

And there wasn't a story that even faintly suggested any motion picture ever made before by the famous operatic heroine.

Instead of all these there were three manuscripts. Each story provides an unlooked for and wholly unexpected role. In each production Geraldine Farrar is called upon to do the unusual thing that no one would ever anticipate her doing, and behind this lies the combined commercial intelligence of Goldwyn and Miss Farrar herself.

"It is time to find novelty and newness of theme for my productions," reasoned Miss Farrar. "I want to enact roles that I have never had before. I want to do the last thing that any one on earth would expect me to do."

Blackton to Make "Getting Together"

In Conjunction with British Recruiting Mission Producer Will Put on Big Propaganda.

J. STUART BLACKTON has affixed his signature to a unique contract by which he not only acquires the screen rights to "Getting Together," the patriotic and recruiting play now running at the Shubert Theater, New York, but is also commissioned to transfer it to celluloid under the auspices and with the co-operation of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission.

This singular war play is the joint work of Major Beith, who also won fame as Ian Hay, author of "The First Hundred Thousand," and other stories; J. Hartley Manners, the playwright who gave us "Peg o' My Heart," "Out There" and "Happiness," and Percival Knight, the footlight favorite who is also featured in the stage version, with Blanche Bates and Holbrook Blinn.

Mr. Blackton has engaged Anthony P. Kelly to collaborate with him in elaborating the plot for the screen and to write the scenario. A prominent feminine star, whose name will be announced later, is to be featured in the production.

"Getting Together" was first produced for one week only at the Lyric, where it was declared a most thrilling war play, and after a tour of large eastern cities it was brought back to New York a few weeks ago for an indefinite run. Presented under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission and with the co-operation of the United States military and naval forces and the tank Britannia it has created a furore at every performance, and in further inspiring the patriotism of its audiences it has induced many recruits to "get together."

Officials in charge of the play have for some time realized that its propaganda value would be greater and more far-reaching in screen form than on the stage. However, production plans submitted did not meet with approval. The name of J. Stuart Blackton was suggested and the matter presented to him. Fortunately, Mr. Blackton's interests were so arranged that he could heed his patriotic enthusiasm over the idea. He has just completed "Missing," the last of his first series of four special features for distribution by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Blackton will have at his command soldiers and sailors, locations and effects rarely available to the film producer. The British-Canadian Recruiting Mission will furnish him numerous war scenes taken under fire a tthe front and on No Man's Land, to be interpolated in the film.

Huff Undismayed by Fire Damage

North Carolina Theater Manager Suffers Loss of $5,000 But Opens Up in Temporary Location.

AN inspiring example of pluck in the face of disaster is given by A. B. Huff, manager of the Broadway theater, High Point, N. C., in a letter to C. F. Senning, Fox Film Corporation, branch manager at Washington. The Broadway has just been burned out, Mr. Huff writes, at a loss of $5,000.

"The seats are ruined, as are the walls; two pianos are a smoldering mass of debris; ticket and operating machines and other expensive and valuable fixtures are partially, if not wholly, damaged by smoke and water," says Mr. Huff. "Notwithstanding it all, we are chuck full of that virtue which Jack London was prone to call guts; and while the fire damaged us to a great extent, it has failed utterly and dismally to put the damper on our spirits; and we have not yet laid down the deck.

"We have made arrangements for opening temporarily in another location. On a side street and with a limited seating capacity the new house is not nearly so desirable as the old site; but is the best we can do at present."

Pathe Exchange Makes Promotions

Names New Managers at Oklahoma City, Albany, Chicago, Dallas and Los Angeles.

PROMOTIONS and appointments of interest are recorded in the Pathe sales organization. F. B. Pickrel being advanced from the position of salesman in the Kansas City office to manager at Oklahoma City, B. M. Moran becoming manager at Albany, F. B. Rogers manager at Chicago, James W. Hill, Jr., manager at Dallas and E. D. Tate manager at Los Angeles.

Pathe has thirty branches in this country and Sales Manager F. C. Quimby is now making a tour to the far west and will swing back around the circle, visiting the southern cities as well.

Fred B. Pickrel was formerly one of the star salesmen at Kansas City. He is one of the many Pathe officials who has risen from the ranks in the Pathe service and he owes his promotion to consistent hard work and to his live wire methods.

B. M. Moran during the past eight years has established a remarkable record in the industry. He entered the field as an exhibitor eight years ago. Later he joined the Mutual Film Company and served in turn with V-L-S-E, Triangle and George Kleine.

James W. Hill, Jr. is a well known figure in the selling end of the business while E. D. Tate is a showman of long and varied experience in the exchange field, having also been manager of the big Liberty Theater, Seattle, immediately before joining Pathe.

WILSON TO PUBLISH HOUSE ORGAN.

Carey Wilson, sales manager for the First National Exchange of New York, will go into the publishing business about July 1. Mr. Wilson has decided to issue a house organ for the promotion of First National interests in New York City.

It will be a four-page periodical printed in a manner that will attract attention, containing news and special articles that will be of vital interest to all those selling or exhibiting First Natonal attractions in this part of the country.

Mr. Wilson will be editor-in-chief. His whole staff and many of his friends will contribute to the publication from time to time.

To Distribute Official Films Abroad

Public Information Committee Sends Messrs. Hoagland, Wheeler and Van Arsdale to Europe.

A MOVE of much import to the moving picture industry has just been made by the Committee on Public Information. Three representatives of the division of films are sailing for the other side to establish in Allied and neutral countries a distribution system for United States Official Films. There are H. C. Hoagland, Lucian C. Wheeler and Charles F. Van Arsdale. The headquarters will be established in Paris, under the direction of Mr. Hoagland. From that point operations will be directed. A branch will be opened immediately in London, with Mr. Wheeler in charge, and the intention is to establish offices as rapidly as conditions will permit in Spain, Portugal, Italy, Holland and Switzerland.

It will be the purpose of the foreign offices to distribute in these countries all films released by the division of films in the United States, and thus for the first time acquaint the peoples there with what America is doing to help win the war and to give them besides an accurate idea of the attitude of this country toward Germany and the war.

The foreign work will also include the co-ordination of the United States Signal Corps abroad with the activities of the division of films here. General Pershing will provide films from the front, showing what is transpiring from day to day, in co-operation with the Paris office. The films so secured will be shown in the foreign countries above referred to as well as in the United States.

The three representatives are eminently qualified to fill the posts to which they have been appointed.

Mr. Hoagland was for several months general manager of the Selig company and before that and later was connected with Pathe. He came from Pathe to the division of films.

Mr. Wheeler was for fourteen years in the Secret Service, acting as personal attendant to Presidents Roosevelt and Taft and President Wilson. Three years ago he became an employe of the Selig company and come from that office to the present appointment.

Mr. Van Arsdale was for a number of years with Pathe as assistant to George Fitzmaurice, Astra director.

War Changes England's Film Viewpoint

Fox Representative Says Dwindling of Stage Attractions Has Contributed to Creating of New Screen Clientele.

J. FRANK SHEA, European representative of the Fox Film Corporation, arrived home last week, after a trip filled with thrilling adventures. In England, says Mr. Shea, the motion picture had not been looked on with favor by all classes, the wealthier and more cultured people professing to believe that the films were unworthy of their patronage. The war, however, has changed this. Most of the popular actors of the legitimate stage are now in service, so that the spoken drama's attraction has dwindled The result is that the people have had to go to the films for entertainment. Once inside the motion picture theater many who scoffed at films have become converted and are now confirmed patrons of the cinema.

More than all the books written, and better than all the diplomatists that this country has sent to the Court of St. James, the motion picture has revealed to the British the manners and customs of Americans, so that today the Britisher is getting a clearer idea of what sort of people we are.

The year just ended, Mr. Shea reported, has been the most successful in the history of the films in England, despite the war, air raids and high prices. The year to come, he believes, will be even more prosperous.

As an indication of the change in the British people's regard for films generally, Mr. Shea cited the fact that the British Government has at last seen the possibility of the motion picture as a means of arousing patriotism among the people and is now issuing propaganda films.

While the air raids on London have resulted in a curtailment of night amusement hours to the period of from 7 o'clock to 10, the motion picture theaters are crowded nightly. The programs, he said, are usually from nine to twelve reels long, being made up of a feature film, a comedy, a two-reeler and a news picture.

WORLD SIGNS SCENARIO EXPERT AS READER.

World Pictures has just signed as first reader in the scenario department Miss Rosalie Ashton, who comes to the World with exceptionally valuable experience in scenario writing and in the determination of what constitutes good screen entertainment.

Miss Ashton began writing stories for the screen when she was a cub reporter on the New York Times. She joined the Kinemacolor Company in London, appearing in various roles until she felt that she had learned the tricks of the trade.

Returning to America Miss Ashton joined the Lasky company and spent an entire year writing continuities. From there she went to Fox and then became staff writer for Goldwyn. Now she is with the World, where she expects to do the best work of her entire career.

FAMOUS PLAYERS OPENS RECREATION ROOM.

On Monday, June 17, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation opened a recreation room for the 150 women employes of its New York offices at 485 Fifth avenue. The room is situated on the eighth floor of the building and is spacious and attractively furnished. It will be open every day during the noon hour, a portion being set aside as a place where the young women may eat their luncheons, coffee and tea being served at a nominal price.

Through the co-operation of the Scenario Department a library has been established, which will be available to all employes during a stipulated hour in the morning.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

MAURICE TOURNEUR has taken up cudgels against the conventionalities of many veteran screen characters. "If the photoplay is to advance," he declares, "we must throw the whole impossible crew overboard."

Proceeding to Toss 'Em.

"The Chief Feminine Interest," he explains, "is usually a cute, curly-haired, pouting ingenue who skips playfully through beautiful gardens always with nice back-lighting effects, or else she is a poor persecuted heroine working under factory conditions that haven't been known for forty years. She gets smart clothes somehow or other, and is continually annoyed by a scoundrelly foreman.

Excoriating the F. I.

"Or else the Feminine Interest is a vampire whose single glance brings every man to his knees before her. But the vamp is happily passing. The ingenue star, however, continues to be torn between the idiocy of the beaded-eyed hero and the inexplicable villainy of the heavy. So she turns to a menagerie of dumb animals, usually such animals as goats, ducks, or pigs, which, of course, are to be found in every home in real life.

Harry Carey Will Be Glad.

"Then there are the impulsive, generous cowboys who spend their time lolling in front of the sheriff's office or dancing madly with decollete dance hall girls at the Last Chance Cafe. I have yet to see a cowboy looking after a cow.

"There is our old friend the convict who insists upon wearing stripes, although such prison attire has been abolished. Stripes seem to reconcile him to the rigors of prison existence. And he always escapes with absolute ease when the inclination strikes him.

On With the Execution.

"I might go on explaining all the rest of them. There is the screen doctor with his Van Dyke beard, the rough but kindly sheriff with his tin badge, the faithful old negro servitor, the regenerated Western bad man, the irate landlady always demanding her rent, the underworld folks turkey trotting in a slum cafe, the princess of the imaginary kingdom, the brutal Russian grand duke, the guileless mountain maid, the beautiful slavey with her tatters and perfect coiffure, the school teacher in the mining camp, the cool and calculating gambler, the upright district attorney, the moonshiners with their regulation feud, and all the rest."

The English Sense of Humor.

London, June 19.—The embargo on American cinema films, which threatened British cinema houses with disaster, has been modified, and approved films will be imported under a special license. It is rumored that the Board of Trade officials fancied films were great, bulky cylinders of material of the size they appeared on the screen. Such cylinders would have taken considerable cargo space. But when it was pointed out the films were only the size of spool cotton the order was altered.—New York World.

Canners Can Can What They Can.

Billie Rhodes has just sold her California ostrich farm to a firm of meat canners, and thereby hangs a tale-feather. Since ostrich feathers became passe for women's hats, the Rhodes ostrich farm near San Bernardino has been more or less of a white elephant on its owner's hands, and Miss Rhodes has maintained the expensive establishment rather for sentimental than business reasons.

Now the Rhodes ostriches are serving their country in cans instead of in hats. Some gastronomic scientist has established that ostrich meat, properly cooked and canned, is indistinguishable from the choicest turkey meat. There are 1,200 ostriches on what was the Rhodes place and they are being put through the cannery as fast as the facilities will permit.

Ostrich owners in various parts of the state are negotiating with the canning firm for the sale of their stock. It is estimated that 11,000 of the long-legged birds are available for food purposes. Miss Rhodes, having sold her farm, is now considering the advisability of engaging permanently in the business of raising ostriches for food instead of feathers.—Mutual Publicity.

The Boss Reviews the Reviewers.

By reading the reviews of the shows Monday night, on this page, you will notice it was raining. If you ever want to know what happened out of the ordinary in the vaudeville theaters of New York on a Monday night, read Variety. A Variety reviewer never gives his fellow-critic any credit for intelligence, which likely arises through each of them reading the other's stuff. So, when it rains, or it snows, or it's very hot, or there's another Liberty Loan drive on, each Variety man says he knew of it.

Rain most always happens on Monday night. The theatrical managers appear to have made an understanding with some one about that. Monday night is usually the poorest for business and the rain, if it isn't too hard or too near show time, keeps the people off the street and draws them to the theater. Just what else would draw to the theater nowadays the same theatrical manager would be delighted to hear about.—Sime, in Variety.

Heralding the Movie "Ace."

With the release of "The Danger Game," starring Madge Kennedy, an "Ace" was created when Roy Somerville brought down his fifth production current at one time. And a few weeks later he added another to the string by the release of "The Mysterious Client," with Mrs. Castle.

Of course, "Reggie Mixes In," with Doug. Fairbanks, "The Children in the House" and "The Devil's Needle," starring Norma Talmadge, are re-issues, and "Our Little Wife," a Madge Kennedy vehicle, is playing the "small time," but still the total of six current productions entitles him to the distinction of "Movie Ace."

If his typewriter doesn't jam he expects to increase the total, for his "Hitting the Trail," with Carlyle Blackwell, is nearing completion at the World studios; "The First Law," with Irene Castle, is dated for an early release by Pathe, production has already started on his handiwork for Billy Burke at the Famous Players; Lillian Walker with her own company, and Nat Goodwin by the Kennedy Theaters, Inc. Write out checks for $25,000 and mark "worthless" across the face and exhibit these in your lobby. You might put your advertisement on the back of some of these checks and hand them out on the street.

Exhibit copies of divorce subpoenas in your lobby. Take a marriage certificate, filled out with fictitious names, tear it in half or quarters and put it alongside the subpoena. Get the most prominent jurists and clergymen—Protestant and Catholic—to view (name of feature) and induce your newspaper editors to interview them on the general subject of divorce.

Arrange with a jeweler for one hundred rings of queer design. Of course the rings must be cheap. Distribute them among your women patrons. It will get them talking. Let it be whispered about that a queer engagement ring figures in the coming attraction.

You Can't Eclipse a Director.

Will S. Davis, who is directing Anna Q. Nilsson and Franklyn Farnum in "Judgment," returned to Metro's studios in Hollywood after several hours on location. He was in a bad mood.

"It's terrible," he exclaimed to the guardian of the studio gates. "First they spring the daylight saving scheme, and this afternoon the sun got dimmer and dimmer until by four o'clock there wasn't enough light for shooting."

"Why," said the gateman, "didn't you see the eclipse?"

"No," replied Davis, "we were out on a new location; and I'm a stranger around here anyway."—Metro Publicity.

More About the River Ramble.

Supplemental to last week's report on the Palisades and Shore Road:

During the winter there has been constructed of native stone a commodious bath house at Hazard Landing, about a mile above Edgewater. At present, on Saturday and Sunday, a motor ferry runs from the foot of West 181st street, but the Interstate Park Commission expects to have running, by July Fourth, a ferryboat drawn from the Dyckman street fleet, and plying between Hazard Landing and West 157th street regularly.

Nature is at her loveliest just now. The crags of the Palisades look down upon billows of verdant branches that grow from thickly-clustered trees that come right down to the footpath along the Hudson. If you would ferry across from West 129th street to Edgewater, walk up the River road and climb the start of Fort Lee hill until you have passed the school and firehouse.

Just across the way a little further on stands a cottage, painted blue, and beside this house a trail starts down from the River road to end, after devious windings, on the footpath right along the Hudson.

There are so few people participating in the bounty of nature spread, free for those who would indulge, within a five-cent ferry fare from Manhattan, that one is inclined to believe New Yorkers are pitiably unkind to themselves in neglecting the River path and its delights.

Griffith Talks of the Making of "The Great Love"

"I never really knew the full meaning of the word 'graciousness' until I went to England and began to produce my picture-plays over there. I was in a rather delicate position. The personages with whom I was working had kindly offered me their services as actors and actresses in my story; they were giving me their most valuable time simply as a courtesy. But a more willing and obliging assembly I have never had."

David Wark Griffith was speaking in a brief pause during the assembling of his forthcoming Artcraft release, "The Great Love," and explaining a remark he had dropped but a few moments before concerning courtesy.

Mr. Griffith will soon offer "The Great Love" to the public as the first of a series of special productions following "Hearts of the World."

It was in return for producing "Hearts of the World" as a propaganda film for the British Government that the foremost personages of the empire offered to appear in one of the master director's photoplays, and in addition to such popular photoplayers as Lillian Gish, Henry Walthall, Robert Harron, George Fawcett he has Queen Alexandria, Elizabeth Asquith, Lady Diana Manners, Countess Maserine, Mrs. Montagu, Lady Lavery, Katherine Stuart-Wortley, and a number of others.

"The title of my picture, 'The Great Love,' may mean many things," said Mr. Griffith. "It may mean the love of country, and again it may mean the love of individuals. I am not going to tell you whether or not it is either or both," he smiled, "but I hope to show the remarkable transition of the butterfly life of British society to that of stern, sincere, hard workers in the great cause of winning the war.

"I was permitted to photograph practically anywhere I wished. I remember one place. It was at a beautiful country place that at one time was one of the favorite spots of King Edward VII. In the back of an arbor was a tree planted there by the Emperor of Germany while on a visit long before the war. The tree still stands and blossoms, but the tablet which commemorates the occasion of the planting has been buried deep in the ground at its roots.

"Queen Alexandria was gracious enough to come down to Lady Diana Manners' hospital which she conducts on her country estate and devoted nearly an entire day in arranging the hospital scenes and appearing in them herself. The Queen is greatly interested in the cinema, and showed a familiarity with a number of photoplays, and when they visited "Intolerance," the first time they had been to the theater in two years, she and the King sent for me to come to their box.

"I went to London a total stranger to those with whom I worked. I felt that I could do some good toward letting the world know war conditions and what England and France were doing toward winning it. These ladies and gentlemen who appear in 'The Great Love' agreed with me, and, although they are directing and supervising the affairs of the empire, they gladly took the time to assist in the making of the picture. It was an honor paid the photodrama which could not be equaled."

"Ghost of Rancho" Soon.

Pathe announces for release this summer the new Bryant Washburn romantic comedy, "The Ghost of the Rancho." This is an interesting comedy drama of the Southwest with Rhea Mitchell in the cast.

Here's Metro's Cast for "Our Mrs. McChesney"

PLAYERS of prominence on stage and screen have been chosen to surround Ethel Barrymore in Metro's "Our Mrs. McChesney," which has been adapted for her use by Luther A. Reed from the Edna Ferber stories as dramatized by Miss Ferber and George V. Hobart. At least two members of the screen play also supported Miss Barrymore when she presented the stage production at the Empire theater, New York.

Huntley Gordon has been chosen for the important part of T. A. Buck, Jr., playing opposite the star. Emma McChesney (Miss Barrymore) is the traveling saleswoman, and later the secretary of the "Featherbloom Petticoat" company, and T. A. Buck, Jr., the junior member of the firm, is later the owner. Lucille Lee Stewart, another prominent member of the cast, has the feminine role second in importance to that of the star, Vera, the "chorus lady."

A favorite Metro player, Ricca Allen, will have the amusing role of Henrietta Stitch. Miss Allen has been identified with more Metro successes than almost any other player. The versatile actor, John Daley Murphy, has the part of Abel Fromkin, representing the "Fromkin Form-Fitting Skirt," represented by Emma McChesney.

Wilfred Lytell, brother of Bert Lytell, the Metro star, has been engaged for the leading juvenile role of Jack McChesney, Emma McChesney's son. William H. St. James is the "Fat Ed Myers" of the production, a part that will be remembered by all who have seen the stage play or read the stories. Mr. St. James was the originator of the role in Miss Barrymore's dramatic company.

Walter Percival, known favorably in every branch of the theatrical profession, has been engaged for the part of "Beauty" Blair. Rose Wood, a Baltimore girl who has only recently adopted screen acting, has an interesting role.

Big Top All Ready for Fred Stone.

Preparatory to the advent in the Western film colony of the redoubtable Fred Stone, comedian extraordinary and athlete supreme, who is to make pictures for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, a big circus top is going up across the street from the studio at Selma and Vine. The canvas men, the stake drivers, all are busy. And soon there will be the performers in spangled tights, clowns with plastered faces, horses—tanbark and pink lemonade, peanut butchers, and ticket sellers—but the circus will not be open to the public.

Donald Crisp will direct Fred Stone, and he is as busy as a bee preparing for his distinguished star. Nat Deverich is assisting, and Henry Kotani, the Oriental camera expert, is getting his lenses polished.

Rhea Mitchell in Lytell Support.

Rhea Mitchell will play opposite Bert Lytell in the Metro star's "Boston's Blackie's Little Pal." Miss Mitchell, who as a screen star in her own right has gained a large following, is cast for the leading feminine role in the Lytell production, that of Mary, business partner of "Boston Blackie," gentleman, scholar and master crook.

Metro to Stir Up Things for "To Hell with the Kaiser"

A WHIRLWIND campaign of advertising and publicity, record-breaking in its scope and thoroughness, has been launched throughout the country by Metro to put over Screen Classics, Inc.'s super-feature, "To Hell with the Kaiser." Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, regards this latest Screen Classics, Inc., feature as the greatest of the series, and has instructed each Metro Exchange to get squarely behind it to give the exhibitor every possible aid in his publicity work.

Among the many ideas contrived by Metro to advertise this subject is one in which the telephone plays an important part. Each exchange has been instructed to close all its telephone conversations with, "Well, to Hell With the Kaiser," instead of the conventional "Good bye." The originality and novelty of the idea as well as the fact that it is probably the most inexpensive, simple and effective form of advertising ever devised has made a great appeal and is rapidly spreading. This is evidenced in the fact that business letters are being closed in this fashion and social business talks are invariably terminated with the title of Screen Classics, Inc.'s newest super-feature.

Another novel stunt which is getting the title of the picture before the public is a lapel pin reading "To Hell With the Kaiser." Several million of these will be distributed. Paper stickers with the title are also being scattered broadcast. In addition to these catch-phrases for similar advertising and also for use in programs and house organs have been devised.

A large, striking and effective series of smashing display advertisements have been got up which will be supplied exhibitors. The paper on the production is equally striking and artistic. One six-sheet show a giant octopus with the head of the Kaiser, spreading its tentacles around the world and devouring helpless women and children, being particularly out of the ordinary.

Los Angeles Strong for Lyons-Moran Comedies

ALTHOUGH the Lyons-Moran Star comedies are popular the country over, nowhere are they more popular than at Los Angeles, the country's hub of motion picture making activities. According to advices received from Dave Bershon, manager of the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., in the City of Angels, three comedies featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran were headlined at as many Broadway houses last week. One of these theaters was Grauman's.

"Some of the film people are under the impression that you can bunk the tank town exhibitors with pictures of poor quality," declared the Universal exchange manager. "They may be speaking from their own experiences, but I do not know that you can't put anything over on Los Angeles fans.

"Composed to a large extent of professionals, they are too well versed in pictures to be fooled. To go over well in this city a picture must possess more than ordinary quality. The fact that three theaters decided to make the Lyons-Moran Star comedies a regular feature of their bills speaks highly for these pictures."

Artcraft Releases Three Big Subjects in July

THREE Artcraft big features representing a wide diversity of subjects are announced for release in July. They are William S. Hart in "Shark Monroe" on July 8; "We Can't Have Everything," a Cecil B. DeMille production, also July 8, and Elsie Ferguson in "The Danger Mark" on July 29.

In "Shark Monroe," which Mr. Hart, himself, directed, the player enacts a role which differs radically from any in which he has previously appeared. It is predicted that those who have seen him so often in his Western portrayals will marvel at his new characterization, for as "Shark Monroe" he will be seen as the master of a sealing schooner. Katherine MacDonald appears for the first time as Mr. Hart's leading woman.

Cecil B. DeMille's special production of Rupert Hughes' "We Can't Have Everything" scheduled for the same week is especially noteworthy for its cast, in which Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter, Wanda Hawley, Theodore Roberts, and Sylvia Breamer are featured players. Other artists who will be seen in the production are Thurston Hall, Raymond Hatton, Tully Marshall, James Neill, Ernest Joy, Billy Elmer, Charles Ogle, and Sylvia Ashton. The story is full of comedy, viewing the foibles of worldly people with a cynical and philosophical eye.

The final Artcraft offering of the month is "The Danger Mark," an Elsie Ferguson vehicle. The screen version of the popular Robert W. Chambers novel is the work of Charles Maigne, and Hugh Ford directed the production.

Kleine Issuing "Unchastened Woman."

The George Kleine offices have in charge the distribution of the new Rialto De Luxe production, "The Unchastened Woman," for all territory outside of Greater New York. "The Unchastened Woman" is made from the successful play of the same name by Dr. Louis Anspacher, and in its translation to the screen loses none of the delightful qualities that made it the enormous success it was on the speaking stage. Grace Valentine is the star, and she is supported by a number of clever artists.

Olive Tell has the role of the American heroine in "To Hell With the Kaiser," to be released by Metro. Miss Tell was recently seen on Broadway as co-star with Henry Miller in Mr. Miller's production of the "Fountain of Youth," and with William Courtenay and Thomas Wise in "General Post."

Prominent Players Cast in "The Glorious Adventure"

SCREEN players of prominence are in the cast which supports Mae Marsh in her latest Goldwyn production, "The Glorious Adventure," adapted from Edith Barnard Delano's popular story, "When Carey Came to Town," and to be released July 14.

The new Mae Marsh picture marks the first appearance in Goldwyn pictures of Wyndham Standing, long prominent as leading men. Standing was a prime stage favorite before his entry into motion picture work and, though ouly thre years in the film field, has been a factor in the success of large screen productions.

Again is Alec B. Francis, the veteran film favorite, to be seen in support of Miss Marsh. Though Francis has the role of Scott, the butler, his work is important. Mabel Ballin, long identified with Goldwyn pictures, has an important role, too.

A part requiring talent of a high order is entrusted to Sara Alexander, an actress rememberel for her splendid work in support of Lydia Thompson, John T. Raymond and Kyrle Bellew, after a successful six-year engagement in stock at Salt Lake City. Paul Stanton has the role of Bob Williamson, chum of Hiram Ward, played by Mr. Standing. Stanton is well known for his juvenile characterizations in Broadway stage productions. Others prominent in the cast of "The Glorious Adventure" are Gladys Wilson, Irene Blackwell and V. Vorhees Nood.

Hobart Henley is the director.

Drumier Has Strong Role In World Film's "Heredity"

Jack Drumier, an accomplished actor, has been engaged by World Pictures for the important role of Edgars in a production entitled "Heredity," directed by W. P. S. Earle and starring June Elvidge.

Mr. Drumier has had an interesting career. At the age of twenty-one, after being graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, he began the practice of law in his native city, Philadelphia. After three years of considerable success he went on the stage. In addition to filling stock engagements as leading man in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Buffalo, Syracuse, Montreal and Toronto he starred in "Secret Service," "Held by the Enemy," "Captain Swift," 'A Gilded Fool," "Peaceful Valley," "Jim the Penman" and other big successes.

Six years ago, while visiting the Reliance studio, he was persuaded to appear in a production and then induced to remain for six months. After this he made a few pictures with the Victor company, and in 1913 joined the Biograph and remained with them until they ceased producing. Among his personal successes while with the Biograph were Caleb Plummer in 'The Cricket on the Hearth," Paganini in "The Blind Violinist," in the Roy Norton stories and numerous other pictures.

West Is Not In It with East, Says Louise Huff

"The thing that has impressed me most in coming from California to New York," says Louise Huff, the new World star, whose first World Picture, "T'other Dear Charmer," is now being filmed, "is the immense energy here. California may have the climate, but New York has the get up and get!"

Miss Huff went on to compare east and west conditions as relating to a film star more carefully. "I have spent a great deal of time in California," continued Miss Huff, "and I thought conditions were splendid there, but it always annoyed me to be forced to spend so much money on living expenses and to waste so much time in securing clothes. In California a film star is considered a nobody unless she has an expensive bungalow and a flock of servants. Here I live in a hotel more comfortably and delightfully and also more economically.

"On the coast I frequently was forced to make an exhaustive trip to San Francisco to secure the clothes I wanted, or to even send to New York or Chicago for them, and then be disappointed in them when they arrived. Here I am in the fashion center of the United States. I can get anything I want and exactly what I want, when I want it. The situation is ideal in this respect and in so many others that I am willing to do without the famed California climate for the pleasure of being here where everything is done with so much enthusiasm and refreshing energy."

Porto Rico Officers See "The Kaiser."

Jewel's production, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," has enlisted for the duration of the war. Taking effect immediately, the production will be utilized by the military authorities of Porto Rico for the purpose of creating the proper "hate-up" toward Germany and all things German in the hearts of the students attending the Second Officers' Training Camp.

This use of the Jewel Film's patriotic possibilities came as the result of a letter sent to Alex Goldman, manager of the Universal office at San Juan, which controls the distribution of the production in that possession. The letter was signed by Lieut.-Col. Orval P. Townshend, commanding officer of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infanty.

July Will Be Unusually Heavy Month for Pathe

THERE will be no midsummer desuetude with the house of Pathe in July. Four big features will be released. On the program dated July 7 the major item will be "Annexing Bill," with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in the leading parts.

On July 17, "More Trouble," with Frank Keenan, is the bright spot on the program. The big hit registered by "More Trouble" when it had an advance showing for a week at the Rivoli in New York has created interest among exhibitors.

July 21 provides for the release of a new Baby Marie Osborne picture, "Cupid by Proxy." On July 28 comes "The First Law," a Gilson Willets play with Irene Castle and Antonio Moreno as co-stars. The "First Law" is by all odds the best picture play in which Mrs. Castle has appeared.

Four good comedies are scheduled for release in July. On the 7th Harold Lloyd in "An Ozard Romance," the 14th, Toto in "Fire the Cook"; the 21st, Harold Lloyd in "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany," and on the 28th, Toto in "Beach Nuts."

July will see the windup of Pathe's biggest serial success, "The House of Hate." The eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth episodes will be released during the month. Four Post Travel Series Pictures, Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7, and the last four episodes of "Britain's Bulwarks" will also go in the July program.

The seven-reel special, "Moral Suicide," and the big new "Allies' Official War Review," will be released each week. "The Allies' Official War Review," issued by the Committee on Public Information, will be released on Mondays.

Ambitious plans have been made by Pathe for the release of "The First Law," in which Irene Castle and Antonio Moreno appear. It is one of the best Astra-made pictures in some time.

"The First Law" is scheduled for release in July. Gilson Willets, who is now a member of the Pathe scenario staff in New York, wrote "The First Law," which was very widely read in book form.

"Joan of the Woods" (World).

"Joan of the Woods" is the title of the World Pictures release on July 22, the story being written by Louise Vale and the picture being directed by Travers Vale. June Elvidge is starred in this new World Production in the role of Joan and she is supported by George McQuarrie in the role of Judge Wentworth; John Bowers in the role of Norman Dicks, and a notable cast.

H. K. Lucas Ranks High Among Simplex Distributors

HARRY K. LUCAS, general manager of the Lucas Theater Supply Company, 158 Marietta street, Atlanta, who lately spent several days in New York City for the purpose of buying accessory supplies, has become known as one of the most successful distributors of the Simplex projection machine. Mr. Lucas lately established a record by disposing of two carloads of Simplex projectors in twenty-six days. This achievement is the outcome of ten years' experience in the business and the adherence to a well-defined sales policy.

Mr. Lucas, whom F. H. Richardson, the projection expert, designated as "a high voltage wire of the livest sort," on a visit to the Lucas establishment a while ago, owns one of the most complete supply houses in the country, not excepting those in New York and Chicago.

Although the Lucas company operates in ten states, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mfssissippi, Tennessee, Louisiana, Southern Virginia and Texas, no road salesmen are employed, nor is the firm dependent upon dealers for its sales. Everything is conducted by mail from its headquarters in Atlanta. This has been made possible by the inauguration of a sales plan worked out in detail.

Mr Lucas is a believer in printer's ink, and lots of it to obtain the best results. He dips deeply into it on all occasions. It is nothing for him to have struck off twenty thousand pamphlets or envelope inserts at one time, and never prints less than ten thousand of anything that seems well worth while having printed at all.

One of Mr Lucas' principal means of keeping in touch with customers, old and new, is a lively little house organ. It is merely a four-leaf pamphlet, but like the organs in up-to-date picture theaters, it makes itself heard effectively. It is called the "Cosiki," and according to the announcement on the cover it is "published in an effort to enlighten the skeptical." It comes out once a month and contains timely hints on all material needed by theaters. In every number appears a signed editorial by Mr Lucas on whatever topic is uppermost in the minds of theater men at the time.

Strong on Correspondence Novelties.

Mr Lucas is always bringing out something new in the way of envelope inserts. Now it will pertain to his Hakilu oil, or then it will be an announcement reminding theater managers of his repair department. All these notices are made distinctive by the use of half-tones and line cuts, and terse phraseology. For instance, take the matter of carbons. The manager on opening his mail some morning is greeted with the following. "Have you been stung? Hundreds have. Then don't let the same bee sting you twice." In the upper left-hand corner is an illustration of a bee, with a long workmanlike stinger and an expression of tense earnestness, showing that the bee has had his mind on his work. With the attention of the prospective buyer thus gained, Mr Lucas then goes on to show in a few words to the point how one can save money by buying his carbons.

Mr. Lucas has found the means to prevent all lost motion, by observing the rule that "order is Heaven's first law."

This strict observance of system carried out in the minutest detail has eliminated unnecessary delay in repair work and has facilitated the dispatch of orders. Consequently, his slogan, "We have a monopoly of promptness," means something to all who see it. By featuring promptness in his business Mr. Lucas has found that promptness, on the basis of one good turn deserves another, has featured him as a progressive supply dealer.

The firm carries a large stock of machine parts and accessories. As an instance of this, there are never less than one hundred thousand carbons on hand. The Lucas Theater Supply Company occupies two floors, thirty by one hundred feet, at 158 Marietta street. On the ground floor is a display room, a private projection room and the repair department. Upstairs is the mail order department, additional display space and the office.

Projection Room is a Model.

The projection room deserves special mention, as it has become an institution in Atlanta film circles. It was constructed for the use of the film exchanges there in the demonstration of pictures for out-of-town exhibitors. The room seats forty persons and meaures 12 by 35 feet. The booth is 6 feet deep by 12 wide.

Ten years ago Mr. Lucas became associated with the amusement field as manager of the Opera House at Americus, Ga. In 1908 he went to the Dreamland theater at Columbus, and for six months in 1909 he was manager of the Liberty theater in Savannah. He then went to Dubuque, Iowa, where he remained for nine months, and in 1910 he went back south and established the Dixieland Film exchange in Jacksonville. A year later he moved to Charlotte, N. C., and 1912 saw him in Atlanta, where he opened the United American Film Company, with offices in the Brown-Randolph Building. Sometime afterward he moved to Walton street, where in a short time his business grew so rapidly that he found it necessary to seek larger quarters. It was then that he went to his present location at Marietta street, leasing the entire building and forming the Lucas Theater Supply Company, capitalized at $25,000.

Betty Blythe in Coming O. Henry.

Betty Blythe, whose rise has been one of the interesting developments in the picture world of the last few months, and Alice Terry, Bernard Siegel, and William Shea are presented in the current O. Henry story, "The Brief Debut of Tildy," a General Film Company release. This is a delightful comedy-drama picture in which one of O. Henry's unexpected twists brings about a novel ending.

Following this release will be "The Coming of Faro Nell," a Wolfville Tale, featuring Patricia Palmer and Robert Burns.

Exhibitors Show Interest in Fox's Big Six Reissues

FOLLOWING the announcement that William Fox will release "The Big Six of 1918," "A Fool There Was," "The Clemenceau Case," "The Two Orphans," "The Plunderer," "The Bondman" and "A Soldier's Oath" in a revised and better form, letters have been received from exhibitors, it is announced from the Fox offices, comparing the size of the houses, when those pictures were first shown with the theaters of today.

It is declared that despite the success which those pictures had in their original form there were thousands of persons in every city in the country who did not see them because of the small size of the theaters when they were first shown. Not only that, but in many cases the pictures' runs had terminated before the productions has exhausted their drawing capacity.

Another thing exhibitors stress in writing to the Fox corporation is that when the pictures were first shown they had in their casts many players who have since achieved stardom. In a way these "Big Six" have made traditions in the motion picture industry—which by the way, is so comparatively new that traditions and standards are not plentiful.

Theda Bara, who is now among the foremost feminine players of the screen, first sprang into fame by starring in her three of the "Big Six"—"A Fool There Was," "The Clemenceau Case" and "The Two Orphans."

In "The Plunderer," "The Bondman" and "A Soldier's Oath," William Farnum laid the foundations for the sterling screen reputation which he now has.

THE LATE S. RANKIN DREW.

S. Rankin Drew, son of Sidney Drew, the well-known moving picture and stage comedian, and nephew of John Drew, has been reported killed while flying over the German lines in France.

Young Drew, himself an actor and director of distinction, went to France before the United States entered the war to drive an ambulance. After arriving there he wrote his father that he was trying to qualify for one of the aviation corps as he was eager to take a more prominent part in the war. He had an unusual grasp of mechanical knowledge and became a pilot in record time.

S. Rankin Drew.

Like his father, the young man was identified with Metro Pictures Corporation as a star and director of feature productions before his departure for the front. He was exceedingly popular with his players and very successful in his profession. He was twenty-seven years old.

Webster Seeking Author of Scenario He Says Is Big

THE Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., desires to make known that if the author or owner of an unnamed photoplay in which the leading male and female characters are designated as "The Ag——ic" and the "Miss ——W——ker" will communicate with Harry McRae Webster at Room 901, Brokaw Building, New York City, he will hear of something to his advantage.

After putting over Richard Field Carroll's six-reel feature, "Reclaimed," and intrusting the sales management to Chester Beecroft, Mr. Webster and the author of "Reclaimed" got busy putting the finishing touches on a multiple feature to succeed it.

In spite of the fact that their new play is one of big theme and novel treatment, the appeal of the unknown script "without a parent" is said to be so strong and so vital that the director stands ready to sidetrack his own efforts and start work on it immediately if he can acquire the rights. Mr. Webster proclaims it the American play the public has been waiting for.

In connection with "Reclaimed," Chester Beecroft asserts he has had numerous offers for the world rights and expects to close a deal in the near future.

Paramount Names Seven Productions for July Issue

THE schedule of Paramount releases for July consists of seven feature productions, one for each of the five weeks of the month, with one additional for the weeks of the 1st and the 15th. The stars in the order of their presentation are Dorothy Dalton, Jack Pickford, Charles Ray, Sessue Hayakawa, Marguerite Clark, Enid Bennett, and Wallace Reid. With the exception of Miss Clark's vehicle, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which was made in the East, all are West Coast productions, three coming from the Thomas H. Ince studio, and three from the Famous Players-Lasky.

Miss Dalton's picture released July 1 is "The Kaiser's Shadow," a story by Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy, which deals with the German spy propaganda in America. The same day marks the release of the film in which Jack Pickford makes his last screen appearance, at least for some time to come, for "Sandy" was the last picture the young star made before enlisting in the navy. In "Sandy," Louise Huff is again featured with the star.

On July 8, Thomas H. Ince will present Charles Ray in an interesting story of patriotism and spies bearing the title, "The Claws of the Hun." Ella Stuart Carson wrote the story, and Victor L. Schertzinger directed.

"The City of Dim Faces," a story of life in the Chinese quarter of San Francisco by Frances Marion, is Sessue Hayakawa's vehicle for July 15. A number of tragic moments in the play are said to give the Japanese star opportunities to display his remarkable histrionic talent. The story of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in which Marguerite Clark makes her appearance in the double role of Little Eva and Topsy on the 15th needs no recommendation or elaboration. Sufficient is it to say that the production, which was directed by J. Searle Dawley, is entirely worthy as a picturization of Mrs. Stowe's immortal novel.

Enid Bennett will be presented by Thomas H. Ince July 22 in "The Vamp," a story by C. Gardner Sullivan. In the play Miss Bennett "vamps" for patriotic purposes, and thereby accomplishes a German spy's undoing.

"Less Than Kin," the release of the 29th, features Wallace Reid in a romance of a Central American revolution, with the star playing the part of a ne'er-do-well. Marion Fairfax prepared the scenario from the novel by Alice Duer Miller.

Current Events No. 58 Contains Some Big Stuff

PHOTOPLOY patrons will view with intense interest the ceremonies shown in Universal Current Events No. 58, filmed on the eve of the Blue Devils' return to France. Among the prominent officials who bid these valiant fighters farewell were Secretary of War Baker, Jules Jusserand, Ambassador of France, and other members of the diplomatic corps. The special ceremonies in honor of the Alpine Chasseurs was held at the foot of the Washington Monument recently and an enormous gathering witnessed the event.

Of unusual interest, in view of all that has been said and written concerning the production of airplanes for our birdmen, are the scenes which show some of the processes which enter into the manufacture of flying machines. The photoplay patron is virtually taken to the virgin spruce forests up in the northwest where the lumber is obtained.

Current Events No. 58 also contains exceedingly timely views of the graduation exercises held at West Point, where intensive training enabled the cadets to obtain their commissions a full year ahead of time. One of the Universal cameramen succeeded in obtaining some striking views of the Secretary of War while he was delivering his address.

Unusual Exploitation for "Hands Up" Planned by Pathe

HANDS UP," Pathe's serial of romance and adventure in the great West, produced by Astra, with Ruth Roland, George Chesebro and a big cast, will be backed by a nation-wide billboard showing and big publicity campaign.

"Hands Up" is a "thriller" of dramatic situations characterized by sweeping panoramas of the western country, big settings such as are new to serials, and a large number of people. The story was written by Gilson Willets, the well known novelist, and the production is being made at the Astra West Coast studios under the direction of James W. Horne.

The novelization will be published in the Motion Picture Magazine, beginning with the September issue, out August 1. The preceding issue of Motion Picture Classic will carry an interview with Ruth Roland in which this coming story is announced, and the serial will be played up as a big feature.

Picture Play Magazine will carry an article by Gilson Willets on how he writes serials, and the other "fan" publications, such as Photoplay Magazine, Photoplay Journal and Photoplay World, will publish articles and photographs with regard to this serial.

The billboard campaign has been carefully planned to take advantages of the fact that summer is the best time for outdoor advertising.

The twenty-four-sheet is a remarkable piece of work characterized by splendid pictorial value, attention-compelling poses and striking colors. This twenty-four-sheet will be posted throughout the country in all important cities, and in addition to this will be given to exhibitors who will post a certain number for a period of one month.

The list of advertising matters to be issued on this serial also includes many other posters.

Metro Buys Three Stories for Use of Bert Lytell

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the shooting of the final scenes at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood of "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," Bert Lytell's current starring vehicle, directed by E. Mason Hopper, comes the announcement of Metro's purchase of three unusual scenarios for this star.

The first to be screened will be "Unexpected Places," originally a short story from the pen of Frank R. Adams. A. S. Le Vino is making the scenario, the film adaption being a comedy drama.

This will be followed by "Faith," another Metro find in the magazine world. Richard Washburn Child, its author, is one of the best known short story writers in this country. The third vehicle for Mr. Lytell, as yet unnamed, is now in preparation by the Metro scenario department at Hollywood.

Rivoli Theater Features Two-Part O. Henry Story

DIVIDING the position of prominence with S. L. Rothapfel's Marines pictures on the program of the Rivoli theater for the week of June 23 is "Sisters of the Golden Circle," the current General Film O. Henry release. This two-reel subject enjoys the unusual distinction of being the only dramatic subject to be shown at the Rivoli during "novelty week" at the newest Rothapfel motion picture palace. The O. Henry story was selected from a wide variety of short length pictures offered for the Rivoli program, which consists for the week only of short subjects. It was given feature prominence in the advertising matter issued by the Rivoli.

"Sisters of the Golden Circle" is an O. Henry story of New York life featuring Edward Earle, Agnes Ayres, and Alice Terry, and has been pronounced by critics to be one of the most artistic and attractive of the O. Henry series filmed to date. General Film reports that it is in heavy demand all over the country, and that it bids fair to excel all booking records established by the more successful of the sixty O. Henry stories released since last year.

Cleo Ayres to Play in World Picture.

Cleo Ayres, who was last seen on the screen in the support of Dorothy Dalton in "Love Letters," has come east. Her first eastern production will be in the support of Montagu Love in "To Him That Hath," a forthcoming World Picture. Miss Ayres was also with Vitagraph some months ago. "To Him That Hath" is a picturization of the famous novel by Leroy Scott.

Contents of Allies War Review Tells Its Own Story

THE first issue of the Allies' Official War Review, presented by the Committee on Public Information through the Division of Films, and released by Pathe July 1, contains a remarkable series of exclusive up-to-the-minute pictures of unlimited patriotic appeal to the public and box-office power for the exhibitor.

The issue is splendidly edited with snap and go. The first scene shows Ambassador Walter H. Page at the celebration commemorating the opening of the American Red Cross Hospital in London.

Remarkable pictures of speedy Italian submarine-chasers and patrol boats are shown in action.

In their native mountains, the famous Alpine Chasseurs, known as the Blue Devils of France, are shown making an attack on the Germans and rounding up a large batch of prisoners.

Scenes of great historic value and timely interest are those showing the burial of Richthofen, the German aviator. Monster guns are seen being transported to the lagoons to strengthen the defenses of Venice.

Remarkably interesting scenes are shown on the Zeebrugge Mole, which protected the entrance to the enemy's U-boat base before the British squadron closed it. The survivors of the raid are seen receiving the compliments of King George.

Regiment after regiment of the American soldiers now in France is seen advancing to strengthen Foch's reserves.

On the anniversary of the declaration of war of the United States, over 50,000 people gathered in the historic coliseum in Rome in honor of the event.

This is claimed to be the most remarkable topical war review ever issued. As announced by the Committee on Public Information last week, it is the official film of the allied nations.

Prints have been shipped for release June 24, advertising matter has gone forward, and a big publicity campaign such as has characterized Pathe's distribution system in recent months is in full swing. The advertising force of the Division of Films has begun to herald this weekly animated message to the nation, as has also the experienced selling and publicity organization of Pathe.

Pathe Prepares New White Serial.

Pathe's serial activities continue at high speed. It is announced that the company has purchased a strong story by George B. Seitz and Bertram Millhauser, the working title of which is "The Lightning Raider."

Mr. Seitz is remembered as the author of "The Iron Claw" and the director of "The Fatal Ring" and "The House of Hate."

Mr. Millhauser is the scenario writer of "The Fatal Ring" and "The House of Hate," each of which has proved in its turn the biggest Pearl White serial success released.

The story of "The Lightning Raider" is said to be characterized by four major points which make it a new type of serial.

"The Lion's Claws" Drawing to Close.

With the story commencing to draw to a close, action and thrills aplenty are contained in the newest episodes of "The Lion's Claws," the Universal serial featuring Marie Walcamp. In the thirteenth episode, the Universal star is attacked by an enraged lioness, rescued from the clutches of an orang outang and leads an exciting life in general. In no other serial in which she has appeared has Miss Walcamp been compelled to risk her life as frequently or perform as many stunts as are required in "The Lion's Claws."

World to Make "The Millionth Chance."

Goldwin Smith, the great writer on economic subjects, once said that the greatest fortunes of nations and men were created on the seizing of the millionth chance. This quotation has been grasped and molded into a gripping drama by Hamilton Smith.

World Pictures announces that it has bought the scenario of "The Millionth Chance." The writer agreed with the great economist, hence the story. Carlyle Blackwell has been selected to play the leading role in this picture.

Two Extravaganzas Ready For Fall Release by Fox

Two extravaganzas, which, it is said, introduce something new in motion pictures, have been completed by William Fox, it is announced from the Fox offices, and it is understood they will be ready for release during Thanksgiving week. Although extravaganzas have been seen on the legitimate stage for years, they have not yet been shown in the films. The motion picture, on the other hand, with its greater resources for spectacular effects, offers a splendid field for this sort of work, and in the forthcoming Fox productions, it is said, several novel and striking effects will be seen.

The plays will be of a fantastic nature, and, with Oriental settings, will reveal, it is understood, a splendor that only the Far East could furnish. The action will be wholly up to date, and show the Far East in its modern development.

Good Settings for Lloyd Comedies.

Exhibitors who are playing the Pathe-Rolin Harold Lloyd comedies will observe that Hal Roach, director-general of Rolin, is providing his star with remarkable settings for the one-reel comedies. Large sums of money were spent by Rolin in mounting "Somewhere in Turkey," June 16, "An Ozark Romance," July 7, and "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany," July 21. There are now more than forty people regularly employed in the stock company that is supporting Harold Lloyd.

The new comedy, "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany," by the way, gives Bebe Daniels, Lloyd's leading woman, an unusually attractive part as a Red Cross nurse.

Brewster Film Corporation Reorganizes.

The Brewster Film Corporation, which is developing a process of color-cinematography, has been reorganized. Percy D. Brewster has become president of the corporation and Dwight MacDonald treasurer. The laboratory, at 50 Spring street, Newark, N. J., will be continued for the present, with the New York office of the corporation at 15 William street.

Constance Talmadge Is Back in Eastern Home

AFTER a successful period of picture-making in California Constance Talmadge has turned her face to the east and hit the homeward trail. Select's young star is expected in New York within a few days.

When Constance Talmadge went west last November she had made three of the productions in her star series of Select Pictures, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and only the first of these, "Scandal," had been shown throughout the country. Miss Talmadge returns, however, after having completed her entire series of pictures, eight in all, seven out of the eight having already been shown on the screens of the country. The pictures which Miss Talmadge has made in the west include "The Shuttle," "Up the Road With Sallie" and "Good Night, Paul," her newest Select Picture. "A Pair of Silk Stockings" has also been completed.

In the short period in which she has been before the public Constance Talmadge has attained a firm place as a screen star. She has carved for herself a niche in the front rank of the country's favorites and has found and occupied a field of her own. Constance Talmadge's true metier is comedy-drama—and comedy-drama such as is seen in Miss Talmadge's Select productions has been hitherto unknown on the screen. This is a type of photoplay in which dramatic situations are frequent, but which is nevertheless inter-larded with humor from end to end.

Constance Talmadge is now so well abreast of the schedule of releases for her Select Pictures that she has been given a brief halt in which to visit her home town, which is little old New York.

"Les Miserables" Set for August.

Announcement from the Fox Film Corporation is that "Les Miserables," in which William Farnum scored a big success when the picture was shown in the Lyric theater, New York, will be released to exhibitors on August 12. "Les Miserables," it is declared in the announcement, will be a special release and will be sold to exhibitors on an independent basis.

The announcement of the release of this subject, which was probably the greatest picture that William Farnum ever did, calls attention to the fact that the last William Farnum picture to be released was "True Blue," which was offered to exhibitors May 5.

It is understood that a special campaign is being organized for the release of "Les Miserables." Stress will be laid on the strong advertising that the picture already has obtained as a result of its showing in big cities.

In "Cheating Cheaters" Miss Young Has Stage Success

WITH the acquisition of the screen rights to "Cheating Cheaters" Clara Kimball Young has added another to the long list of notable stage successes to be presented by her upon the screen. Miss Young is in this manner giving to both exhibitors and public the benefit of the most valuable stage properties which can be secured for presentation in her Select Pictures.

In the list which Miss Young has already presented through Select Pictures are "The House of Glass," "Shirley Kaye" and "Magda," all of which have achieved success on the American stage, and "The Marionettes," which has enjoyed success on the Continent for many years. In the selection of "Cheating Cheaters" Miss Young has rounded out her list by the addition of a drama of the very latest school, one of the "surprise" type. "Cheating Cheaters," it will be remembered, is one of those plays which, seeming to be a crook play of usual cast at its beginning, quickly develops along novel and highly entertaining lines. The play was given its stage production by Al Woods, with a notable cast which included Margorie Rambeau and other Broadway favorites. The play is scheduled for early production by Miss Young, and details will be announced later.

Following the same policy as regards fiction the Clara Kimball Young series of Select Pictures has already presented photoplays based on two notable novels, one being "The Reason Why," by Elinor Glyn, and the other Miss Young's current Select production, "The Claw," a South African romance from the pen of Cynthia Stockley, the author of "Poppy." Another production based on a notable piece of fiction is that of "The Savage Woman," which Miss Young is now making from the novel of Francois Curel, "La Fille Sauvage."

"Dad's Knockout" Is "Smiling Bill's" Latest

NOTHING is left undone—no expense is spared—to make a Capitol Comedy the superior of any two-reel motion picture production. "Smiling Bill" Parsons, the millionaire screen comedian, sees to that. Settings that would do credit to big special features are the rule in Capitol Comedies, released by Goldwyn.

When Parsons forsook big business to make merriment for the world he astounded fellow producers by erecting one of the most costly studios in California for the production of his two-reelers. And the Parsons way of doing business on a lavish scale is reflected in his Capitol Comedies.

Particularly is this noticeable in "Dad's Knockout," "Smiling Bill's" latest. From the scene at Bill's home to the merry incidents in a theater, where many of the scenes were taken, gorgeous settings greet the eye. For the production Parsons rented one of the largest theaters in Los Angeles for four days.

To lend realism to several of the scenes on the stage Parsons combed the theatrical colony on the coast for thirty show girls to take part in the dancing, which is one of the big features in "Dad's Knockout." Besides, he hired 200 extras as an audience. Among them were several high-class players to lend comedy touches to the theater scenes.

Perhaps the costliest scene in the production is the incident in a Los Angeles restaurant. Here Parsons and his company make merriest and during their revelry much of the furniture is shattered. Of course the furnishings that are ruined are all studio "props."

Pathe Names Nine Post Travels.

In the Post Travel Series, a weekly release by Pathe, the traveler, following a trip to the romantic West Indies, will go to Venezuela, a country rarely visited by Americans.

The list of these pictures now announced are: "St. Thomas," "St. Croix," "Guadeloupe," "Dominica," "Our Volcanic Neighbors," "East Indians of Trinidad," "East Indians of British Guiana," "Venezuela," and "La Guaira to Caracas."

It will be remembered that the Post Travel Series is being presented under the auspices of the big daily newspapers which print concurrently articles written by Clyde E. Elliott.

Goldwyn Rounds Out First Year with Strong Quartet

GOLDWYN'S next four releases, which will complete the cycle of twenty-six begun with "Polly of the Circus" on September 9 of last year, are declared by the producers to constitute a powerfully fitting group climax to a series of productions which have lead to success in less than a twelvemonth. Following "The Glorious Adventure," in which Mae Marsh is starred and which is to be seen everywhere beginning July 14, the productions and dates of release are:

July 28, Mabel Normand in "Back to the Woods"; August 11, Madge Kennedy in "Friend Husband"; August 25, Mae Marsh in "Money Mad."

"The Glorious Adventure," directed by Hobart Henley and completed some time since, was held up to make way for another Mae Marsh production, "All Woman," which has been given unanimous newspaper and trade press approval everywhere. Goldwyn describes it as "the story of the girl who bought happiness for a dollar." Adapted from Edith Barnard Delano's story, "When Carey Came to Town," it is a thrilling and interesting romance built around the adventures of a girl who invited herself to be a ward in the home of a gruff young bachelor and who eventually made him a happy benedict by marrying him. Wyndham Standing heads an unusually capable cast.

Mabel Normand is doing something entirely new for her in "Back to the Woods," from an original story by J. Clarkson Miller, directed by George Irving, a newcomer at the Goldwyn studios. In it the star is the progressive daughter of a reactionary old lumber millionaire who tests out her theory of life as teacher of a school in a lumber camp town. There are comedy opportunities, of course, in "Back to the Woods," but there is an absorbing story to carry them along.

After a venture into melodrama in "The Service Star," to be released June 30, Madge Kennedy returns to comedy-drama in "Friend Husband," directed by Clarence G. Badger. It is an amusing story of a girl who marries a man she doesn't love to gain an inheritance and the things that happen later to make her wish she hadn't and glad she did.

"Money Mad," Mae Marsh's last production in Goldwyn's first releasing year, is perhaps the most dramatic story Miss Marsh has appeared in—certainly as a Goldwyn star. As the heroine it devolves upon her to track down the murderer of a man slain in her own home. How she does it makes a thrillingly melodramatic tale filled with action from beginning to end.

Two Screens Involved in This Mutt-Jeff-Bara Comedy

A REAL life personage and cartoon characters meet and act together on the screen in the Mutt and Jeff animated cartoon, "Meeting Theda Bara," which is announced from the William Fox offices as one of the latest of Bud Fisher's creations.

The picture is described as one of the funniest this comedy pair have yet appeared in. Jeff inherits a fortune and Mutt decides that they are going to become motion picture producers. Their aim is to secure the services of a vampire. This ambition is inspired after Mutt and Jeff see Miss Bara in a picture. Jeff's admiration for Miss Bara leads him to serve notice on Mutt that any "vamping" for the Mutt and Jeff Motion Picture outfit must be done by Theda Bara. Mutt laughs and informs his diminutive friend that a contract holds Miss Bara to produce solely for the Fox Film Corporation. The pair then go about obtaining a vampire in a scientific way.

It doesn't take Mutt long to convince Jeff that it's the eyes that make the vampire. He learns, however, to his chagrin, that he was only partly right. Jeff makes up his mind that he will drop around and see Miss Bara, so he picks out the stage door of a moving picture theater as the logical place to find the famous star. Mutt sees him there and thinks it is a great joke. Later sitting in a gilded restaurant, Mutt is still laughing at the idea of Jeff waiting at the stage door of a moving picture theater. However, there are two sides of the story, and Mutt didn't know that Jeff's side of the story was hidden by a screen that surrounded the table next to Mutt. Mutt's curiosity prompts him to peer over the top of the screen. What he saw on the other side caused him a surprise that you will have to see the picture to appreciate.

Other most recent Mutt and Jeff productions are "The Extra Quick Lunch," "Life Savers" and "The 75-Mile Gun." In 'The Extra Quick Lunch," the pair open a restaurant in which speed and economy are the watchwords. 'Life Savers" show them at the beach, and in "The 75-Mile Gun" they capture the German super-gun and train it on the Kaiser and Von Hindenburg, with results disastrous to the leaders of Prussian kultur.

Don't wait to be urged to join the W. S. S. army. What if our men in the trenches waited to be urged?

Kellermann Films Ready in Fall.

Annette Kellermann, the William Fox offices announce, has completed the filming of "Queen of the Sea," and the film is now in the hands of the film editor for titling and arrangement.

Although no definite date has been announced for the release of this big marine production, it is understood that it will be offered to exhibitors in the fall when other big productions which the Fox forces are now engaged on will be ready for the public.

The announceent from the Fox offices states that "Queen of the Sea" is even bigger in its scope and conception than "A Daughter of the Gods," which Miss Kellermann also made for Fox. Besides several stupendous sea effects, the production is said to have a number of novel features which are unique in marine pictures.

There's a Thrilling Dive in "A King in Khaki"

A DIVE from a cliff of rock eighty feet high into the ocean is one of the melodramatic features introduced in Metro's screen version of Henry Kitchell Webster's romantic novel, "A King in Khaki," now being produced under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer.

"A King in Khaki" tells the story of a battle for right by the king in khaki against a ring of unscrupulous financial sharps headed by Christopher Beaumont, called the king of finance. When the king in khaki refuses to join Beaumont in his plan to defraud the small stockholders in the enterprise of developing a semi-tropical island a battle is tacitly declared. The king of finance endeavors to escape from the island in the only available boat before the king in khaki can strike the first blow, and the latter, seeing himself about to be outwitted, leaps into the ocean and, boarding the boat, beats Beaumont in their first match.

Harold Lockwood is playing in the role of "A King in Khaki" and Stanton Heck is appearing as Christopher Beaumont.

Nazimova Devises Dance For Metro's "L'Occident"

ACTUAL work before the camera has been begun by Mme. Nazimova in her Screen Classics Inc. production of Henri Kistemaecker's play, "L'Occident," under the direction of Albert Capellani. The opening scenes show the celebrated Russian artist in the fanciful garb of the captured Arabian girl, Hassouna, as she appears in a French circus in her native dances.

In "L'Occident," in accordance with the story, which has been adapted for the screen by Mr. Capellani and June Mathis, Mme. Nazimova first appears in "The Dance of the Veils," which Hassouna has learned in the desert, and then, deliberately bringing home vital facts to certain persons in the audience, she does the weird, symbolic, haunting "Dance of the Severed Head." Strictly speaking, this dance is a series of picturesque posturings, invented by Mme. Nazimova herself, as the seriousness of the moment precludes the levity of actual dancing steps.

For these scenes the star wears a costume designed by herself, that is frankly fanciful rather than true Arabian. As she herself expresses it, is is the circus idea of the desert costume. "The brilliant-hued draperies of the skirt, closely-bound and tied in a knot," says Mme. Nazimova, "are true Arabian. But the intention has been to convey an idea, rather than to adhere strictly in this instance to authentic costuming. The amber beads are Arabian, but the dull green ones are Persian, and the variegated ones—what you will. The bead fringe and the beaded turban are simply Oriental in a broad sense. The close-fitting embroidered jacket in indescribable greens and browns is my own idea to complete the whole."

Romantic Comedy Leads Pathe for July 7th Week

A LIVELY comedy with a strong romantic flavor, "Annexing Bill," with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in the star roles, head the Pathe program to be released July 7. The action of the story is based upon one idea, an idea that has a direct appeal to every feminine photoplay patron. It is, "Would you give up a million dollar legacy to marry the man you love?" Gladys Hulette plays the part of an art student in modern circumstances, but wins the love of a young lawyer who is also poor, but has bright prospects.

Episode No. 18 of "The House of Hate" is also released on this program. This episode is entitled, "At the Pistol's Point," and it is said to have the strongest finish of any of the episodes to date. In this episode the identity of the Hooded Terror is in the process of revelation when the episode ends. Pearl White and Antonio Moreno have their usual thrills, and the action never lags. There are two more episodes of "The House of Hate" to come.

The big comedy on this program will be "An Ozark Romance," with Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels, Harry Pollard, and the rest of the funmakers of the Rolin studio. "An Ozark Romance" is a fine moving josh on the old sob style of melodrama, and it is said to be very cleverly handled.

Part 9 of "Britain's Bulwarks" is called "King George and Queen Mary Witness the Black Arts of War."

In the Post Travel Series the subject is "Dominica," and faithfully mirrors the people, scenery, historic points, trade and industry and family life of this remote and rarely visited island in the West Indies.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 56 will be released Wednesday, and No. 57 Saturday.

Fisher to Draw War's Lighter Side.

The first picture from Bud Fisher, creator of Mutt and Jeff, since his arrival at the front in France, is "The 75-Mile Gun," which relates the capture in a Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon of the German super-cannon which has been shelling Paris. The picture, according to an announcement from the Fox offices, will be released shortly.

On his departure for France Captain Fisher made an arrangement with the Fox Film Corporation whereby the Fox company would have charge of the business end of marketing his work.

Being at the front, Captain Fisher will deal largely with the war in his pictures, but just as Captain Bruce Bairnsfather has made a reputation for extracting humor out of the world conflict, so Fisher will deal with the lighter side of the war.

Considerable material has already been received from the artist and is now being printed for the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons.

"Other Men's Daughters" (Fox).

A SPIRITED play of the gay side of life, together with deep, human emotions, is the descriptions from the William Fox offices of "Other Men's Daughters," the next special feature release in which Peggy Hyland is the star. The production, it is said, gives to Miss Hyland opportunities for big work.

"Other Men's Daughters" was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and directed by Carl Harbaugh. Supporting Miss Hyland is a cast which includes Regina Quinn, Eric Mayne, Frank Goldsmith, Elizabeth Garrison, Riley Hatch and Robert Middlemas.

Franklyn Farnum Supports Anna Nilsson in "Judgment."

AN ambitious program production featuring Anna Q. Nilsson, supported by Franklyn Farnum and a notable cast, has been started at Metro's west coast studios. The working title of the picture is "Judgment," and the scenario is by George D. Baker. According to present plans Franklyn Farnum is to appear in this one picture for Metro. He comes to Metro with the Farnum smile intact.

Miss Nilsson long ago won renown as a beauty of the artists' studios and the silent drama. She played opposite Bert Lytell in his first two pictures as a Metro star, and her work was of such high caliber that Mr. Baker seized the first opportunity of featuring her.

"Judgment" is the story of a girl with occult power, whose psychic intuition is the means of saving the man she loves from paying the penalty of another's crime. A sensational murder trial, with a thrilling and unexpected denouement, is the smashing "big scene" of the screen drama. This is led up to by a series of exciting incidents creating an atmosphere of breathless suspense.

37 Per Cent. of Town See Gerard Film in Three Days

AN excellent idea of the big way in which Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" is going over in the smaller towns has come to light in the records compiled by F. R. Hirsch, of the Criterion theater, Rutherford, N. J. Mr. Hirsch says that when the picture played in his town during the three days of June 5, 6 and 7, the turnstile recorded the following: First day, 746; second day, 850; third day, 982.

The Criterion seats but 600, and the record is all the more remarkable when the facts are taken into consideration that Rutherford is a town of 7,045 population and "My Four Years in Germany" also played against two big features and a legitimate show with local talent.

Several patrons of the Criterion urged the manager not to run any comedies in conjunction with the Gerard picture, declaring that to do so would militate against the dignified and thrilling appeal of Ambassador Gerard's screen revelations.

"The Kaiser's Shadow" Is Another Hun Hitter

A GENUINE surprise is promised in the denouement of "The Kaiser's Shadow," Dorothy Dalton's Paramount picture announced for release July 1. Mystery is the keynote of the production. Moreover, the entire story is said to be ideally suited to the present time, being patriotic in character, and having to do with the subtle workings of the Hun intelligence bureau in America.

Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy are the authors of the story, which has been declared to be one of the most sensational exposes of Hun espionage methods.

Edward Cecil, Leota Lorraine, Otto Hoffman, and Charles French furnish the support. The settings are said to possess a remarkable degree of originality, and a prologue arranged by Mr. Ince shows some of the secret workings of the Teuton intelligence office.

R. William Neill directed the picture, and John Stumar did the photography.

"Both Members" Nearing Finish.

"Both Members," the comedy drama by Luther A. Reed, in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are co-starring, is rapidly nearing completion at Metro's Sixty-first street studio.

General Film to Release Pictures of Camp Dix

AFTER several weeks spent in filming scenes of national army activities at Camp Dix, near Wrightstown, N. J., Joseph F. Reed, of the Connecticut Film Company, has produced a series of intimate camp life views which are to be released through General Film Company under the title of "Our Boys at Camp Dix."

The plan of release includes a four-reel production divided into single reel parts, each adapted to separate showing, the four subjects to constitute a series for booking one a week. There will be posters and other advertising material.

Besides the general interest in what sort of existence the selective service men lead after being taken from the office desk or the work bench there is expected to be an added personal interest for relatives, friends, and neighbors of the many thousand young soldiers at this camp. The Camp Dix contingent is drawn from New York City, parts of Illinois, New Jersey, Delaware, Boston, and Rochester. Mr. Reed recently released a successful series of Camp Devens pictures through General Film Company.

"Zeppelin L-21" in Demand.

Due to the activity of German submarines in American home waters, "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" continues to register in General Film Company reports as the most timely and popular short length special war feature. The floor of bookings which have been pouring in upon the thirty exchanges of the company in the United States and Canada shows no signs of abating, says an official of General, but rather is increasing steadily. The demands have been so heavy in the San Francisco, Atlanta, and Philadelphia territories, for instance, that additional prints are considered necessary.

Fifth Avenue Again in O. Henry.

Fifth avenue is to serve as the exterior location for another O. Henry story, "Mammon and the Archer," which is to be released shortly by General Film Company. Agnes Ayres and Edward Earle, stars in numerous other O. Henry stories, are the featured players in this story which is just being completed by Director Kenneth Webb. This is an engaging comedy-drama in which the daughter of a millionaire soap manufacturer is wooed and won in a traffic blockade at Thirty-fourth street and Fifth avenue. The photoplay has been filmed upon the exact locations described in the O. Henry story.

Sherry Optimistic as to Kenyon and Keeney Pictures

JUNE 30 has been set as the date of the release of the first picture produced by Doris Kenyon and her own company and the first of the Frank A. Keeney pictures, with Catherine Calvert as star. The announcement is made by William L. Sherry, head of the William L. Sherry Service, which is distributing all of the Kenyon and Keeney pictures.

The first photoplay featuring Miss Kenyon is "The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. It is after her story of the same name published serially in the Saturday Evening Post. Upward of 250,000 copies have been sold in book form. The first of the Keeney pictures is "A Romance of the Underworld," a screen adaptation of the well known drama of the same name by the late Paul Armstrong. Miss Calvert starred in the play when she was the girl-wife of the playwright.

"I regard myself as especially fortunate in being able to start my new service with such pictures as these," says Mr. Sherry. "Both are full of real human interest and are of high artistic quality. The Kenyon pictures are being directed by John B. O'Brien, and the Keeney pictures by James Kirkwood, two of the most competent men in their line. The only reason why the release of these two pictures has been delayed is that I desired to perfect my distributing organization before placing them on the market. There has been a brisk demand for both pictures, and a wide and extended sale is assured."

The Keeney forces have just begun work on their fourth picture, "The Girl with a Past," by Paul Armstrong. The story is said to be tensely human, with rich dramatic coloring. The part of the heroine affords Miss Calvert an exceptional opportunity for the display of her abilities as an emotional actress and admirably fits her winsome personality. Miss Kenyon and her company are now busy with their second picture, "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance. The scenario was written expressly for Miss Kenyon. The fictional rights of the story have been sold to one of the leading American magazines, and it will be published serially after it has been placed on the screen.

Essanay Forces Working Hard on "Young America"

NEARLY the entire Essanay force now is working full speed on the next George K. Spoor feature, "Young America," the Cohan and Harris production, which made such a hit on the stage, both in New York and Chicago.

All three of Essanay's big studios have been filled with sets so that when the picture was started it could be pushed through to completion rapidly. Everything was laid out beforehand, including the outdoor locations, so that Director Berthelet could complete the picture without a hitch.

Director Berthelet started work upon the picture immediately upon returning from New York, where he secured the remaining members of the cast. Charles Frohman Everett, a nephew of the late Charles Frohman, who played the leading role in the stage production, also takes the leading part in the picturization of the play.

He has trained his own dog for the animal part, which is one of the important roles in the picture. The dog is a cross between a coyote and a fox terrier and is perfectly trained for the part.

The leading woman's part, that of Edith Doray, is taken by Madelyn Clare, a well known Broadway player. She also has been with the Keith circuit and more recently made a hit as Nancy Hanks in the Lincoln series. She has also taken leading roles with several other motion picture concerns.

Other important characters are those of Reuter, a small-town constable, taken by Wilson Reynolds, who is playing with Marie Cahill at the Cort theater, Chicago, in "Just Around the Corner"; Joe the Grouch, the role taken by William Wadsworth, also playing at the Cort; Jack Doray, played by Howard I. Smith, who has been the juvenile lead with May Robeson in "A Bit Old-Fashioned," played at Power's theater, Chicago, Nutty Bremer, played by Marlow Bowles; Mrs. McGuire, played by Florence Barr; Mary Blount, the sweetheart of the leading player, played by Evelyn Ward; Mrs. Grouch, played by Leona Ball, and Mrs. Ward, played by Frances Raymond.

Other minor characters and those to fill in on the crowd scenes have been engaged from the Chicago theaters.

The entire cast was picked specially to fit each part and not filled in from a stock company. The play will be in six or seven parts. It was originally written for the stage by Fred Ballard.

Oakdale Announces Six Five-Part Productions

AMONG the most important of General Film Company's product acquisitions is a series of six dramas called the Oakdale productions. These will be released beginning probably July 15.

The distinguishing feature about Oakdale productions is that each of the six pictures has, besides well known adult stars, a juvenile star of recognized personality and strength, according to the General Film announcement. Each of the six stories, furthermore, contains the child element as a powerful factor in developing the story, as well as in bringing to it a lighter domestic touch that is so much in favor with audiences. General Film Company will announce the titles of the pictures and the casts in a forthcoming statement regarding the series.

All the Oakdale productions are five-reel pictures described as consistent throughout as to subject and dramatic treatment.

"Salome" Ranked by William Fox as His Greatest Yet

AFTER six months of unremitting activity at the Hollywood studios of William Fox, "Salome," with Theda Bara in the title role, has been completed, and is now in the hands of the cutting staff in the general offices in New York for final elisions and titling. The biggest of all film productions ever achieved by William Fox will be seen in the foremost dramatic theaters of America with the advent of September. Samuel F. Kingston has been placed in charge of the booking, and an unprecedented campaign heralding the monster production is already under way.

"Salome" is declared to mark a new development of the spectacle picture. Massiveness of effect will not smother dramatic interest. An official of the company in this connection said:

"Two elements are responsible for overcoming this common failing of so many productions either for screen or stage where mise en scene is apt to overwhelm the senses. Theda Bara's art is one of these, and the elemental strength of the story, which has inspired among the greatest of writers of literature and music, is the other. Add to this the superb investiture provided and it must be at once apparent that here is a production that can hardly fail to stir the spectators."

The statement of the official touches on the outstanding features of a production on five hundred feet of which, reflecting historical scenes Mr. Fox is credited with spending $50,000 alone—in places at the rate of $100 a foot.

Two thousand players were engaged for this super-picture. Eight hundred artisans alone were employed in building a reproduction of the city of Jerusalem as it existed forty years before the time of Christ, this being one of several replicas on a grand scale. Salome's bath of costly marble and the palace of King Herod are said to be triumphant examples of Judean splendor. The peacock fountain in Salome's boudoir also is shown, having been modeled after an old Biblical print. Of modern significance is the reproduction of the Gate of Jaffa through which recently marched the victorious Britons under command of General Allenby.

Some idea of the fundamental expense involved in staging "Salome" may be gained from these items. Two hundred loads of sand were hauled from the beaches to build the streets of Jerusalem, twenty-five tons of plaster and as many loads of cobblestones were used. A hundred sculptors and mural decorators were kept busy during the initial stages. Aside from Miss Bara's costumes, which appear to be worth a king's ransom, ten thousand costumes were required to clothe the army of performers in multifarious scenes.

Nothing has been overlooked by the technical staff which would contribute to the verisimilitude of the picture. Camels to the number of fourteen, five hundred horses, donkeys, elephants, goats, sheep, lambs, bullocks and oxen, dogs, cats, parrots, cockatoos, doves, pigeons, and peacocks—they are wherever they add realism to the scene.

Nature aided J. Gordon Edwards, director of the production, in his expert striving for an old-age effect in mise en scene. Barely had the painters and laborers completed a street scene in Old Jerusalem when a downpour of rain lasting several days occurred. It served to give the tumble-down thoroughfare exactly the weather-worn appearance desired.

Loew Does Good Business with "Cecilia."

Marcus Loew has reported to President Lewis J. Selznick of the Select Pictures Corporation that the showing of Marion Davies' Select picture, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," in the Loew chain of theaters in Greater New York, attracted unusually good business to these houses. Mr. Loew expressed himself as well pleased with the results attained with Marion Davies' first production. As a box-office attraction the picture had exceeded all expectations, Mr. Loew said.

"Cecilia of the Pink Roses" was given a seven-day run in Loew's houses throughout the greater city. The first days of the run were coincident with the showing of the picture at the Rivoli theater, New York, but another week was consumed before the playing of the picture was completed. Mr. Loew expressed the belief that there had been no diminution in attendance at his theaters on account of the presentation of the same attraction at the big Broadway playhouse during the same period.

"Flower of the Dusk" for Metro.

Director John H. Collins is busy engaging the cast for "Flower of the Dusk," Viola Dana's next vehicle, the screen rights of which have but recently been acquired by the Metro Pictures Corporation. This story is one of the most loved of Myrtle Reed's delightfully human stories and is the second of that author's novels to be picturized by Metro. The scenario was written by Mr. Collins, who will be assisted in the directing by Albert H. Kelley, with John Arnold at the camera.

Especially engaged for Miss Dana's company is Guy Coombs. Another player will be Margaret McWade.

The locale of "Flower of the Dusk," New England, will call for many delightful and charming outdoor scenes and unusually attractive sets.

Mystery Element Strong In Kerrigan Production

IN THE Paralta production, "One Dollar Bid," a screen version of the novel "Toby," by Credo Harris, which is now being filmed at the Brunton studios with J. Warren Kerrigan, there is a dominant note of mystery throughout the entire unfolding of the story. Not a morbid mystery of plot but a continual question about the leading character which lasts unanswered until the end—who is Toby? Whence does he come? And why is he there?

The mystery of Toby's life and character is a background giving strong dramatic suspense to the whole fabric of the story, and those three questions are ever in the consciousness while the stirring external plot—moonshiners, smallpox, suspected murder, two court trials, and all manner of exciting events—happen in the foreground. This mystery is behind the charming atmosphere of the life of Kentucky, in that picturesque section which marks the intermingling of the Southern aristocrat with the mountaineer and the rugged feet of the Cumberlands with the valley bluegrass.

Little comedy touches fall throughout, and all the charming painting of the Kentucky life and characters which Mr. Harris included in the novel are present in the photoplay.

"Her Moment" To Be Issued By General Film Company

Scenes in Russia, the Balkans, Japan, China and the United States, not forgetting one of the most picturesque Western mining camps imaginable, are mentioned by General Film Company bulletins as contributing to the variety of atmosphere in "Her Moment," the special production in which Anna Luther is starred. The greater part of the story is enacted in the United States, to which country Miss Luther, as the heroine, comes to experience the climax of her life.

At private showings of this picture considerable admiration is said to have been accorded the technical details in the way of costuming and sets, while the locations chosen for the scenic attractiveness also made an impression.

The direction of "Her Moment" was in the hands of Frank Beal for the Author's Photoplays. The story is by Samuel H. London, with a theme of dramatic intensity of the sort especially adapted to the versatile Anna Luther. General Film predicts that those who have seen the star's work in "Moral Suicide" and other recent productions by other companies will know to some degree what to expect of her in "Her Moment," which is scheduled for immediate release as a six-part feature.

Great Public Interest In "Crusaders" Poster

AN interesting commentary on the unusual interest that has been aroused in New York by the engagement at the Lyric theater of "Pershing's Crusaders," the first United States official feature film, has been brought to light by a statement from Howard Herrick, publicity director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information. Mr. Herrick states that his office is being overwhelmed by mail and telephone requests from private individuals seeking copies of the striking one-sheet and window card issued on "Pershing's Crusaders."

These requests form one of the most unusual sidelights on the popularity of a film that the industry has ever recorded. "Pershing's Crusaders" is a pictured history of the country's first year at war, and graphically describes the tremendous strides made by the country's war machinery. Among the scores of interesting and thrilling features of "Pershing's Crusaders" is the occupation of a first line trench by the khaki-clad defenders of Liberty.

Outing-Chester's "Ex-Cannibal Carnival" Leads Mutua

THE first of the series of Outing-Chester travel classics, "Ex-Cannibal Carnival," produced by C. L. Chester in collaboration with the editorial board of Outing, is released by Mutual June 30. The first release is an excellent example of these distinctive travel pictures. It is a journey through the Fiji Islands, and shows the natives who only a generation ago were cannibals holding high carnival. Levuka, the ancient capital, is shown as a modern city, with a strange mixture of the up-to-date and incongruous in the hybrid costumes of the natives. A Fijian prince wearing a silk hat, a dress shirt, and a glad smile is one of the sights. The snappy titles are no small item, and with the photography should carry the pictures across with a smash.

The second of the series, "Kaieteur," will be released July 7. "Kaieteur" pictures an interesting and exciting journey through the exotic wilderness of British Guiana to this famous waterfall, which is five times as high as Niagara. The scenery is magnificent, while the progress of the party is shown in continuity form. There is real action in the picture, which will appeal to the adventurous and delight the eye by its beauty.

The Strand comedy of the week is titled "Miss Informed," and is released July 2. This is a characteristic Strand-Mutual full of clean, wholesome comedy in which Billie makes a horrible mess of things when she attempts to put something over on the father of her chum's fiance. She mistakes an old sport for dad, and almost loses her own sweetheart when he finds her flirting with the two old boys.

Screen Telegram Nos. 36 and 37 are released July 3 and 7. American soldiers in France in a big athletic carnival held for the entertainment of commanders and comrades is an interesting war picture. President and Mrs. Wilson are shown in attendance at the annual ball game of Congressmen at Washington, D. C.

Scene from "The Fly God" (Triangle).

Alma Rubens and Roy Stewart Lead Triangle June 30

A STORY by Catherine Carr, "The Painted Lily," featuring Alma Rubens, is the first release on the Triangle program for the week of June 30. For the second release of the week Triangle presents the Roy Stewart-Steve Rounds combination in the second "Red Saunders" story by Henry Wallace Phillips, "The Fly God."

"The Painted Lily" pictures with realism the conflicting emotions in the life of a girl, who, brought up amid poor but good surroundings, and protected from the sordid side of life, is cast into the degrading atmosphere of the underworld and forced to pose as the accomplice of a notorious gambler. But the quality of one's early training is bound to assert itself and the nobleness in Mary's character withstands many trying experiences; her love for the aged and helpless winning for her in the end, a promise of contented happiness in the arms of the man she loves.

Alma Rubens will have an opportunity to characterize a part admirably suited to her personality. Jack Richardson is the gambler and William V. Mong appears as Mary's father. Francis McDonald is also in the cast. Thomas N. Heffron directed, with C. H. Wales at the camera.

"The Fly God" pictures Roy Stewart for the second time as the good natured westerner William "Red" Saunders. With innate love for his fellow men and with human understanding and symphathy he extends a helpful hand to Bob Allers, an unfortunate consumptive aand his wife who are travelling to Arizona. Later Red rescues Allers from a mob, about to lynch him as a cold-blooded murderer. At the trial Aller's life hangs in the balance as eleven jurors, instructed by the prejudiced sheriff to return a verdict of guilty, are defied by Tom Cummings, who grasps this first opportunity to assert himself.

Emerald Doll Comedies Released.

"The Burglar Man," the first in the series of the Emerald Cinema Doll Comedies, is released this week by General Film Company. In this film the doll players present a parody upon the type of comedy of the famous Charlie Chaplin in which characters described as "Charlie," "Mike," "Burglar Man," "Edna," and others do all the stunts of well known comedians and a few more in addition.

Ninth "Bulwark" Shows Royal Visit.

The visit of King George and Queen Mary to the battlefields of France is shown in the ninth picture of the "Britain's Bulwarks" series, giving graphic scenes from all phases of the world war, and released exclusively by Pathe July 7.

The King visits the Tankodrome and is much concerned about the lads inside. One of the most dramatic episodes of the war was the smashing of the German line at Cambrai by the operation of numerous British tanks which walked through an immense wire entanglement, tearing great holes in the German defense.

Nine Productions in Work For Fox East and West

NO fewer than nine productions are in work under the William Fox banner, it is announced from the Fox offices, companies being busy both in the East and on the Pacific Coast.

At Hollywood, J. Gordon Edwards is progressing rapidly on the super-production "The Message of the Lilies," for which a new title is soon to be selected. William Farnum, also at Hollywood, is busy on "The Rainbow Trail," which is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Trail," just finished by Mr. Farnum. Zane Grey wrote the books upon which each production is based.

A new name, "The Fallen Angel," has been chosen for "You Can't Get Away With It," the Gouverneur Morris story which Jewel Carmen is making at Hollywood. Gladys Brockwell, also at Hollywood, is working on "Kultur," a drama which is described as an expose of Germany's secret diplomacy. Tom Mix has finished "Fame and Fortune," which is based on Charles Alden Seltzer's story, "Slow Burgess," and is about to begin on a production reported to be a revelation of how certain types of labor trouble on war work are started.

In the East the Fox forces are equally busy. Virginia Pearson, who had just completed "Her Price," has plunged into work on a production at the Blackton studio, in Brooklyn, for which "The Alien Strain" has been picked as a temporary title. Peggy Hyland has begun work at New Dorp, Staten Island, on "Bonnie Annie Laurie" under the direction of Harry Millarde, and George Walsh has completed a striking patriotic picture entitled "Yankee Doodle Dandy." Other productions are under way under the direction of R. A. Walsh and Richard Stanton.

Good Demand for "Italian Battlefront."

The General Film Company, having taken over the distribution of "The Italian Battlefront," the official Italian war pictures, in important territories for the Fort Pitt Theater Company, has found the current Austrian offensive in Italy a big boost for business. Prints of this film had already been placed in the Denver, Atlanta, and Detroit territories, and the big feature is said to be equalling the initial successes scored by it in New York City, Boston, Philadelphia, Rochester, and Chicago.

"The Italian Battlefront" contains an endless variety of remarkable scenes from that war zone which has contributed the distinctly spectacular activities.

Farrar Selects Story After Consulting Exhibitors

GERALDINE FARRAR walked before the cameras in Goldwyn's Fort Lee studio directly at the end of a tour which carried her through at least sixty per cent. of the United States. On this trip, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Sidney Farrar, this famous star of the cinema aand the opera adopted the wholly novel policy of going directly to the men who are to play her Goldwyn Pictures in quest of their advice.

Exhibitors in many states were agreeably surprised recently between shows or while audiences were hurrying in before the feature "went on" to receive visits from the Farrar party.

"Since you are going to play or be invited to play my Goldwyn Pictures," Miss Farrar said, "what could be fairer than my coming to you to ask your assistance in helping Goldwyn and myself determine the kind of stories we want. I read a hundred stories last winter, most of which have been discarded as being without appeal. Several I have kept and have brought with me. Before doing any of them I want to know what kind of pictures you and your audiences like; what kind of pictures you could make the most money on. One kind of picture you must not ask me to do—the vampire picture."

It is worth recording that theater owners took out their books on many occasions and showed Geraldine Farrar their box office receipts on virtually every star and productions ever played in their theaters.

One of the greatest exhibitors in America, took a manuscript from her hands and said:

"Here is the picture you should do first. It is a wonderful story, of tremendous commercial value. It has in it everything that a box-office viewpoint demands, plus beauty and good taste. It is a story that no one of your position and importance has ever done. There is just one chance in it that I would suggest, if you have the daring and courage to make it."

And before Geraldine Farrar went to her train that night she telegraphed Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, saying:

"I have found the story."

It is this story that is now being made.

Arrow Film to Reissue Kerrigan Short Subjects

W. E. Shallenberger Announces Offering of One and Two-Reel Pictures, Made By American Film Company for Release One Each Week.

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has acquired the rights to the J. Warren Kerrigan productions, made by the American Film Co., and is re-editing and re-titling the entire series, consisting of thirty one-reel and ten two-reel productions.

These releases are being offered to State Right buyers to be issued, one a week, commencing July 8. A complete and new line of advertising matter is being made on each production. This series is the pick of over 100 productions made by the American in the past four years.

"It appears," said Doctor Shallenberger, "that there is a dearth of meritorious one and two-reel productions on the market, and motion picture houses have sent up a cry for this length of release. Producers have been confining themselves largely to five or more part productions. Stars who now appear in long productions were those who earned their reputation through their work in the shorter length subjects, and the exhibitors feel that if a star is needed he or she is as much of a box office value in a short subject as in a longer one.

"I expect to speedily close out the United States and Canada on these Kerrigan reissues and will then have an announcement for the trade on other subjects of like merit."

Gaumont News Reels Show Several Timely Pictures

JUST three days after showing the graduation of the 1919 class of "middies" at Annapolis the Gaumont Company, in Graphic No. 12, pictures the graduation exercises, one year ahead of time, of 136 new army officers at the U. S. Military Academy, at West Point. After delivering the diplomas the Secretary of War addressed the new officers.

A subject from one of Uncle Sam's big war plants shows the making of torpedo tubes; others show how army engineers are taught the art of railroad and bridge building, the making of a military road by state convicts, and some of the steps they are taking to let the fact that the marines need 50,000 men be known.

Foreign scenes show the fight made by the marines in checking the German drive, reinforcement of the French forces by Italian infantry, a picture of a French village under bombardment, and an officer who has been decorated for brilliant work with the "tanks." Captain Deloche, who was held a prisoner with his tank by the Germans for forty-eight hours, but finally escaped and drove back to safety.

Another subject deals with the growing and conservation of food supplies. The Employment Service, U. S. Department of Labor, advertises its need for men and women to aid in harvesting the bumper crop raised this year, and one scene shows the marines, "Soldiers of the Sea," enrolling "Soldiers of the Soil" for this patriotic work.

In this issue of the Gaumont News is shown "Flag Day" being celebrated all over the country; in the national capital the President and Mrs. Wilson attend the exercises at the foot of the Washington monument; ten thousand soldiers assist Mme. Schumann-Heink, the operatic prima donna, in a song festival in the Stanford Stadium in California. Prominent actresses are shown making vests for aviators from old gloves and scraps of leather, and the stimulating effect Miss Dorothy Gish had on a recent Thrift Stamp sale. A picturesque scene shows the clearing away of the snow on Pike's Peak, and another scene taken in an altitude nearly three miles lower—the annual parade of bathing girls on the Pacific Coast.

Much Interest Aroused By Leah Baird Serial

A. ALPERSON, general manager of Western Photoplays, Inc., announces that the serial which this company is making, starring Leah Baird, is arousing considerable interest among state right buyers. During the past week the following men, well known in this branch of the industry, were among the visitors: Harry Charnas of Standard Film Service Co., Detroit, E. H. Harden of E. & H. Distributing Co., Atlanta; Harry Lande of Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh, and Sidney B. Lust of Washington, D. C.

It is stated that a special showing will be given when the first five episodes are completed.

The title has not yet been selected definitely. It is said that Miss Baird does not agree with the company officials regarding the title they desire to use, and letters have been written to a number of picture fans in various sections of the country asking their opinions as to which of several titles they consider the most appropriate.

Hutchinson Seriously Injured

A SERIOUS mishap occurred Wednesday, June 19, in the taking of one scene during the third episode of the Leah Baird serial now in the making at the Crystal studio.

Charles Hutchinson, who is playing one of the principal roles, was to make a seventy-foot dive from the window of a house situated on the side of a cliff. That portion of the jump showing the going out of the window was done in the studio; for that portion showing the exterior of the window as well as the cliff and water, a trip was made to the Palisades. A set was erected and three cameras located at various points down to the water's edge to catch the sensational jump from every angle.

Unfortunately as Hutchinson hurled himself through the window the tip of his shoe caught on edge of window sill, causing him to turn a complete somersault in mid-air, and hitting the water partly on his back and side.

Being rendered unconscious he immediately sank. Cameraman H. J. Frommer and a bystander dived to his assistance and pulled him to safety. He was unconscious for about twenty minutes, but recovered en route to the hospital sufficiently to inquire faintly whether or not "the camera had gotten it."

Unless internal injuries develop he will probably be able to leave the hospital within a week.

Special Trade Showing of Fourth Petrova Film

FOLLOWING the custom inaugurated with her first special production, a special screening of "Tempered Steel," Madame Petrova's fourth special picture, will be given by the Petrova Picture Company for the motion picture trade press, followed by a luncheon for the assembled guests, at which Bert Ennis, publicity director, will be the master of ceremonies.

"Tempered Steel" was written for Madame Petrova by George Middleton, the well known playwright, and directed by Ralph Ince, who also directed her fifth picture, "Patience Sparhawk." "Tempered Steel" is said to be marked by a number of innovations, especially in connection with the sub-titling. In place of the ordinary speeches and descriptive matter the titling has been handled in such a manner as to blend smoothly into the continuity of the scenes, and it is claimed that an effect has been gained that impresses the audience with a sense of smoothness.

This production will be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Rifkin Secures Specials For New England States

CONTINUING his policy of adding special productions at frequent intervals to the list of features offered New England exhibitors by the Eastern Feature Film Company, Herman Rifkin has completed arrangements with the Atlantic Distributing Corporation for the handling of "Nine Tenths of the Law" and "The Devil's Playground."

Both of these productions have attracted attention because of their advertising possibilities. Mitchell Lewis, star of "The Barrier," "The Bar Sinister" and "The Sign Invisible," is seen in "Nine-Tenths of the Law," while The Devil's Playground" is a spectacular production of Broadway cabaret life in which Vera Michelena appears as the central figure of a drama dealing with the gay white way.

It is announced that the Loew, Moss, Fox and other large circuits have booked these pictures.

New Brady Film Offered to State Right Buyers

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S success, "Stolen Orders," now in its third week of prosperity at the Park theater, New York City, will be sold on a state right basis and exhibitors will soon have the opportunity of playing this timely picture.

So far every week that "Stolen Orders" has been shown at the Park theater it is said to have shown a bigger profit than the corresponding week for the showing of "The Whip."

"Stolen Orders" is claimed to have the attributes which will enable exhibitors to make a big clean-up, that is, thrills, love, passion, hate and timeliness.

Sales of the Week

Activities in State Rights Market During the Past Seven Days.

HARRY RAPF announces sale of the following territories on his two productions, "The Struggle Everlasting" and "The Accidental Honeymoon": To Motion Picture Theater Owners' Association for Illinois and southern Wisconsin; to All-Star Feature Corporation for California, Arizona, and Nevada; to Pioneer Film Corporation for upper New York state; to Keystone Feature Company for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey; to Frank Gersten, Inc., for northern New Jersey; to Masterpiece Film Company for Ohio, and to V. H. Hodupp, Inc., for Indiana.

The following territory sales are announced by the W. H. Productions Company: Series of twenty-eight Keystone reissues, twenty-six Charlie Chaplin reissues, sixteen Shorty Hamilton reissues, and four W. S. Hart feature reissues for Gardiner Syndicate, Buffalo, for New York state north of Westchester county; series of twenty-six Charlie Chaplin reissues to B. N. Judell, Inc., Minneapolis, for Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

The Gaumont Company announces that its independent News Service, issued semi-weekly as the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic, has been sold for the following territory: Illinois: To Celebrated Players Film Co., 207 South Wabash avenue, Chicago. Ohio and Kentucky: To Masterpiece Film Attractions, 404 Sincere building, Cleveland. New York State, north of the counties of Dutchess, Ulster and Sullivan: To Doo-Lee Film Co., Inc., 445 South Warren street, Syracuse.

Betzwood Company Working On Two Feature Pictures

CAMERA work on the Betzwood Film Company's production featuring Lady Tsen Mei, said to be the only Chinese star on the screen, has been practically completed. Meanwhile Ira M. Lowry, the director, has already started on the western story, "Sandy Burke," by J. Allen Dunn, in which Louis Bennison is put forward by the Betzwood Film Company.

With matters in this shape the executives point to the two productions for corroboration of the policy set down by the company at its conception. This was that in possession of abundant capital and a well appointed plant and with no scheduled release dates it could concentrate upon specialty features which exhibited possibilities not presented in the average screen subject. Director Lowry is said to have surrounded his unique Chinese star and thrilling story with a lavishness of scenic atmosphere. Mr. Lowry and his associates are confident that in Louis Bennison they have a "trump" possessing youth, brains, the gift of natural acting, a splendid physique, good looks and a winning, friendly smile.

Petrova's W. S. S. Tour Proves a Great Success

BEULAH LIVINGSTON, personal and publicity representative for Madame Petrova, left New York on Tuesday for Atlanta to arrange for Madame Petrova's appearance at Jake Wells' theaters in connection with her W. S. S. Drive.

Miss Livingston will act as advance agent, keeping three days ahead of Madame Petrova on her tour, which will embrance twenty-seven of the principal cities of the country, covering nine weeks. In addition to contributing her time and talent, Madame Petrova is bearing the entire expense of the tour. At Tom Moore's Garden theater in Washington, L. A. DeHoff's New theater in Baltimore and Nathan Gordon's Olympia theater in Boston she is said to have sold nearly $50,000 worth of War Saving Stamps.

Perret's New Production Combines Romance and War

E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli Featured in "Lafayette, We Come," a Patriotic Picture Based on Pershing's Speech at Tomb of French Patriot.

ALTHOUGH Leonce Perret's forthcoming production, "Lafayette, We Come!" carries a patriotic appeal, its message is not direct. The film is said to be an absorbing and thrilling story of mystery and intrigue, flavored with the romance of love and war.

E. K. Lincoln is cast as an American boy composer, Leroy Trenchard. Dolores Cassinelli, the talented and emotional Italian actress, appears as Therese Verneuil, Leroy's sweetheart. A carefully select cast has been engaged to support Mr. Lincoln and Miss Cassinelli.

The story of "Lafayette, We Come!" has to do with an American boy (Leroy) who becomes one of America's fighting men; his sweetheart mysteriously disappears. Leroy meets Princess Zitkoff and is astounded by her resemblance to Therese. He is blinded by the weapon of a Hun. Overcome, he yearns for Therese.

Therese has entered the service of the Allied Secret Agents and is instructed to assume the role of the German spy, the Princess Zitkoff. She succeeds in her mission and devotes herself to carying for blinded heroes in a French hospital. She recognizes Leroy, but does not reveal her identity. She takes care of him until after an operation restores his sight.

Leroy, when he discovers Therese, pushes her from him as she beseeches him to forgive her. A letter explains the work Therese had done, and Leroy and Therese are united once more.

Throughout the story Mr. Perret has woven touches of incidents showing American soldiers being entertained in French homes, tending to portray the growing fraternity between the peoples of the United States and France, and is said to have embodied in his production numerous startling effects. It closes with a scene in a cathedral. Leroy completing the composition entitled "Our Prayer Over Here for the Ones Over There." The roof of the cathedral opens, and through the rifts in the clouds the allied forces are seen sweeping on to victory. As the last strains die away, a distant medley reaches the ear. It seems to be drawing nearer, increasing in volume, then crashing forth into a medley of national anthems of the Allies as the enlightened rays of the sun break through the clouds, illuminating the earth and blazing a path of victory for the allied champions of civilization.

"Topics of the Day" Is a Screen Novelty

A SCREEN novelty which is now in its seventh week at the Strand theater, New York, is "Topics of the Day," which is being distributed by the Topics of the Day Film Company, Times building, New York, of which A. E. Siegal is the proprietor.

This film is issued weekly in approximately two hundred foot lengths consisting of about fifteen timely "punch" paragraphs carefully selected from newspapers and magazines from every part of the world. They are prepared with the cooperation of the Literary Digest, published by Funk and Wagnalls. The staff of this publication selects fifty subjects from which the Topics company pick out fifteen which are considered to be the best. These are then filmed in the same manner as motion picture subtitles, making what might be termed "a picture-less motion picture."

With its large staff of experts combined with the fact that the Literary Digest selects its reading matter from five thousand periodicals from every country the wide field that "Topics of the Day" has access to can be appreciated.

Mr. Siegel announces that he is arranging for international distribution of these "Topics," and is having them translated into several other languages. European rights have been sold to Robertson-Cole Company, and Sol Lesser has contracted for rights covering California, Arizona, and Nevada, while deals covering other territories are pending.

Not only has Mr. Siegal entered into an exclusive contract with the Literary Digest, but he advises that this publication will from time to time carry publicity covering this film, referring to the fact that it is based on the news selected by their staff.

"Topics of the Day" is being offered on state rights basis, also on a franchise basis for theater circuits, and the first four weeks service is now ready. In addition to being shown at the Strand it is also being exhibited at many other theaters, including the Playhouse in Chicago for an indefinite run in connection with the Prizma colored naval pictures.

Lockwood-Allison Films To Be Released by Arrow

A QUIET campaign to ascertain the demand for reissues of productions with stars of present-day popularity has been conducted by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, for the past four weeks.

As a result, the Arrow Film Corporation announces re-issues of four five-reel Lockwood-Allison features heretofore entitled "The Buzzard's Shadow," "The End of the Road," "The Other Side of the Door," "Life's Blind Alley."

These productions are being re-edited at the laboratories of the American Film Co. under the supervision of Mr. Shallenberger, and a new and original line of advertising matter is being prepared.

In the case of these reissues the productions are said to retain all of the original with a re-assembling and re-cutting so as to make the story more modern and up to the present high standards of feature releases.

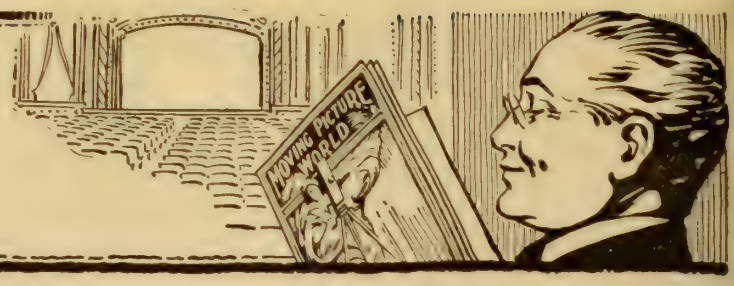
The new titles have been determined upon, but have not yet been announced.

These releases are being disposed of under one contract—the first production to be released the middle of July.

"The Hand of Vengeance" Sensational but Clean

THE new Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," is said to be not only thrilling and startling, but also to be absolutely clean, and that parents need feel no compunction about letting their children see it. It has been built to suit that portion of the theater-going public that likes sensational entertainment, and the hero is a thoroughly "red-blooded" person.

After being wronged the hero gets his revenge and then becomes champion of others who have also been wronged, using spectacular and effective methods always.



"The Hand of Vengeance" will be released weekly in two-reel episodes, the entire serial requiring two and a half months for a complete showing, and the serial is said to grow better and better with each episode until the sensational climax at the end is reached.

Lesser Handling "Pershing's Crusaders" In California

SOL L. LESSER has been appointed by Governor Stevens of California to act in the capacity of chairman of the Division of Films, State Council of Defense for California.

It is announced that the contract with the California State Council having been affirmed, the Committee on Public Information has released "Pershing's Crusaders" for distribution in California under Mr. Lesser's direction.

New England Company Takes Griffith Film

"Hearts of the World" Now Showing at the Majestic in Boston Where Dorothy Gish Appears and Tells of Experiences in France.

By Robert N. Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Dorothy Gish, who plays one of the leading roles in "Hearts of the World," now at the Majestic theater in this city, was in this city Wednesday, June 19, accompanied by her mother, who also played an important role in the picture. They appeared at the theater and related some of their experiences on the Western front while "Hearts of the World" was being taken.

The New England rights to the Griffith film have been sold to a local organization known as the "Hearts of the World" Company of New England. Those in the deal include Alfred S. Black, of the Maine Theaters, Inc., and president of the Maine branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League; Goldstein Brothers, of Springfield; Harry Asher, of Boston; A. A. Spitz, of Providence; R. L. and William H. O'Neill, who controls the Auditorium and Palace theaters at Manchester, New Hampshire. The new management is now in control of the production at the Majestic theater.

The Griffith interest sold "Hearts of the World" for New England presentation for only $75,000, while it is reported that the Pacific Coast territory bought it for $200,000, and the states of Illinois and Pennsylvania paid $150,000 each for the film.

Edgar Lang, the Boston press representative, who convinced the Massachusetts State Police that "Hearts of the World" was a picture worthy of Sunday showing, is now general press representative for David W. Griffith with headquarters in New York City.

Olga Petrova Sells Many Stamps.

The appearance of Mme. Olga Petrova, the noted film star, in Boston, to aid in the War Savings Stamps campaign, was an event of unusual interest. She spoke to over 5,000 people at noon on Boston Common, and in the afternoon and evening addressed two great audiences at the Gordon's Scollay Square and the Gordon's Washington Street Olympia.

She sold nearly $25,000 worth of war savings stamps during her day's stay in this city. She deplored the popular impression that motion picture actresses entered campaigns to aid the Government with the view of winning popularity themselves. She said nothing could be further from the truth. She declared she would much prefer to rusticate at her own home than to be crowded and jammed and stared at and made the object of indiscreet remarks as is so often the case when one appears in public. She said she entered the War Savings campaign with the sole aim of aiding the Government. "I married an American and I am an American," she declared with a fine show of spirit.

"Pershing's Crusaders" a Big Hit.

"Pershing's Crusaders" is drawing big at the Shubert theater, Boston. Special nights are being arranged for all suburban cities and towns and different organizations, with the result that big delegations take up a good part of the house nightly. The patriotic appeal, and the fact that the funds go to the war charities, has popularized the film. The film has been given the special Sunday night privilege, with the result that "Hearts of the World," "Pershing's Crusaders" and "My Four Years in Germany" are now being shown every Sunday night here.

French Officers Visit Pathe.

Manager Stanley Hand, of the Boston Pathe office, was agreeably surprised when he received a call from the visiting French officers that are booming recruiting in Boston. The Pathe, being a French organization, is very popular in that country, and the officers were anxious to see the working of the American branch of that organization, so Manager Hand had the honor of being host to them for an afternoon. The afternoon's entertainment was the showing of the French war films in the Pathe exchange and a dinner afterward. Manager Hand does not speak the French language, but made an ideal host, and the officers left very well pleased with the afternoon visit.

W. H. Bradley Resigns.

There has been a change in management of the Boston office of the Goldwyn exchange. William H. Bradley, who has been in charge since Harry F. Campbell left to take charge of the Fox exchange, has resigned, and the new management has not been announced. Mr. Bradley has been with the Goldwyn office for some time, having managed the Washington office and held various positions in the New York office of that company.

W. L. Jennings Has Enrolled.

W. L. Jennings, of the General Film Company, Boston, has his application in for special service in France and is expected to be called within two weeks. He covers the territory in northwestern Massachusetts. He is expecting to go with the Y. M. C. A. War Work Council and will have charge of amusements for the soldiers where he will be stationed.

American Feature Opens New Office.

New Haven, Conn.—The American Feature Film Company has opened an office at 131 Meadow street, this city, in order to better handle their trade in this territory. On account of many delays in express and films arriving in bad shape they considered it necessary to open a branch office. The management will be under the direction of the Boston exchange.

D. H. Brand Takes Charlestown House.

Charlestown, Mass.—The Thompson Square theater of the city has been bought by D. H. Brand, manager of the Trimont film exchange of Boston. The theater excels many of the Boston houses for moving pictures and vaudeville. Manager Brand reports very good business for the first two weeks under his management. The theater was formerly owned by George T. Horn.

Film People Help Open Hotel.

Haverhill, Mass.—Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Park theater in Boston and the Strand in Lowell; Miss Helene Chadwick, the Pathe star, and Sergt. Wellman, of the Lafayette Escadrille, were special guests and speakers at the dedication of the new Hotel Nichols in this city recently. Miss Chadwick explained some of her motion picture work and was enthusiastically received. Mr. Soriero gave some interesting anecdotes of the life of a motion picture manager. Sergt. Wellman talked on the war work of the airmen.

Portland's New Strand Opens

Largest House East of Boston Opens in Maine's Business Metropolis.

By John P. Flanagan, Park View Ave., Bangor, Maine.

PORTLAND, ME.—The opening of the New Strand theater recently was attended by film men from Boston and many Maine cities and was a most auspicious event. After an eight months' period of reconstruction, the new Strand is not only the largest in this city, but is also the largest east of Boston. It is a ground floor house without a pillar or post to obstruct the view of the stage. From the remote corner seat in the balcony as fine a view of the screen may be had as from the boxes or the orchestra.

The house is absolutely fireproof, steel and concrete having been used almost wholly in its construction. There are five exits on every side. The seating capacity is a little more than 2,500, yet a capacity audience could leave the theater without haste or inconvenience in a remarkably short time. The fire exits from the balcony are as numerous and as accessible as those on the first floor. The ventilation and heating system, in accordance with the latest designs, will insure coolness in summer and warmth in the winter, with fresh air all the time.

Vacuum cleaning equipment will insure absolute cleanliness. Good taste characterizes the artistic equipment. The lobbies, corridors, lounging rooms, ladies retiring and rest rooms, and toilets are conveniently arranged, and Manager William E. Reeves has arranged for an excellent corps of attendants.

The Strand Symphony orchestra, consisting of 14 skilled musicians, has been formed under the direction of Albert E. Hopkins, insuring the finest of music at every performance, and a grand concert organ will also add to the attractiveness of the program.

The house will be open daily except Sunday, from noon to 10.30 p. m. At 1.45 p. m. the first of the two big feature pictures will be thrown on the screen. At 4.45 p. m. the first feature will again be shown and the entire program repeated. This makes two performances in the afternoon at convenient hours. The time for the commencement of the features will remain the same. In the evening, the performance will start at 7.45 p. m., continuing until 10.30.

William E. Reeves, the Strand's manager, has succeeded. The executive staff of the Strand consists of William A. Davis, assistant manager; Albert E. Hopkins, assistant manager; Bessie A. Root and Fred L. Hill, organists; Stella James, cashier; Richard Farr, chief electrician; A. L. Falconi, chief operator; J. A. Halstead, lobby officer, Charles Butlet, house officer; Donald McDougle, chief usher; B. F. Tibbetts, superintendent of theater; Mrs. Mary Butler, matron.

Mary Pickford in "M'Liss" and George Walsh in "Brave and Bold" were the opening features.

News From Maritime Provinces

From Alice Fairweather, The Standard, St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—There are as usual in the theatrical and film business many rumors of changes in various ways, but one is told "well there is nothing to be said about that" or "No, that deal is not decided yet," and so it goes.

In St. John the theaters are very decidedly feeling the summer weather and the Daylight Saving time. One notices this in the afternoons perhaps more than in the evenings, though a few wet days lately have been rather a boon to the picture houses.

Vaudeville holds its own pretty well and the Opera House, Gem and Lyric (where there is a musical comedy with Nat Farnum at the head) have their regular patrons. The Imperial has drawn good houses with several pictures lately especially "The Doctor and the Woman" which was a great success. Another Universal picture was at the Imperial this week. Carmel Myers in "The Wife He Bought." The Gem is starting "The Eagle's Eye" and the Opera House began on Friday, June 14, the Universal serial "The Lion's Claw."

Manager Golding Aids I. O. D. E.

A very fine amateur performance was given in the Imperial Theater called "Twilight in An Oriental Garden." The programme was arranged by the Royal Standard Chapter Daughters of the Empire and the occasion was used to inaugurate the new Japanese setting of the Imperial Theater. The two were advertised in conjunction and the stage was very beautiful. W. H. Golding the manager of the Imperial Theater assisted the I. O. D. E. in every way and was the recipient of a hearty vote of thanks at the meeting of the Chapter following the entertainment. At the closing time of the City Schools an entertainment is being planned to be held at the Imperial to forward the claims of the Navy League.

"Sirens" Will Be Seen by Officials.

G. A. Margetts who is appealing from a decision of the N. Brunswick Board of Censors regarding the condemning of "The Sirens of the Sea" has had his claim to appeal allowed and is going to appear before the Provincial Government in July.

Even an Official Didn't Know.

The ticket tax is working out all right now and after a few comical mistakes people soon got used to it. There were some indignant people who did not realize that "everybody must pay the ticket tax" meant that everybody really had to. "But I have a pass" was frequently heard and one Government official even was quite annoyed at the necessity of returning to spend his cent for the ticket.

Worth a Passing Glance

The Unique theater (F. G. Spencer) played two of the Fox children's specials with good success.

H. W. Lee formerly manager for F. G. Spencer at the Hayden-Gibson theater at Woodstock has left that place to accept a position in the States. He spent a recent Friday in St. John.

Jolly Times Expected at State Convention

Business Meeting Will Be at Headquarters, But an Outing Has Been Planned for Delegates at Westville, N. J., for June 25.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—A picnic luncheon and a baseball game will be the feature of the day's outing to be held on Tuesday, June 25, at Westville, N. J., under the auspices of the Exhibitor's League, of Pennsylvania, in conjunction with their state convention. Owing to the conditions brought about by the war the annual state convention meeting of the league will be held at their headquarters in Philadelphia, at 1331 Vine street, on Monday and Tuesday, June 24 and 25. On Monday the election of officers will take place in conjunction with the selection of delegates for the national convention. On Tuesday all business will be disposed of by noon, and then the grand rush will be made for the Westville "Special," which will leave Camden (Penn. R. R.) at 12:30 and every hour thereafter. Sam Blatt, Charles Klang, and Herbert Given have the honor of organizing the teams who will play on the theater men's and the exchange men's nines.

Dinner Tendered to Buhler.

Employees, manager, and executives of the Stanley Company and the Central Market Street Amusement Company honored Frank Buhler by tendering him a dinner to mark his elevation to the position of managing director of all the theaters under the control of the two companies, recently announced by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company. The affair started at mid-night Wednesday, June 12, at the Hotel Bingham, and for several hours the guest of honor was lauded in speeches and enthusiastically congratulated upon his well deserved promotion.

Abe L. Einstein acted as toastmaster, and brief addresses extolling the merits of Mr. Buhler as an executive and a splendid fellow were delivered by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company; Al Boyd, Abe Sablosky and others, and in behalf of the managers and other friends William Goldenberg presented Mr. Buhler with a solid silver loving cup as a momento of the happy occasion.

Edward J. O'Keefe, the popular Atlantic City theater manager, has added the Million Dollar theater to the list of houses which will come under his personal direction, thereby making a total of four theaters.

Parax Film Opens Office.

The Parax Film Company have secured the former World building at 1314 Vine street, Philadelphia, as its permanent local headquarters for the distribution of the Sherry Service. George Wright, of New York, with several years of experience in the film business to his credit, has been appointed the manager, and he is certainly optimistic regarding the future. The initial productions to be released in the near future are Catherine Calvert in "Romance of the Underworld," Dorris Kenyon in "The Street of Seven Stars," Catherine Calvert in "The Girl Problem," and Dorris Kenyon in "The Inn of the Blue Moon."

What Films Are Doing.

Admirers of Mary Pickford, and they are found in abundance in Philadelphia, rejoiced at the success of their idol in her latest film production, "How Could You Jean?", which began a week's engagement at the Stanley theater Monday, June 17.

In the film version of his own Broadway success, "Hit the Trail Holliday," George M. Cohan gave last Monday's audience a treat at the Palace theater in his portrayal of Billy Holliday.

For the all-week feature film at the Arcadia theater "Her Final Reckoning," starring Pauline Frederick, proved one of the most absorbing seen on the screen of that popular photoplay house this spring.

Baltimore Trade Letter

Gerard Story Plays to Record Houses.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The receipts during the week of June 10 at the Garden theater, Lexington street at Park avenue, were the largest in the history of the house. During the entire week, Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" was run with four acts of vaudeville and the playhouse was packed to the walls every day and night. On the last two days of the run Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the company, and L. A. DeHoff, his photoplay manager, had to erect a screen and place chairs on the roof garden to accommodate the crowds that could not find room in the theater.

Two Houses Dark During Summer.

The Daisy theater, 1752 North Gay street, under the management of J. Hasslinger, has now been closed for the summer months.

The Royal theater, 1940 West Pratt street, owned by Frank A. Hornig, president of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, has also closed for the summer months.

Al. Rosenthal in Baltimore.

Al. Rosenthal, formerly associated with the Metro office in Chicago, is now in Baltimore and has just closed a deal with the Variety Pictures Corporation of this city, whereby it will control all pictures handled by him in this territory. He wishes his Chicago friends the best of luck. Mr. Rosenthal and Milton Caplon, president of the Variety Pictures Corporation, attended the moving picture convention in Richmond during the week of June 10.

New Theater Planned in Baltimore.

The Forest Park Theater Company have made application with the building inspector of Baltimore for a permit to build a one-story moving picture theater to measure 57 by 93.9 feet on the west side of Garrison avenue, south of Liberty Heights avenue. The building is to be built of brick and stucco and will cost in the neighborhood of $20,000.

Did Not Cut Film, Fined.

The case of the Maryland Censor Board, represented by Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison and Clarendon I. T. Gould, of the board, against Joseph Blechman, proprietor of the Picture Garden theater, president of the Variety Pictures Corporation, for failing to delete certain scenes in "It May Be Your Daughter," came up on Thursday morning, June 13. The case was tried in the Central Police Court before Justice Beach, and while the Variety Pictures Corporation was fined $25 and costs the case against Mr. Blechman was dismissed.

Sherry Service Opens Pittsburgh Office

B. F. Lyon Will Have Charge of Branch at 804 Penn Avenue—Other Notes of Interest from Western Pennsylvania.

By E. J. McCurdy, 455 Union Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—A new exchange will be added to the Pittsburgh list of film distributors next week, when the Pittsburgh branch of the Wm. L. Sherry exchanges opens at 804 Penn avenue on the fifth floor of the Sauer building. The new exchange will commence doing business just as soon as preliminary arrangements can be completed, and will have a number of features ready to release, the first among which will be the Frank Keeney production, "A Romance of the Underworld," starring Catherine Calvert.

The Pittsburgh branch will be in charge of B. F. Lyon, who is back in Pittsburgh after an absence of almost two years. Mr. Lyon came to Pittsburgh originally as the branch manager of Pathe's exchange on Liberty avenue, but went with the International Film Service when Mr. Hearst launched the organization as manager of its Pittsburgh branch. This position he retained until he was made district manager of the International, and when he left Pittsburgh to resume his new duties a host of friends among exhibitors sincerely regretted his leaving. Mr. Lyon was one of the most popular managers in the Pittsburgh territory, and it is reasonable to presume that the exchange he is now opening will be most successful under his guidance. It is a coincidence that he will occupy precisely the same quarters which he had when manager of the International.

R. A. Fulton Takes Titusville Theater.

Another theater in the territory has changed hands because of the war. The latest is the Orpheum at Titusville, Pa., a very wealthy oil town in the northern part of the state. The theater has been managed by Mr. Womer for a number of years, and has proven very successful. The theater is large, having a splendid seating capacity, and plays to the best patronage in town. Mr. Womer has taken up Y. M. C. A. war work, and the theater has been taken over by R. A. Fulton, who formerly managed the hotel at Tionesta, Pa. Mr. Fulton has been very successful in the hotel business, and should find the theater business to his liking. The theater has been closed for remodeling and repairs, but will open about the 1st of July.

Western Pennsylvania Notes.

The Grand theater in Beaver Falls, owned by Edwin Goodman, was purchased this week by Hyman Goldberg, who formerly managed the Majestic theater at Rochester, N. Y., which was sold about four months ago. The Grand seats about 400 people, and should prosper under Mr. Goldberg's management.

"Carmen of the Klondyke" opened auspiciously at the new Olympic theater on Fifth avenue, and played to good business during the entire week. The Supreme Photoplays Productions, distributors of the feature, declare that bookings have been very heavy, and they will find it necessary to buy another print, making four in all.

A short time ago I made mention of the fact that a new group of film men were to buy property and build theaters in many towns around Pittsburgh. The first definite announcement of this plan has now been made. The Western Pennsylvania Amusement Co. has purchased property at 614 Main street, Sharpsburg, Pa., and will construct a theater seating approximately 700. Work will be started soon.

The new Orpheum theater at Clarksburg, West Virginia, has been opened by Jack Marks. The new theater will be called the Opera House. Every modern improvement and convenience conceivable has been added to make it a truly exemplary theater for road shows as well as pictures.

J. F. Young, who has been in charge of Harvey Day's Premier exchange in Cleveland, was a Pittsburgh visitor the other day. Mr. Young reports business as brisk in Cleveland, but some how likes Pittsburgh very much.

C. H. Murray, of the Sharpsburg Cameraphone, expects to join the draft forces shortly, and the management of his theater will devolve on the younger brother. Mr. Murray's older brother is already at the front. Mark Spandau, who has been working as a roadman for Jere Spandau, his brother, has joined the colors, and leaves Jere to seek another salesman.

A combination has been effected whereby the Poster Company and the Poster Mounting Company become the American Poster and Mounting Company. They have retained the old location of the Poster Company, and the new officers of the concern are H. Clay Berger; Adolph Schaeffer, and George M. Schaeffer.

Cleveland News Letter

Exhibitors' Booking Now Ready.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—After two months of organization, the plans of the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation of Ohio have matured and they are now about ready to do business.

This incorporated concern was organized by Cleveland exhibitors, capitalized at $8,000. There are now thirty members and a total of $2,500 worth of stock has been sold. Owing to the fact that only $4,000 worth of stock will be sold, that leaves but $1,500 to be disposed of, which will have to be divided among 70 exhibitors, as only 100 exhibitors can be taken into the organization with the present capitalization.

The Exhibitors' Booking Corporation is to buy pictures on the plan devised by C. C. Pettijohn and others who organized a parent company some time ago.

Sam Bullock as representative of the Ohio company, is now in New York at a meeting of all the state organizations, where the final plans for buying pictures is being worked out. The new company hopes to be buying before fall.

Glad They Saw "The Unbeliever."

"The Unbeliever," which is having quite a run in Cleveland, is responsible for the enlistment of many boys from the Forest City in the Marine Corps.

Two of such instances, however, are worth more than passing interest. These are two employes of the Cleveland Kleine exchange, Ely Epstein, bookkeeper, and Joe Swee, shipper.

When "The Unbeliever" first arrived in Cleveland several months ago these boys were contemplating enlisting. "The Unbeliever" was screened by Manager Norwood and Swee and Epstein saw it.

The following day both went to the Marine recruiting station and applied. In a few days they were accepted. In a letter to the writer received last week from Epstein, who is at Paris Island, So. Carolina, he says:

Ely J. Epstein.

"I am certainly pleased with this branch of the service and I might say that if it wasn't for 'The Unbeliever' I perhaps would never be in the Marine Corps and therefore am thankful to Edison for producing a picture which induced me to join the service."

Epstein says he qualified as a marksman and received a $2 pay increase as a result.

Masterpiece Film Gets a Weekly.

Announcement was made by Leon D. Netter of the Masterpiece Film Attractions that his company had obtained the Gaumont Weekly for distribution in Ohio and Kentucky.

The service will start July 1 and there will be two releases per week, one on Sunday and the other on Wednesday. The Weekly will be distributed from the Cleveland exchange for northern Ohio, and from the Cincinnati exchange for southern Ohio and Kentucky.

Changes in Ashland.

Ashland, Ohio.—This city has been undergoing many changes in the operation of her theaters. Messrs. Michaels and McIntosh, who formerly ran the Princess theater, now have the Opera House, while the Princess has been opened up under the name of the Band Box by J. H. Clark, who formerly operated the Opera House.

Michaels and McIntosh also are running the Grand theater, there.

Rochester Trade Letter

By L. B. Skeffington, 61 Main St., East, Rochester, N. Y.

Will Run Theater at Aviation Camp.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Ellis A. Wolff proprietor and manager of the Palace theater, has been honored by being given the managership of the new Liberty theater at Kelly Field, San Antonio, Texas, by the Commission on Camp Activities of the War Department. The Palace theater is on Hudson avenue and is one of the larger residential section houses.

Becomes Showman in Camp Bowie.

Paul A. Fennyvessey, formerly manager of the Strand theater and younger son of Albert A. Fennyvessey, president and general manager of the Theaters Operating Company, is now at Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, Texas, where he is in charge of the Liberty theater. Paul always was a "versatile" showman, and his many and varied experiences in the game should make the Camp Bowie brand of entertainment really worth while.

A Popular Manager.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week were "Kiddie Days" at the Plymouth theater. Joe Stoeffel, the energetic manager of that house, has made himself the most popular man in the neighborhood with all of the kids and many of the grown-ups. On these days most all of the kids of the section had the opportunity to see themselves on the Plymouth screen. Joe had a photographer scour the neighborhood for all the good-looking kids and line them up for some home-grown movies. Joe doesn't care if D. W. Griffith can make better films than he can, he says that he's willing to bet that he is more popular in his bailiwick, especially with the proud parents of the capering youngsters, than all the first line directors in the country.

IN BUFFALO.

Must Now Renew Licenses.

Buffalo exhibitors are among the business men who have been notified by Vincent R. Riordan, collector of internal revenue of this district, that all Government licenses expire June 30. He warns that all doing business in July without the license will be prosecuted. He also says no uncertified checks will be received.

Two New Universal Salesmen.

F. S. Hopkins, manager of the Universal exchange, Buffalo, is installing a new projection room. He has added to his sales forces A. Beckerisch, formerly with the Pioneer Film, and J. Kirsch, formerly with the General. Mr. Hopkins reports great business with "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." He was visited this week by A. J. Sardina, Hippodrome theater, Syracuse; S. Rea, Starland theater, Syracuse, and C. L. Babcock, Lyric theater, Wellsville, N. Y.

"The Victor Film Service of Buffalo has changed its name to the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.," said Mr. Hopkins. "This is merely a change in name only. The Universal has standardized the names of its branch offices, Buffalo's office now being known as Branch L."

Coal Has Come, Hurry for Yours, Exhibitors

Buffalo Fuel Administrator Advises Users of Coal to Lay in Their Supply at Once—City Is Now Well Supplied.

(By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 North Elmwood avenue, Buffalo, N. Y. Telephone, Bell, Tupper 6296-J.)

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Get your winter's coal in NOW, Mr. Exhibitor and Mr. Exchangeman.

This is the advice of Howard A. Forman, of Buffalo, fuel administrator for Erie County, N. Y. Remembering the barn-like atmosphere of some of the local theaters last winter, many of the film men are heeding Mr. Forman's advice. Paraphrasing an old proverb, they believe a ton of coal in the cellar is worth two on a distributing ticket. During the past two months the government has sent here as much coal as was received in this city during the entire winter. The fuel administrator believes Buffalo will be well taken care of in its coal requirements during the coming fall and winter. His advice to the film men is: "Buy your coal now, even if you have to borrow the money."

Another Buffalo Manager Honored.

Mat Whitman, manager of the Allendale moving picture theater, Buffalo, has resigned to succeed Edward L. Hyman as manager of the Liberty theater at Camp Wheeler, Macon, Ga. Mr. Hyman, who formerly managed the Victoria theater, Buffalo, will now manage the Liberty theater at Camp Taylor.

"Ed. Hyman was so successful in managing the Liberty theater at Camp Wheeler that the Government is giving him a more difficult position in charge of a similar house at Camp Taylor," said Mr. Whitham.

Of the thirty-two Liberty theaters in the United States two are managed by Buffalonians. Friends of Messrs. Hyman and Whitham are proud of the record.

George A. Hickey Wins Coveted Prize.

Buffalo film men—competitors and all—are congratulating George A. Hickey, manager of the Goldwyn exchange, this city, because he won second prize in the sales contest, a national event, which the Goldwyn company closed recently. Mr. Hickey this week is poking fun at that bugaboo, old Mr. H. C. L., because George has just deposited in a local bank $500 in gold—not stage, but real money—which is his tangible prize money.

The reason for Mr. Hickey's success in the country-wide contest is that he is a hundred-per cent. plugger. He doesn't depend on road men to get him the business. He goes out and fights for it himself. During the three months of the contest he combed the Buffalo territory thoroughly. Using his car, he visited hundreds of theaters, and with good sales results.

Mr. Hickey has received a letter of congratulations from Paul H. Bush, Goldwyn manager of St. Louis. Near the close of the race these two ran neck and neck, but the Buffalonian grabbed the second prize in a spectacular last-week spurt. Mr. Hickey received similar congratulations from Comptroller Schay of the Goldwyn.

Higher Fares and the Film Shows.

Buffalo's street car fare will be raised from five to six cents. The City Council has adopted a resolution permitting this advance, which will go into effect shortly. The extra income of the company will be used to pay the railway employees higher wages. They threatened to strike if they were not granted this concession.

With higher rates on the trolleys and steam roads many people will be more disposed at times to save the additional expense and give extra patronage to their neighborhood film houses instead of making the trip to the big theaters downtown.

Uncle Sam With Sword at Shea's.

Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, recently had as his stage setting a large figure of Uncle Sam, sword in hand, commanding the forces of Treasury and State to win the war. Mr. Franklin and S. A. Anderson, a Buffalo florist, will have charge of the erection of a large floral arch at Lafayette Square. This will be one of the big features of the War Saving Stamp campaign week, June 22-28. An indicator each day will show the amount of money pledged for war stamps in the previous twenty-four hours. The arch will be illuminated at night and covered with flowers.

Buffalo Brevities.

Irving Hanower, manager of the First National exchange, Buffalo, recently visited Rochester, Syracuse, Elmira, and Utica in the interest of "Girard's Four Years in Germany" and "Tarzan of the Apes."

"Considering the time of year and conditions, A. T. Barnett, our road man, is putting over some good work," said Mr. Hanower.

The United Film Service, Buffalo, is handling "The Public Defender" for the Modern Feature Photoplays in this territory.

Toronto to Rate License Fees by Capacity

Exhibitors Informed that After January Next City Theater Tax Will Be Graded by Seating Capacity of the Houses.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—Intimation has been given Toronto exhibitors that the City of Toronto will enforce new theater license regulations starting with 1919. Municipal licenses will be based upon the seating capacity of a theater, the minimum being $50 for a theater with 399 seats or less. Heretofore, the municipal tax has been a flat $50 per year for all picture theaters.

Theater Has Attractive Summer Dress.

The Strand theater, one of Toronto's great downtown film theaters, appeared in summer dress on June 17. The whole exterior was given a fresh coat of paint, while the interior presents a delightful summery appearance. The lobby and vestibule have been decorated with choice blooms and plants while the interior has been hung with chintzes to heighten the effect of comfort and coolness produced with the cold air system. Another new item consists of new equipment in the projection room, including two new projection machines. The large orchestra is being continued under the direction of Ernest Knaggs and for several weeks the daily programme has included vocal solos by John T. Fiddes. Manager Clarence Robson has done everything possible to make the theater inviting to summer patrons.

Edward Morris Meets Hero's Death.

Toronto film men were shocked to hear of the death in action of Ed. Morris, one of the veteran figures in local film circles. Morris was killed while serving with the Canadian Army in France and leaves a large family. He was one of the original projection machine operators in Toronto, being first associated with the old Crystal Palace. He was later connected with the Canadian Universal Film Company.

Orpheum at Toronto Opens.

The Orpheum theater, 604 Queen street, west, Toronto, was opened during the week of June 10, the first presentation was "The Girl Phillipa." This was shown for the first two days and was followed by "The Seal of Silence," starring Earle Williams and Grace Desmond. The policy of the theater is to change programmes three times each week.

Business Jottings.

Manager M. Pappas of the Royal theater, Peterboro, Ontario, has added to the equipment facilities of his theater by the purchase of a gold fibre screen and two new Simplex projection machines.

Similar improvements have also been made at the Wychwood theater, Bathurst street, Toronto. At this theater a new gold fibre screen has been installed and the house also has a new Simplex.

Effective "Eagle's Eye" Publicity.

In presenting "The Eagle's Eye", Manager A. W. Herron of the Duchess theater, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, resorted to a number of stunts which resulted capacity patronage. He clipped from many newspapers all items referring to spy plots and pasted these under a heading, "Do You Know Your Neighbor?" on a three sheet board. He also showed an illuminated one-sheet in the lobby of his theater, placing a flasher back of the eagle's eyes which he had replaced with red gelatine paper. Herron also used bill boards, newspapers and quarter sheets to advertise the serial, the quarter sheets being distributed in all stores and homes. The population of the city is only 11,000.

Allens Choose Name for New House.

Announcement is made that the fine new moving picture theater which is being built in Toronto by Jules and J. J. Allen is to be known as Allen's Bloor Street theater. Building operations are progressing nicely and the new house will probably be opened early in the fall. It is a two-floor house and will have all the latest equipment features. The seating capacity will take care of a crowd of 1,000 people. The Allens have two other theaters in Toronto, the Allen, a downtown house, and Allen's Beaver theater in the West End. The theater which they have acquired in Ottawa is now known as Allen's Regent theater.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First Nat. Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

Ten Theaters Aid Worthy Cause.

CINCINNATI, O.—A fund for the benefit of the Fatherless Children of France, an unusually appealing relief organization, will be materially benefited by the offer of the managers of ten moving picture houses to distribute free of charge tickets for a school children's outing. The outing is to be held at Chester Park, and the Chester management will give a bonus to the relief fund for every ticket turned in by the children, hence the wider the distribution the more money will be given to the fund. Manager Libson will distribute tickets at the Grand, the Family, the Strand, the Walnut, and the Bijou. Manager Henry Hoefle, of the Clifton, will also distribute, as will Manager Ernest Striedelmeyer, of the Aragon Amusement Co.'s four houses. This makes up the ten which will see that thousands of children receive tickets.

"Re-making of Nation" Much Liked.

The welcome given by the Queen City to its first view of the official training camp pictures, "The Re-making of a Nation," was highly satisfactory to the army authorities in charge of the picture. The performances at the Grand were continuous, running from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m., and, while the admission charge of 25 cents was higher than that of the ordinary performance, thousands paid it gladly in order to get a first-hand impression of the way Uncle Sam trains his boys. No war tax is paid on this picture, as it is a part of the Government's educational work.

Spy Talked as a Four-Minute Man.

Cincinnati, O.—The splendid work which is being done here and elsewhere by the "Four-Minute Men" has made the public more ready to listen to speakers on war-time topics than was formerly the case, and this has been turned to account by a German spy working in this vicinity, as his arrest by Secret Service men a few days ago proved. The man in question, a German subject, was formerly in the American army, where he served a term as a deserter, and was posing as a returned officer of Pershing's forces. He delivered a number of addresses in this guise in which he laid great emphasis on the horrible tortures of poison gas, the great number of American wounded, and other matters calculated to upset women with sons in the army. Of course, he had never been near the front. His arrest, and the consequent revelation that dangerous German propaganda may be disseminated by unauthorized speakers, led to a meeting of "Four-Minute Men" and theater managers, at which arrangements were made for careful supervision by the authorities of all persons offering to deliver addresses either for pay or without it.

Lyric Theater Goes to 10 Cents.

The season of high-priced productions at the Lyric, Cincinnati, has ended for a time, at least, and the policy which prevailed for the greater part of last summer, when ten cents was the price of admission all over the house, has been started. That this involved no diminution in quality is evidenced by the fact that the film version of "The Yellow Ticket," featuring Fannie Ward, was the first of the popular-priced shows.

The Gifts Reports No Bad Weeks.

McMahan & Jackson, at the Gifts, Cincinnati, are fortunate in landing many a fine attraction in their regular run of pictures, and they were once more fortunate in one of the latest shows, featuring popular Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg." Business continues to run big at the Gifts, McMahan & Jackson reporting that they have not had a single bad week since the house opened, which certainly justifies their belief in the value of the location.

Thieves Loot the Lincoln Theater.

That thieves have begun to turn their attention to moving-picture theaters in Cincinnati as a means of securing easy money, since the Family was looted a month or so ago, is indicated by the fact that an unknown marauder recently obtained entrance to the Lincoln, at Fifth and John streets, and got away with $70, a gold watch, and other valuables, by breaking open the safe. It is thought that the thief obtained entrance by means of a duplicate key.

Red Cross Gets Theater for Night.

The management of the Arcade theater and airdome, in Avondale, near Cincinnati, did a good turn for the Red Cross by turning over the theater on one evening recently to some school children for use in presenting an entertainment for the benefit of the great relief organization. All of the proceeds went to the Red Cross, and the handsome sum of $452 was realized.

Nashville News Letter

Theater Burner Sought by Marines.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—United States Marines are after Phillip Lindicutt, alias Ray McKee, charged with burning down a number of moving picture houses near the Tennessee state line where Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" has been billed to show. A reward of $50 has been offered by the Nashville recruiting station for his apprehension.

Lindicutt left New York on May 20, and has been gathering confederates along his trail over the country. When last seen in southern Kentucy, Lindicutt is thought to have collected over a dozen sympathizers, and is creating much trouble for the authorities in the South. He is considered as a pro-German character of a dangerous kind, and his capture is being sought with all possible energy by civil and military authorities.

Lindicutt's latest bonfire was the Princess theater at Hopkinsville. He is described as being in the twenties, curley dark hair, rather handsome, weight about 135 pounds, and bearing several scars on his hands.

"Work or Fight" in Nashville.

The "work or fight" order will be felt in Nashville moving pictures the same as in other houses over the country. At the Knickerbocker Manager Wassman anticipated the movement several months in advance and installed girl ushers, ticket sellers aand doorkeepers in place of the young men formerly employed. At the other Nashville houses a number of the male employees have left the theater business and entered other lines of work. One instance has been cited where an employee of a local house left his post at the door and went to work in the government powder plant at Nashville for $6.00 a day.

Dayton News Letter

By P. J. G., Dayton Theater Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

Hot Wave Hits Dayton Business.

DAYTON, OHIO.—Sunday, June 16, was a scorcher in Dayton. It was one of the warmest days on record this year and the photoplay houses were not helped by it. The Dayton opened with Bessie Barriscale in "Those Who Pay." The theaters that could boast of a ventilating system that really could keep one half cool were the theaters that enjoyed business. The Strand had as their attraction "De Luxe Annie," and it was indeed De Luxe. Norma Talmadge, the lead in this film, is rapidly taking her place as one of Dayton's favorites and is stealing a part of the honor of the "Big Three." The Columbia opened Sunday with "Revelation," starring Nazimova. This actress never was much of a drawing card in Dayton.

Dayton Topical Weekly Making a Hit.

Managing Director Mark Gates at the Dayton theater reports that the topical weekly that he has inaugurated is making a great hit and that many people now ask for it. The pictures are all local scenes and are taken by the Pyramid Film Company of this city.

Orpheum Theater to Close.

A new business is to take the place of the Orpheum theater at Dayton, operated by John Lyons. A New York corporation operating a chain of stores all over the country have taken over the place and will reopen it in September. A local candy concern had taken over the place and would operate it as a confectionery it was said, but owing to the government restrictions on this business were forced to cancel their arrangements.

Gates Delegate to State Convention.

Owing to the trouble raised by so-called reformers, a state convention of the representative exhibitors of Ohio has been called at the Hotel Deshler, Columbus, Ohio. Mark Gates will act as the delegate from Dayton to help combat the Sunday question.

Atlanta News Letter

By Linton K. Starr, The Journal, Atlanta, Ga.

G. V. Atkison with Pathe.

ATLANTA, GA.—George V. Atkison, who for two years was the North Carolina and Tennessee representative for Pathe working out of their Charlotte office, has again signed up with Manager R. V. (Wild Bill) Anderson of the local exchange, and will cover the entire state of Georgia.

Mr. Atkison recently was representative for the Southeastern section for "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." He is now on a tour of the Key cities handling especially "The Yellow Ticket," "The House of Hate," and "Hands Up," Pathe's new Western serial featuring Ruth Roland.

"Yellow Ticket" Booked.

The Criterion has booked the latest Pathe serial, "The Yellow Ticket," featuring Fannie Ward.

James F. Jackson Returns.

James L. Jackson, widely known in local and Southern film circles, has returned to Atlanta to manage the Tudor, which soon is to take the place of the old Odeon on Peachtree street under the direction of William Oldknow.

Mr. Jackson was three years manager of the Alcazar here, and later managed the Savoy. He comes to the Tudor from Birmingham, where he has been managing a vaudeville house.

R. A. Davis Promoted.

R. A. Davis, salesman for Mutual at Atlanta, has been appointed branch manager for Mutual in that city succeeding C. E. Kessnich. Mr. Davis assumed charge of the office June 10.

Detroit Exchange Organization at Work

Film Section of the Local Board of Trade Elects Officers and Appoints a Transportation Committee—Will Be Active.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The exchange managers of Detroit after many conferences have affiliated with the local board of commerce and have formed a separate organization known as The Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of the Detroit Board of Commerce. J. F. Flynn, of the Goldwyn, is president; H. A. Ross, of the Artcraft-Paramount, is vice-president, and J. C. Fishman, of the Standard, is treasurer. H. B. Warner, secretary of the Board of Commerce, is secretary of the film oganization as well. There will be meetings twice a month.

A transportation committee has been appointed consisting of J. M. Duncan, Vitagraph; W. D. Ward, Universal, and Robert Cotton, World. Already the committee is at work with the transportation and traffic departments of the Board of Commerce to improve express shipments, improve C. O. D. collections, etc. It looks as though Detroit will really have a worth while association of exchange managers. Most of the home offices are backing up their managers and insisting that they take an interest in the organization and that they attend all meetings if possible.

Parex Film Opens in Detroit.

A New Detroit exchange, just opened, is the Parex Film Co., releasing William L. Sherry pictures. H. H. Wells has been appointed manager, and an office is now established on the second floor of the film building. The Parex have subleased part of the space of the Mutual Exchange, but will have separate quarters when alterations and partitions are completed. The first picture which they are releasing in this territory is "A Romance of the Underworld."

Among Theaters in Michigan.

C. H. Miles, of the Orpheum theater, Detroit, announces that for the summer months the Orpheum theater will again play pictures and vaudeville an entire week. For the past few months the Orpheum has been playing split weeks with the Regent theater, both houses being under a long lease to Miles.

While no definite date has been set, it is almost a certainty that the Majestic theater, Detroit, will close about the 15th of July, so that the interior can be redecorated and many alterations made to the stage.

Film Men in the Service.

Among those drafted for June 25th call are A. Goldner, traveling representative for Paramount-Artcraft, and Mat Lefkowitz, salesman for Pathe. A card has been received from Jack Erickson, formerly with Fox and Select, that he is now with the Heavy Tanks Company, at Gettysbury. Another card received was from Harry D. Goldberg, former manager of the Casino Feature Film Co., who is now in France.

A. F. Denman Now Heads the Franklyn.

A. F. Denman, formerly with the Orpheum theater, Jackson, has been appointed manager of the Franklin theater, Saginaw, succeeding A. J. Moeller, who resigned to do Y. M. C. A. work in Europe.

Hyman Will Operate Regent Theater.

Arthur S. Hyman of the Dawn Masterplay Co., Detroit, has closed a deal whereby he will operate the Regent theater for the summer months. The house is operated by C. H. Miles, who conducts it as a combination vaudeville and picture house during the regular season. He had intended to close it for the summer, but later leased it until the first of September to Mr. Hyman, who represents the Dawn Masterplay Co. Under the new summer policy, the Regent will change programs Mondays and Thursdays and will show pictures exclusively at 10 and 5-cent prices. The Regent is located at the corner of Woodward and the Grand Boulevard and seats nearly 3,000 people on the first and second floors.

Dawn Masterplay Gets More Film.

Again Arthur S. Hyman, of the Dawn Masterplay Co., announces having secured additional pictures for his exchange. This time he has purchased all of the Frank Hall pictures formerly sold through the Foursquare exchange, which include in this territory, "Just a Woman," "The Zeppelins' Last Raid," "The Belgium," "Those Who Pay," "The Crucible of Life" and "The Lost Chord." Also Mr. Hyman has secured "The Eleventh Commandment," a Ralph Ince production.

Louisville News Letter

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

Records With Gerard Film.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Manager Lee Goldberg, of the Big Features Rights Corporation, claims that almost a new record for attendances was made during a recent showing of the film, "My Four Years in Germany," at the little town of Pleasureville, Ky., which has a population of 200 people. A total of 294 paid admissions were received when the picture was shown in that city, as it attracted patrons from the countryside.

Will Rebuild Princess Theater.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—The Crescent Amusement Co., of Nashville, lately operating the recently burned Princess theater, lost very little time, as it also had the Rex theater, to which the shows have been transferred. L. H. Davis, owner of the Princess theater building, has announced that the house will be rebuilt on an even more elaborate scale, and at once. The Crescent Amusement Co. will operate the new house when it is completed.

Interesting Louisville Notes.

L. J. Dittmar, head of the Majestic Amusement Co., of Louisville, is at present spending almost all of his time in the East in connection with the development of his colored pictures project. Harry Lindenberger is active manager of the house.

An effort is being made by Louisville exhibitors to get Mme. Olga Petrova to come to Louisville in July during the War Stamp campaign.

Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" has made a big hit in Louisville wherever shown, doing an especially good business at the Ideal, West Broadway and other suburban houses.

Macauley's theater, Louisville, Ky., has closed its summer picture program, hot weather cutting the crowds down to the minimum at that house.

Transfer of the 84th or Lincoln Division from Louisville to Chillicothe, O., has resulted in the local camp being somewhat deserted for a time, but the new draft is rapidly filling up the camp again.

J. H. Christy, of the Scenic theater, Scottsburg, Ind., was recently in Louisville, and stated that he had taken over the active management also of the Dream, of Salem.

A. C. Farrel, manager of the Louisville Universal Office, has returned from Indianapolis, where he spent several days with the district Universal office in that city.

Trade Doings in Kansas City Filmdom

Among the Exchanges and Theaters in the Territory—Theater Opening in Tulsa—Personal and Business Jottings.

Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

What Exhibitors Are Doing.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Doric theater, the new downtown photoplay house, which recently opened, is arranging to show "My Own United States," a Metro screen classic production, during the week of July 4. A special stage setting, music, and appropriate decorations are being arranged for.

Sedalia, Mo.— W. J. Brill, manager of the Lona theater, Sedalia, Mo., recently ran "Lest We Forget" for the benefit of the Red Cross. This was the second booking of the film but notwithstanding this fact the receipts were very satisfactory.

Garden City, Mo.—E. H. McClintock, proprietor of the Alamo theater, Garden City, Mo., formerly of El Dorado Springs, Kansas, was in Kansas City this week. Mr. McClintock is formulating plans to enlarge his seating capacity about 125 and remodel and decorate the Alamo at the same time. Mr. McClintock stated that he believed that the problem of a strong summer season could be solved by providing attractions which satisfy the public demand. Just at this time, he finds the best drawing card in patriotic productions, having broken all house records with the "Freedom of the World" recently.

C O. Spessard Gets Metro Territory.

C. O. Spessard has recently joined the Kansas City office of the Metro Pictures Corporation as representative, taking charge of the Missouri territory outside of St. Louis. Mr. Spessard comes to Metro from a large mercantile establishment but has also had considerable experience in the distribution of motion pictures.

Heard at the Universal Office.

J. J. McCarty, formerly with the Omaha branch of the Universal Film & Supply Company, has taken over the Kansas territory for the Kansas City headquarters. Frank Gass, who was the former salesman in that section, now has charge of the special productions department.

E. A. "Red" Jones, the southern Kansas Universal representative, and his wife, are spending a few weeks in Excelsior Springs, Mo., on a vacation.

An elaborate advertising campaign is now under way in preparation for "The Yellow Dog" which is soon to be released from the Kansas City office of the Universal. This is an adaptation from the story by Henry Irving Dodge, author of "Skinner's Dress Suit" which ran in the Saturday Evening Post.

W. C. Ansell on Second Trip.

W. C. Ansell, northwestern Kansas representative for the Camp-Bell company, has just left on his second trip through his territory.

Pathe Promoter J. J. Miley.

John J. Miley, assistant shipping clerk for the Pathe exchange, has been appointed assistant booker.

Kansas City Men Go to Tulsa Opening.

The new Majestic theater, at Tulsa, Okla., will open June 27 and several of the film exchange men from Kansas City, will go down for the opening. Whitney Young, Fox Film Corp.; Richard Robertson, Goldwyn Pictures; C. C. Vaughan, Kleine Productions; and possibly others will make the trip.

Exhibitors Visitors in Cansas City.

The following exhibitors were in Kansas City this week:

R. B. Christian, of the Orpheus theater, Excelsior Springs, Mo.

Lee Gunnison, of the Royal theater, Atchinson, Kans.

W. F. Nelson, of the Elite theater, Great Bend, Kansas.

E. C. McClintock, of the Alamo theater, Garden City, Mo.

Two Kansas City Theaters Sold.

George Rose, proprietor of the Bancroft theater, at 43rd and Troost avenue, has sold out to Mr. Pomeroy.

D. Donnici, owner of the Palace and Broadmore theaters, has sold his interest in the Broadmore to Knox R. Lancaster, secretary and treasurer of the Columbia Optical Company. Mrs. Lancaster will have charge of the management of the theater.

Exchange Buys Fords for Salesmen.

The Kansas City office of the Universal bought Ford roadsters for its salesmen in this territory. One of the Universal travelers has been making his trips by motor for several years, and the results which he brought in convinced Milton Feld, manager, that it was by far the more efficient method of getting next to the exhibitor. Consequently five roadsters have been purchased for the salesmen. Each car will bear the Universal advertisement, and this is expected to bring in results. The upkeep will be sustained by the company and the expense equalized on account of the greater number of exhibitors which can be reached.

Dallas Trade Letter

By Douglas Hawley, Times Herald, Dallas, Texas

Hot Weather; Business Quiet.

DALLAS, TEX.—June temperatures and heavy attendance at moving picture shows don't go together, so the fellows who have come to Film Row during the last week are reporting rather slow business for the dog days. However, there has been no dearth of bookings on first-run, good stuff, according to the film house managers. Weather conditions have been fine for gathering in the sheaves and excellent progress has been made with wheat and oats. The sunshine, with a shower or so now and then, has been the very thing for the corn, too. Everything looks all right.

The first of the Screen Classics releases made an excellent impression at the Jefferson theater during the week, when "The Million Dollar Dollies" featuring the famous dancing sisters was offered along with the vaudeville bill.

William Eppstein Sells Out.

Wm. Eppstein, formerly of Lytle and Eppstein, San Antonio, in Dallas recently, told folks he had sold out his entire interest to Mr. Lytle and was on his way to New York. He didn't intimate whether that place would be his future residence.

Mr. Lytle was also in Dallas about the same time Mr. Eppstein went through. The former was doing about on Film Row for a day or so and apparently was in a good buying frame of mind, because Lou Remy of the Goldwyn branch, left town with him, going down to San Antonio.

General to Be "Regular" Exchange.

It's gonner be a "regular" exchange 'lows Manager James B. Kelly of the General. Manager James is gonner move—down on the main street right where all the other big fellers be, and he's gonner fix up a sure enough, honest to goodness "fillum" office. Which means Jimmy Kelly is to move the General's offices closer to the heart of things right away. Manager Jim has been one busy man during the last two weeks, getting things into shape, aided by Sol Davis, Oklahoma-Arkansas representative, who has been in for that purpose. Things have now assumed shape, Mr. Kelly says, and everything's going fine.

Completing the installation of "Father" James Kelly as branch manager, District Superintendent T. F. McTyer, of the General Film Company, left Dallas June 15 for New Orleans. He was accompanied by General Manager C. E. Tandy of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, who had been in Dallas with Branch Manager Harry Owens for a day or so.

About Interesting People.

"Bill" Ward used to own the Fort Worth franchise in the Texas baseball league—now he owns the Rex theater, Ft. Worth. He was a Film Row visitor last week, doing a bit of booking.

Joe Phillips, of the Odeon, Fort Worth, was also a caller, to the satisfaction of at least two branch house managers, who made good sales, it is reported.

M. L. Lavine, of Corsicana, in Dallas during the last week, reports good business with his roof garden plan for a summer show. Mr. Lavine's new house is equipped with that summer facility.

Indiana Trade Brevities

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.

Indianapolis Exchanges Move.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Representatives of the Mutual Film Corporation and the V. H. Hodupp, Inc., who operated film exchanges in the rooms above the Keystone theater in North Illinois street, have sent word to Jacob H. Hilkene, recently appointed director of the fire prevention bureau, that they will comply with the new fire prevention ordinance, which provides that a film exchange shall not be operated in a building in which there is a public assembly room.

The two companies have leased new quarters in a building at 111 West Maryland street and will be ready to move some time this week. G. B. Svenson speaking for the Mutual company, said that although the change would cause the company considerable inconvenience, he believed the new fire prevention ordinance would greatly reduce fire hazards and danger in connection with the handling of the films.

Noted Preacher Praises Films.

Motion pictures came in for a considerable amount of praise during an address given in Lafayette this week by the Rev. Moses Breeze, of Columbus, O., secretary of the Presbyterian Forward Movement in Ohio. The Rev. Mr. Breeze, who spoke on the subject, "The Church as a Community Center" was on the program at the rural church conference held at Purdue university.

"Every rural church should have a motion picture equipment, a gymnasium and a three-acre recreational ground for the children as a part of its equipment to adequately perform its function as a rural community center," he said. "One of the best mediums for teaching the children as well as the grownups is the motion picture films."

Theater at Hopkinsville Burns.

The Princess theater, at Hopkinsville, Ky., one of the most popular motion picture houses in this section of the state, was burned to the ground Monday afternoon, June 10, as a result of a fire which started in the operating booth in the rear of the building. The popular war picture, "My Four Years in Germany," was being presented when the fire broke out.

Morton Reese, the operator, was burned slightly about the arms in attempting to extinguish the flames. The fire spread so quickly that he had difficulty in making his way to safety. The audience filed out quickly and orderly when the alarm was sounded and no one was hurt.

The theater building was owned by L. H. Davis, of Hopkinsville, and was leased to the Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, Tenn. The theatre equipment was valued at approximately $7,000, the building at $10,000, partly covered by insurance.

Indiana Theater Notes.

The Index Motion Picture Company, Rockville, Ind., has purchased the business block of the late David B. Ott, at a private auction. The block, which is on the north side of the public square was bid in by the motion picture company at $6,000. The company will make several improvements in the building and will move its theater, which is now in the Harrison block, to that address.

The Princess at Kendallville, Ind., a motion picture theater, recently purchased by B. Deardorff, of Goshen, Ind., is being remodeled and redecorated. The contractors are hurrying the work along preparatory to a big opening about July 4, which Mr. Deardorff is planning.

O. G. Murray, owner of the Murray and Murrette theaters, Richmond, Ind., has leased both houses to the Merchants' and Bankers' Theater Company, of Chicago, and has announced that he will retire from the moving picture business.

Mr. Murray says he intends to devote his entire time to the Poster Advertising Company and an industrial engineering company in which he is interested. The Poster Advertising Company, of which he is the secretary, has billboards in thirty-five towns and cities in this section of the country.

Murray is one of the oldest and most experienced theatrical and motion picture men in eastern Indiana. Fifteen years ago he was the pioneer in introducing "small time" vaudeville in the state.

GERARD FILM STIRS CHILDREN.

Grand Rapids, Michigan, Theater Gives Special Show.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—Fourteen hundred children ranging in age from four years up, attended a special show of the Gerard "My Four Years in Germany," at the Majestic Gardens on Saturday morning.

Manager Sid Lawrence said it was the most enthusiastic audience of the week and he was astounded at the intelligence in matters of the war displayed by the children.

"They applauded the lines with as much discernment as any audience this week," he said, "and I consider this a fine tribute to the patriotism and teaching ability of the teachers in the Grand Rapids schools."

Gerard's replies and defiance of the German government and his insistence upon American rights inspired cheers and shouts of admiration and enthusiasm. There were no "yellow streaks" in the audience. The keen intelligence and information regarding world affairs as shown on the part of the children, whose ages averaged from 12 to 14, was amazing.

IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Temporary Directors Elected.

Members of the Associated Theaters, Inc., Minneapolis, held a meeting at the Hotel West Tuesday, June 11, at which time a temporary new board of directors was elected and a number of important details relative to the operation of the exchange threshed out. The new board of directors follows:

F. E. Bryan, president of the Bankers' National Bank of Minneapolis; O. N. Davies, of Kerr, Fowler, Schmitt & Furber, Minneapolis, attorneys; Oliver Rowe, manager of the Blue Mouse theater, St. Paul; Mike Mitchell, manager of the Grandview and Ione theaters, Minneapolis; J. M. Bergstrom, Jr., manager of the Nicollet theater, Minneapolis.

Secretary Hamlin's report showed that the corporation had 678 stockholders and that the organization despite its small film supply was operating on a paying basis and that it expected to expand its work within a short time when the financial condition of the body would permit of its securing territorial rights to big productions.

Bad Weather Conditions Hit the Northwest

Many Exhibitors in Minnesota and the Dakotas Consider the Advisability of Closing Till Late in August—Other Notes.

By J. L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—A month ago road men returning to the city following various visits to different cities and towns of the territory reported that conditions were splendid and that from all appearances crops being well started toward a bumper harvest and country exhibitors would enjoy a good summer business in almost all sections. However about two weeks ago a series of heavy rain storms struck the Northwest and the motion picture theater a hefty blow. Following the termination of the wet spell exhibitors expected to see a good business spell but directly following the rainy spell came one of extremely hot days and nights and it looks at the present time as if ten per cent of the country exhibitors will close their theaters until late in August.

The Strand at Huron, S. D., one of the leading Dakota theaters and the New Palace, Staples, Minn., were among the theaters that closed up tight for about a month, during the last few days. Throughout Minnesota and the Dakotas the number of theaters that are cutting down their show days per week is increasing speedily. Showings everywhere have suffered considerably during the past three weeks because of climatic conditions and road shows that are battling the weather on one side and the increased transportation costs on the other have found their profits meager indeed in this territory of late. In the cities the free band concerts in the parks and fishing parties have been more popular for the past three weeks.

"Pershing's Crusaders" in St. Paul.

St. Paul, Minn.—"Pershing's Crusaders," the official government motion picture, opened a week's engagement at the St. Paul Metropolitan Opera House, Sunday June 16, to a splendid business despite the heat. The film reveived some splendid co-operation from the various patriotic and commercial bodies of the city. It will be shown at the Minneapolis Metropolitan the week beginning June 23.

A. Fisher Takes the Chair at Metro.

A. Fisher, former manager of the Metro exchange at Montreal has been named successor to Louis H. Coen as manager of the Minneapolis Metro exchange. Mr. Fisher is scheduled to assume his new duties Monday June 24. S. A. Shirley traveling auditor for the Metro exchange is at present acting manager of the Metro office here and will remain in the city until the new executive is installed.

Olga Petrova Expected.

Mme. Olga Petrova, independent film star, will arrive in the Twin Cities within the next two weeks to boost the War Savings Stamp campaign. Mme. Petrova recently added the Twin Cities to her national tour due to the many requests made for her personal appearance in these cities by local War Stamp units through their officials and exhibitors.

What Exhibitors Are Doing.

Another woman exhibitor was added to the Northwest ranks last week when Mrs. A. Filby took over the management of the Crystal theater at Iroquois, S. D., when her husband was drafted into the National army.

Following R. C. Gibbs announcement that the Strand theater Huron, S. D., would close for the summer managers of the Lounge and the Idle Hour theaters of the same city have been considering following suit.

Joe Jensen has taken over the management of the Princess theater at Lake Preston, S. D. His son, the former manager, having been drafted into the National army.

J. S. Woodhouse, former publicity manaber for the Finkelstein & Ruben interests and more recently manager of the Calhoun and Lagoon theaters, Minneapolis, has taken over the management of the Southern theater here and will announce a new policy of pictures and special musical programs shortly.

Keough Has Succeeded at New Lyric.

James A. Keough whose smiling physiognomy is here shown is manager of the New Lyric theater, Minneapolis, one of the recent purchases of the Finkelstein & Ruben circuit. Few of Mr. Keough's predecessors at the New Lyric helm have found it a "smiling" job for, with all due respect to those who managed the theater previously, it did not prove a money maker to any great extent. In about eight months Mr. Keough has brought the Lyric back into the front rank where it appears it will remain.

Jas. A. Keough.

Mr. Keough managed the Minneapolis Strand for Saxe brothers for over a year and, also managed the Alcazar theater in Chicago for a time. Several years ago Mr. Keough was a drummer (not a traveling salesman) but finding managerial jobs to be had and not quite so monotonous as drumming, he "beat it" into the executive ranks aand has remained there since. Jimmy Keough is known to practically every exhibitor of the Northwest and is one of the most popular showmen in the territory.

Notes About the Exchangemen.

Louis Nathanson, a Minneapolis film salesman, has purchased the territorial rights to "Redemption" Evelyn Nesbit Thaw's feature which proved a splendid box office attraction at the Minneapolis Lyric and St. Paul New Princess theaters recently.

C. F. Regan of New York City has joined the local Vitagraph salesforce and will leave for a tour of Northern Minnesota within a few days.

Manager E. S. Flynn of the Fox exchange returned from the conference of Fox managers at New York last week and stated that he was glad to get back. Frank Thayer, manager of the Supreme exchange was on the same train that brought Mr. Flynn back from New York. Mr. Thayer expects to make an announcement regarding some new film acquisitions shortly.

Intense Heat on Coast Causes a Slump

Exhibitors in the Interior Tell of High Temperatures and a Decided Slackening of Business—Operators Are Scarce.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Exhibitors from interior points who have visited this city of late bring word of intense heat and a decided slump in attendance at moving picture theaters. In many places airdomes were formerly used during the summer months, but the use of these will be very limited this year on account of the daylight saving plan. A few have been opened, but darkness comes at such a late hour that these are not proving a success. Some idea of the intensity of the heat may be judged from the fact that on June 11 the temperature at Red Bluff reached 110 degrees, while Sacramento was but two degrees cooler. Fresno escaped with 104 degrees, while San Francisco was comfortable with 72 degrees. At Needles, in southern California, the mercury rose to 122 degrees, and the century mark was passed at many places. In the large cities elaborate ventilating and cooling plans serve to make theaters comfortable, but in smaller places there are no such conveniences and attendance suffers during such hot spells as the recent one.

While ideal weather has prevailed at San Francisco, business has shown a falling off and is well below normal. Even big war features, which were such drawing cards a few weeks ago, fail to appeal, and exhibitors are again looking for dramas, especially those with a touch of comedy. To add to the troubles of theater owners there is now a marked scarcity of help and girl ushers are being trained at many houses. There is a scarcity of operators, a number of these having sought employment at the shipbuilding plants, where high wages are being paid, with but few learning the trade.

Harry Oviatt Goes to Atlas.

Harry Oviatt, formerly manager of the local Pathe exchange, but more recently with the Select Pictures Corporation, has joined the forces of the Atlas Educational Film Corporation as special representative and will devote much of his attention to promoting the distribution of the Devry projector. Sol L. Lesser recently purchased one of these machines for home use, while Nat A. Manger has purchased one for the Liberty Film exchange.

Joe Cohen Returns to Honolulu.

Joe Cohen, head of the Consolidated Amusement Company, will sail for Honolulu in a few days, but plans to return to this city within a few weeks. He recently completed arrangements for handling "My Four Years in Germany" throughout the territory of Hawaii.

M. & R. Make Large Purchases.

The M. & R. Feature Film exchange has secured the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to "Eyes of the World" and all other Clune productions, and will also handle "Mother" in this territory. Its management is conferring with Jerome Abrams, of the Hoffman Foursquare, who is making a short stay here, and a deal may be completed whereby the releases of this concern will also be handled.

Bruce and Kohn Visit Yosemite.

Robert Bruce, of the Educational Film Corporation, and Marion H. Kohn, of the Consolidated Film Corporation, which handles the releases of this concern on the Pacific Coast, recently returned from a trip to the Yosemite, where some fine scenics were made. Mr. Kohn plans to leave on a visit to the Seattle branch shortly.

Exhibitors in Town.

Among the exhibitors who found it very necessary to come to San Francisco to attend to booking business when the hot spell broke recently were:

A. A. Richards, of the Tokay theater, Lodi.

I. D. Stanford, of the Lyric theater, Chico.

A. A. Berard, of the Modesto theater, Modesto.

I. M. Morris, of the Sequoia theater, Sacramento.

Charles Godard, of Godard's J St. theater, Sacramento.

John Di Stasio, of the Liberty theater, Sacramento.

Frank Atkins, of the Atkins opera house, Marysville.

J. D. French, of the Rex theater, Newman.

Charles Fraler, Tracy, and A. Pezzutti, Crockett.

Sensible Seating Rule.

No exhibitor likes to have his patrons disturbed during the closing climax of a highly dramatic production and many attempts have been made to induce people to come to moving picture theaters at specified times to avoid this. J. L. Partington, of the Imperial theater, recently announced, in connection with the advertising of "Old Wives for New," that on account of the dramatic intensity of the closing scenes no one would be seated during the last fifteen minutes of each presentation. The starting and closing times were published and intending patrons were asked to preserve the list for reference.

War Exposition Billed for July.

Through the efforts of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, which is to hold its annual convention in San Francisco in July, the United States Government has decided to present its War Exposition for a period of three weeks. This will be similar to the one recently held in Baltimore, but will be three times as large. Not only will tanks from the battlefields of Europe be on exhibition, but a captured German submarine and thousands of trophies from northern France will be shown. The entire exposition will be under the direction of Charles S. Hart, director of films of the committee on public information.

Pickwick Club on Film Row.

Discussions ranging from "My Four Years in Germany" to "To Hell with the Kaiser," form an interesting feature of the early morning sessions of the Pickwick Club, which meets each day in the offices of the Consolidated Film Corporation on Film Row. Such dignitaries as Louis Reichert, of the Metro; Nat A. Magner, of the Liberty Film exchange; Meyer J. Cohen, of the George Kleine System, and Reuben Cohen, gather to disseminate the latest film news, the club receiving its name for the portly bearings of its components. Having a superfluity of Pickwicks the club is now looking for the Sam Weller of the film exchange business. Why not pick on E. O. Child, of the Pathe exchange?

New Wurlitzer Representative Here.

George H. Leathurby, who recently retired as manager of the factory branch of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company maintained here in order to engage in the musical instrument business on his own account, has been succeeded by I. H. Lyons, formerly with the Wurlitzer Company in the Southwest.

General Books Color Film.

The General Film Company is handling the new color pictures made by Leon F. Douglass, and has booked the first of these for presentation at the Imperial theater at an early date.

San Francisco Briefs.

Considerable interest is being shown in the Outing-Chester pictures to be released through the Mutual, and a trade showing will be made shortly of the first offerings.

Sig Cahen, formerly of the poster department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., is now a booker.

Howard Sheehan, of Sheehan & Lurie, is back from a trip to Eureka to inspect the new theater to be opened the first of July.

Vernon R. Moore, for several years with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. as publicity man and salesman, has resigned to enter the U. S. Merchant Marine and will sail shortly on the training ship Iris.

Edward H. Kemp, recently shipped a Motiograph projection machine to Shaffer Bros., who will use it in the Yosemite Valley during the vacation season.

"Intolerance" was recently brought back to the Cort theater for a week's run at 25, 35 and 50 cents.

A shooting affair occurred recently at the Lyceum theater on Kearny street, Gertrude Smith, the piano player, being shot twice by Harry Forman, an admirer. She will recover.

Notes From Northern California.

Gridley, Cal.—Fink's theater is being enlarged and a balcony added. This house is conducted under the personal direction of Fred Fink, Jr., who recently graduated from high school. He is one of the youngest theater managers in the state.

Santa Cruz, Cal.—O. K. Westcott, of the Grand theater, has been very ill, but is now on the road to recovery.

Alameda, Cal.—The Hamblen theater, recently purchased by Sheehan & Lurie, is now known as the Rialto theater.

Oakland, Cal.—The Broadway Hippodrome Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $80,000 by Jacob S. Meyer, E. E. Smith, H. Zanetin and T. Zanetin.

Blank Enterprises Will Locate in Omaha

Des Moines Will Have Small Branch—E. C. Holah Becomes Manager and a Branch Will Be Opened in Kansas City.

By J. L. Shipley, 618 Locust Street, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—The big event in local film circles the past week was the announcement of the transfer of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, distributors of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit attractions and other state rights features, from Des Moines to Omaha. C. E. Holah, formerly manager for Pathe in Omaha, and recently with the United Theaters Corporation, becomes branch manager of the Omaha office. A small branch office will be continued in Des Moines, according to present plans, for the distribution of film in eastern and southeastern Iowa.

It is also announced that a Kansas City office for distribution in Kansas and in Missouri for the Blank films controlled for these states will be opened shortly. Sam. S. Schwarz will act as general auditor for the three offices and will look after the Des Moines branch. The growing business of the Blank film interests necessitated such a move, and it is believed that with the superior railroad facilities out of Omaha a much greater number of accounts can be successfully served.

In assuming the management of the Omaha office Mr. Holah brings a wealth of ripe experience in film circles. He has a splendid record as salesman and executive and is a most successful publicity man as well. Mr. Holah is very popular with Nebraska and Iowa exhibitors and is a most happy choice for the new position.

Mr. Schwarz has been with the Blank interests since their inception two years ago and continues in a responsible position in which he has made good, and is more than equal to the added duties the new arrangement will bring. Mr. Holah will announce his sales force within a few days and General Manager Blank will be able to announce his plans for the Kansas City office within two weeks.

Iowa Personal Notes.

Sam S. Schwarz is enjoying home life again. Mrs. Schwarz and the three children have come on from Denver, where they have been making their home for the past several years.

Manager Frankle, of the Rialto, announces that he has contracted for the Fox Standard pictures as well as the Fox specials and the Sunshine comedies.

Harry Watts, of the Palace, did big business during the hottest week of the summer with "Carmen of the Klondike." A cleverly arranged billboard campaign, backed up with good salesmanship in newspaper publicity, brought capacity business during the four days of the run.

W. L. Myers, formerly manager of the Palace theater of Waterloo for several years, during which he established himself as one of Iowa's foremost exhibitors, has assumed the managerial reins at the Casino, Marshalltown, which J. E. Hostetler of Waterloo recently purchased. Mr. Myers has already started his usual live-wire methods of publicity and has put the Casino back on the map with a vengeance. Select, Paralta, Fox Standard, and other high-class state rights features, make up the programs.

J. Jolly Jones, manager of Blank's Strand at Marshalltown, was a Des Moines visitor during the past week, having driven up in his new car. Mr. Jones reports business good despite the hot weather.

Wm. Fraser, former manager of the Fraser theater, at Spencer, Ia., and who has been conducting two theaters at Mitchell, S. D., during the past year, is about to dispose of his Dakota holdings and once more become an Iowa exhibitor. He has two locations under consideration and will close for one or both of them within the month, he states.

The drawing power of "Tarzan of the Apes," the First National attraction, was closely demonstrated during its second run at the Royal theater at Des Moines,

DAVENPORT FILM JOTTINGS.

By Joe Esler, Traveling Representative of Moving Picture World.

Quality Film Company Formed.

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—A new film company has been formed at Davenport, Ia., under the name of the Quality Film Co. and C. P. Holmes and Ira L. Swanson are the managers of the new concern. They will specialize on animated advertising along commercial lines and have opened an office and studio at 208 Iowa st. in Davenport.

Many Theater Men Go to Camp.

Among the men called to the colors from Davenport theaters during the past week are:

Robert Hinchman—Empire Hippodrome, to Camp Gordon, Georgia.

Frank Anarino—Savoy theater, to Camp Gordon, Georgia.

George Augustine—Savoy theater, to Camp Gordon, Georgia.

Chester Wyckoff—Princess, Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Mo.

Don O'Neill—Quincy theater, Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Mo.

Joe O'Neill—Quartermaster Department, Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Mo.

Harris O'Farrell, the well known composer of "Everybody loves a Soldier Boy" and trombone player in the O'Farrell's dance orchestra, also Sidney Hausman, a member of the Hill Jazz Orchestra have enlisted in the navy and are stationed at the Great Lakes Station. They expect to join the Great Lakes band.

Trade News Brevities from Portland, Ore.

Film Man Says Picture Prospects Are Better in Northwest Than in California—Changes Among the Distributing Offices.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The future outlook for the picture industry in the Pacific Northwest is much better than in California, says C. M. Hill and Harry Hunter, manager and assistant manager, respectively, of the Portland Paramount-Artcraft exchange, after a trip South for the recent managers' convention. Business in Portland looked a lot better than in San Francisco, said Mr. Hill, and with Portland as a seat of the big shipbuilding industry the future for the theater man here looks most encouraging.

B. J. Sperry Again With Pathe.

B. J. Sperry, traveling representative for Paramount-Artcraft, Portland, has resigned that position with that company for the purpose, it is understood, of entering the employ of Pathe. Mr. Sperry was in Seattle at the time of this writing making final arrangements with Fred Quimby, head of the Gold Rooster exchanges, and the news has been going the rounds that he will be Portland representative, with an office here.

With Northwest Exhibitors.

Houlton, Ore.—O. J. Carlson has rented the Holton theater pending the completion of his own new show house in Columbia City. This will be ready for occupancy in a few weeks.

Battleground, Wash.—S. La Rouge recently showed "The Kaiser" to 750 people in one night. This town shows a census of 200. Business was such that Mr. La Rouge sent the Universal publicity department a box of cigars.

La Grande, Ore.—Don Meyers, of Meyers and Leiter, Arcade and Star theaters, has been called in the draft of June 24.

Riddle, Ore.—E. D. Stuller has sold his theaters at Riddle and Myrtle Creek.

Exhibitors' Club Moves.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon has moved its club room to the Commonwealth at Sixth and Ankeny street, Portland, and has installed its palatial furniture. The new location is near film row.

Business Jottings.

Jesse G. Sill, cameraman, recently completed a long tour through Oregon, Washington and Idaho with Robert Bruce and photographed 6,000 feet of scenery for the Educational Films Corporation.

The Liberty theater organ was heard by the Portland public for the first time Sunday, June 9, with Henry B. Murtagh in charge. The organ is one of the Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra type and was advertised as the largest instrument of its kind in any theater. In connection with the organ, the Liberty showed "The Unbeliever," cooperating with the U. S. Marines and Manager E. J. Myrick used several stunts in bringing the production to public notice.

"Cleopatra" Returns.

The management of the Majestic theater, Portland, deviated a little from the usual run of things by bringing back a picture for second showing. The picture was "Cleopatra" and it was shown for the week of June 8, five months after its first appearance, enjoying good business in spite of the hot weather.

Spokane News Letter

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 11th Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

F. E. Montgomery Out of Titan.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Frank E. Montgomery has tendered his resignation as general manager of the Titan Feature Photo Play company and gave his reasons for his resignation in a lengthy letter to President J. Don Alexander of the company, according to his announcement.

Mr. Montgomery announced that he was resigning because he was dissatisfied with methods employed by the board of directors in transacting business. He objected to the financing of the Allied Film corporation to the extent of $3,000 by the Titan company and did not approve of the contract with C. L. Mayo, former underwriter for the company.

"This is to advise you," states Mr. Montgomery in his letter of resignation, "that from this moment on you are not to use my name or that of Princess Mona Darkfeather on any literature or advertising of any description, or verbally in the promotion of this corporation." He also asks the corporation not to use the name of Chester Beecroft as London representative, or Ernest Shipman as New York representative of the company.

J. Don Alexander of the Alexander Electric company and president of the Titan company gave out the following interview in regard to the withdrawal as general manager of the company of Frank E. Montgomery.

"We wish to deny absolutely the statement of Frank E. Montgomery regarding his resignation from the general managership of the Titan Feature Photo Play company. Mr. Montgomery did not resign. The day previous to the writing of his resignation he had been discharged by the board of directors for good and sufficient reasons. His criticism of our contract with the Allied Film corporation is entirely unfounded, as the contract was in effect when he came into the Titan company. Our investment with the Allied company is an advantageous one for us. His objection to our former underwriting contract with Mr. Mayo is groundless, since it has been discontinued in favor of a more advantageous contract, and since he knew of its terms when he accepted the general managership. We are in correspondence with a general manager of national reputation, who has organized several successful film companies."

Capacity Houses for "The Unbeliever."

Not since "The Birth of a Nation" was first shown in Spokane at the Clemmer theater has a more elaborate incidental program been arranged for a picture presentation than Manager J. W. Allender of the Lyric theater is offering at the Auditorium for eight days, in "The Unbeliever." W. J. Drummond, Seattle manager of the K-E-S-E service, which is handling the production has arrived and will handle the program here.

Lieutenant A. G. Gray of the state guard spoke for the four-minute men daily.

Mr. Drummond reports that "The Unbeliever" has shattered all records on the coast and in California theaters, where hundreds were turned away from every performance.

There have been capacity houses at practically every performance to date in Spokane.

Pictures That Pleased in Spokane.

At the Liberty, Spokane, in "Selfish Yates," W. S. Hart is said to do his best dramatic work. Liberty patrons were well pleased in this new Hart role, and capacity houses witnessed each performance.

"Between Men," was the new Hart offering at the Lyric, Spokane, and a new chapter of "The House of Hate."

Tom Mix was featured at the Casino, Spokane, in "Ace High," a thrilling story of adventures in the Canadian northwest, and drew large audiences.

Form Washington Exchange Association

Recent Shift of Branch Managers Disorganized Old Body—New Officers Now Chosen and Active Work Begun.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Big things are scheduled for the newly formed Exchange Managers' Association of Washington. This organization succeeds the one formerly existing there, but which died out when the recent big shift of managers occurred. The new corps of officers consists of Sidney B. Lust, president; R. B. Smeltzer, World Film Corporation, vice-president; Oscar A. Morgan, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, secretary, and Sam M. Slax, Metro Film Service Company, treasurer. The board of directors consists of S. E. Kent, Triangle Distributing Company; Abe Dresner, Exhibitors' Film Exchange, and Herbert M. Osborn, Pathe, Inc.

A number of matters of direct interest to exhibitors and exchange managers alike were discussed. The biggest project of all, however, is the proposal to send out on the road a competent motion picture operator to instruct newly made operators in their work. There has been a great deal of complaint from the exchanges of the manner in which films have been handled of late. The trouble has been with new operators put on the machines to replace the more experienced operators who had been called in the draft. These inexperienced men have been doing a great deal of damage.

The idea is to conduct an educational campaign all through the territory. Not only will the operators be told of better ways to handle the films, but exhibitors and others will be told how best to ship films so that they will make towns on the circuit or get back to Washington with a minimum of delay. The express agents also will be visited and the traveling man will impress upon them the need for following shipping instructions to the letter and without delay.

Where it is found that a machine is responsible for stripping films or otherwise damaging them the exhibitor is to be told of the trouble and asked to remedy it. There is little doubt but that they will be glad to do so, but failure to follow out the request may lead to a cancellation of his contracts. The expense of sending out a man in this way is to be prorated among the various exchanges in Washington.

The exhibitors of the territory are to be asked to co-operate with this new organization in many ways and to that end Harry M. Crandall and A. Brylawski are to be asked to serve on a grievance committee of which H. E. Elder, of the General Film Company, and H. C. Wales, of the Universal Film Company, will represent the exchanges.

There was quite a discussion of the plan to present to former members of the motion picture film industry now in the service of Uncle Sam with trade publications, tobacco and other little luxuries. It was decided that the organization should go further and see to it that wherever possible employment be found for dependents of the film-men soldiers when requested, and such other relief as consistent with the aims and views of the organization.

The membership of the organization is as follows. Sidney B. Lust, Super Films Attractions; Herbert M. Osborn, Pathe; H. C. Wales, Universal; Sidney E. Kent, Triangle; Abe Dresner, Exhibitors' Film; Herbert E. Elder, General Film; Oscar A. Morgan, Famous Players; S. M. Flax, Metro; R. B. Smeltzer, World Pictures; Mr. Wilson, V-L-S-E; Vivian P. Whitaker, Select; J. M. Cummings, Mutual Film, and George F. Lenahan, Goldwyn. Clarence L. Linz, Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World, was elected an honorary member of the association and placed in charge of its publicity.

Need Full Address on Letters.

The failure of out-of-town exhibitors to place upon letters the full street address of the exchanges in Washington, D. C., for which such letters are intended, is likely to result in confusion, delays and disappointment. Letters not having the street and number of the addressee are being subject to all sorts of delays here due to the heavy increase of poorly addressed mail.

There are about thirty or forty men in the local postoffice who do nothing but look up addresses for such letters. There are many thousands of newcomers in the city and this number is added to daily with the arrival of many transients. The postoffice section to which such letters are referred is literally swamped and delays must necessarily occur.

A number of exhibitors have been advised when sending orders for the booking of pictures to be shown in their houses to use care in addressing the envelope in which the orders are sent. They are told not to take anything for granted. The exchange may be the best known in the city, yet the letter may come into the hands of an inexperienced postal employee (or someone who does not use common sense), and it may kick around the postoffice for many days before a searcher gets the proper address. No matter where the letter is going, put on the full name of the person or firm to whom addressed, the street and number of his or its location, and the city and state.

Newark News Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

Kridel Gains Control of Loew's.

M. M. KRIDEL, manager of the Goodwin theater, 863 Broad street, Newark, N. J., has gained control of Loew's theater, 99 Springfield avenue, and announces that the showhouse will be opened August 1. Mr. Kridel informed the representative of the Moving Picture World that the theater will be owned by a company under the corporate title of J. & K. Enterprises, Inc. The J. in the name is none other than Herman F. Jans, president of the New Jersey Metro exchange.

The playhouse has heretofore been under the control of Marcus Loew, who used it as a combination vaudeville and moving picture theater. The Springfield avenue house was Loew's only Newark interest, but he intends re-establishing himself in this city. In a communication to the theatrical editor of the Morning Ledger, Mr. Loew intimates that he is negotiating for the control of a large downtown house.

The showhouse, over which Mr. Kridel will preside, is of rather recent construction, and furnished with all conveniences. The seating capacity is 1,846. Mr. Kridel said that he had not as yet decided on a name for his theater, although rumor and newspaper talk report that it would be called the Globe. Frank Jeffrys, of Crestwood Park, N. Y., will be the resident manager.

Lyric, Newark, Closed.

The Lyric theater, 211 Market street, Newark, has been closed for the summer season, and will reopen early in August. Dr. R. C. Tunison is the owner and manager of the showhouse.

Criterion, Camden, Incorporates.

With an authorized capitalization of $100,000, the Criterion Company has filed articles of incorporation. Kaighn & Wolverton, of Third and Market streets, Camden, are listed as statutory agents. The concern will conduct amusement places. The incorporators include William E. Darnell, Howard Knight and Harry E. Richman.

R. S. Clark With Pathe.

R. S. Clark, formerly with the General Film, and other concerns, has joined the sales staff of the Newark office of Pathe, 6-8 Mechanic street. "Bobby" will cover the local and suburban trade, thus relieving Manager Reinlieb of some arduous work. The local Pathe office, under Mr. Reinlieb, is doing exceedingly good business.

Fire in Booth Does Damage.

A fire, caused by a piece of hot carbon dropping in a box of eight reels of film, caused damage to the extent of $450 to the films. The fire occurred June 15 at the Park Block theater, Newton, N. J. In addition to the monetary loss, a near panic was caused, but serious trouble was averted.

G. S. Bellat at Grand-Casino.

George S. Bellat is the resident manager of the Grand and Casino theaters, located at 23 Kearny avenue, and 95 Kearny avenue, Kearny. The theater is now operated by the B. & S. Amusement Company, of which Leon O. Mumford is the general manager.

Band Box Theater Opens.

The Band Box theate is the trade name given to the motion picture theater located at 990 South Orange avenue, by the owners, William T., Margaret M., and Lillie E. Webbe.

L. C. Mumford Made General Manager.

Joseph Stern, by his recent acquisition of two Kearny motion picture theaters, has become one of Newark's largest film exhibitors. Leon O. Mumford has been appointed general manager of the Joseph Stern Theater Enterprises, which operate in addition to the Grand and Casino theaters, in Kearny; the National theater, Belmont and Eighteenth avenues, and the City theater, Seventh and Orange streets, both in Newark. Mr. Mumford's executive offices are in the City theater building.

Morris Lefkowitz Enlists.

Morris Lefkowitz, formerly operator at the Playhouse theater, Clinton avenue, Newark, has enlisted in the navy. Mr. Lefkowitz is one of the local union's live wires, and he leaves with the best wishes of the film fraternity. Lefkowitz expects to be called within ten days.

Mack "Putting It Over."

A. Johnny Mack, managing director of the Hill theater, Springfield and South Orange avenues, is certainly making them sit up and take notice with his clever publicity stunts. He has just started a little house organ called the News, and Mack's one aim is to impress the name "Hill" on the minds of the Hill residents. He writes in the latest issue "you can buy Thrift Stamps with the money you save by coming to the Hill often." Good. Eh!

MORE BOSTON ITEMS.

Personal and Trade Notes.

Holyoke, Mass.—G. H. Berry, of the Bijou theater in this city, and P. J. Du Fault, manager of the Globe in this city, are planning a week's trip together, from July 13 to 20, to the National Motion Picture Exposition, at Mechanic's Hall, Boston.

"Moral Suicide" is going over big in New England, according to Manager Hand of Pathe, who is handling the production in New England. There is one special representative of the film in New England who handles the publicity and the booking, working from the state of Maine down. The representative is James A. Stiles, formerly in the motion picture business in New York and California. In New York he handled special productions, such as "Trooper 44" and other state rights pictures. This is his first venture into New England territory, but he reports very good business and is very pleased with the men he has met.

"THE GIRL IN HIS HOUSE."

Earle Williams Appears in Vitagraph Photoplay from Machine Made Romance.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SLOW action all through the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Girl in His House," serves to accentuate the machine made quality of the plot. Harold MacGrath, author of the novel, is too skilled a workman not to put a lot of interesting material in his story, and the love interest will satisfy the spectator who has a taste for romance. The action of the heroine's father in refusing ever to look upon her because her mother died when she came into the world and then of robbing his employer of half his fortune so that the girl may live in luxury is rather too far fetched. The scene where the hero comes to get his mother's jewels which are kept in the attic of his old home and is held up at the point of a revolver by this same young girl who is living in the house and who has suspicion that the masked man is the engaging young fellow who has won her heart is also somewhat strained. Love's eyes are supposed to be keen, and the marked mannerism of Earle Williams, who plays the part of the hero, would betray him at once.

James Armitage, having been jilted by Clare Wendell in favor of an aged millionaire, turns over his estate to his lawyer and goes to Asia. Six years later he learns that Clare's husband has died and the young man hastens home. Once there, he makes several discoveries; first, the strange young girl is living in his house; second, that his lawyer has used the power of attorney to rob him and sell his house, and third, that he no longer loves the rich widow. He also learns that his lawyer is the father of the strange young girl and that he (Armitage) is greatly smitten with her. The solution of things is very simple after that. The picture ends with a bridal couple driving up to their new home, which is the old home of Armitage and the strange young girl.

Good judgment on the part of the director, Thomas Mills, surrounds the picture with a well bred air and the acting of the cast is satisfactory. Earle Williams has never done anything better than his performance of James Armitage, and Grace Darmond is sufficiently attractive as Doris. James Abrahams, Harry Linsdale, Irene Rich and Margaret Allen act the remaining characters. Released June 24.

"SAY! YOUNG FELLOW"

Douglas Fairbanks Rattles Through His Latest Artcraft Picture at High Speed.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

JOSEPH HENABERRY, who wrote and directed "Say! Young Fellow," the latest Douglas Fairbanks Artcraft picture, did not put very much speed into his story, but the star's energetic method keeps it moving rapidly. One of the best features of the plot is the "hunch" that appears to the hero at the decisive moments in his career and, starting off with the words of the title, gives him sound advice. Excellent acting by the entire cast and skilled work by the director succeed in making an ordinary story vastly interesting. The melodramatic finish is valuable only for the chance it gives Douglas to show his surprising ability to perform stunts and risk his neck without dropping any portion of his engaging smile. The love interest and the touches of real sentiment are convincing, and there are many laughs in the five reels.

Douglas Fairbanks, in the role of a cub reporter for the New York Herald, gives an exhibition of nerve and muscular development that the ordinary news gatherer could never possibly match. The regular man on the paper having failed, the cub offers to get an interview with a wealthy business man of the cutthroat type. He succeeds by climbing into the financier's house through the second story window and leaping on to him while the man of money is in bed. His next assignment takes him to a small country town, and when he leaves the place he has straightened out the business affairs and the love romance of a sweet old maid and a fine old manufacturer of the place, fought a gang of imported strong-arm men, defeated the cutthroat financier in an attempt to steal the business belonging to the old maid and her sweetheart, and secured the prettiest girl in town for himself.

The acting of the star is as spirited and full of ginger as ever, and every Fairbanks fan knows what that means. Marjorie Daw, Frank Campeau, Edythe Chapman and James Neill are the representatives of the sweetheart, the villain, the old maid and the man she finally marries.

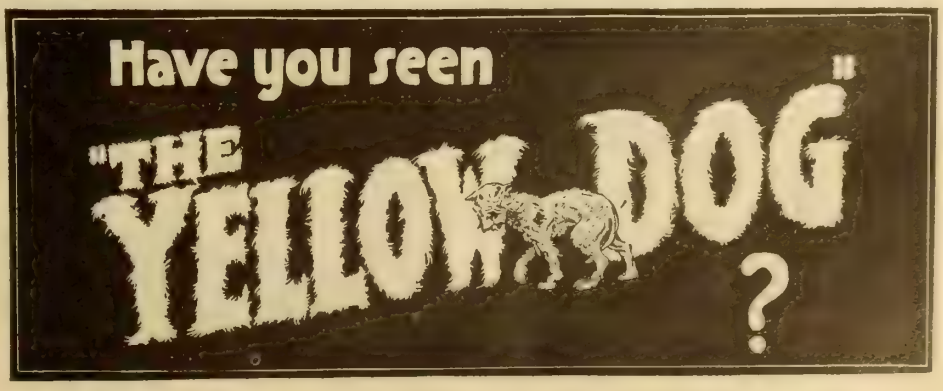
"THE VENUS MODEL"



Mabel Normand Is Excellent in Goldwyn Photoplay That Has Many Pleasing Moments.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN HER latest Goldwyn picture, "The Venus Model," Mabel Normand makes it clear that a simple story about an everyday sort of girl can be very interesting when carefully acted and produced. For one thing, the story never gets out of its class. It starts in to tell of a bright little working girl who has brains enough to help herself up in the world and the picture never departs from its theme. None of the situations are impossible, and there is a pleasant, healthful air about "The Venus Model" that will win for it many friends.

As Kitty O'Brien, the young factory hand who designs a new model for a bathing suit and saves her employer from going to the wall, Mabel Normand gives a clean-cut performance that is without a touch of extravagance. Kitty is employed by John Braddock, a maker of bathing suits who is on the brink of failure on account of not keeping up to date with his goods. The girl has a natural bent for designing and draws the model of a swimming costume that even her employer can see is smart and snappy. A pattern suit is made and Kitty offers to put it on and exhibit it in a store window. Two rival buyers catch a glimpse of the new model and rush to the factory to be the first to place an order. Braddock is so overcome by the success of the garment that he has an attack of heart failure and is ordered away by his physician.

The new designer takes hold of the business with the help of the foreman and runs it with great success. Paul Braddock, her employer's son, has been expelled from college. When he comes to the factory to meet his father and finds Kitty in charge he takes a position, under an assumed name, and is set to sweeping out until the new boss promotes him to office boy. A handsome buyer who takes Kitty out to supper and a business-like young woman who has a number of compromising letters from Paul get in the boy's way when he discovers that he is in love with Kitty. That quick-witted young person learns the real name of her office boy and he is installed at his father's desk when the elder Braddock returns. Kitty also disposes of the too-businesslike young woman and is made the life partner of Paul.

Rodrique La Rocque as Paul, Alec B. Francis as John Braddock, Alfred Hickman as the buyer, Edward Elkas as Briggs, Una Trevelyn as Hattie Fenshawe, and Nadia Gary as Dimples are the prominent members of the support.

"HELL BENT."

Universal Presents Harry Carey in Offering of Strong Entertainment Value.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

HARRY CAREY and Jack Ford again prove themselves a good producing team in their Western concoction, "Hell Bent," made at the Universal studio. The entire six reels are full of interest, despite a certain familiarity of plot material. They have learned the value of striking, picturesque locations and incidental humorous effects, which they make the most of in this pleasing release.

This presents another episode in the life of "Cheyenne" Harry, one of the best yet shown. He appears suddenly in the town of Rawhide, where he invades the dance hall, procures a room upstairs by thrusting a man out of it at the point of a gun, and proceeds to identify himself with the life of the community. The town at the time is in a state of excitement over the robberies committed by the Beau Ross gang of desperados.

Cheyenne Harry makes friends with a girl who has entered the dance hall unwillingly, in the role of an entertainer. He saves her from rough treatment. Later it develops that her brother is a member of the Beau Ross gang and Harry saves him from disgrace.

There are any number of good riding scenes in this and certain big Western effects which are unusual. The situations on the desert in the final reel, during the sand storm, are also strong.

The cast includes Neva Gerber as the girl, Vester Pegg as the weak brother, and Duke Lee and Joseph Harris in other roles.

"THE EAGLE."

Monroe Salisbury Plays Leading Role in Bluebird Offering of Thrilling Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Bluebird subject, adapted by H. C. Warnack and E. B. Lewis from a story by Ethel Hill and produced by Elmer Clifton, gives Monroe Salisbury the interesting role of a man of mystery. He appears among the residents of a certain Western town as John Gregory, but the same time is identified early in the story as a badly wanted outlaw, known as "The Eagle."

The depredations of "The Eagle" are all directed against a wealthy mine owner named Stroth, whom he has repeatedly and successfully robbed of bullion shipments. It appears later in the story that John Gregory has a private grudge against this individual, who had formerly thrown his mother and himself out of house and home. Gregory is not seeking for personal gain, as he makes no use of the stolen gold, but is looking solely for revenge.

The development of this story has been most satisfactorily looked after, considering the fact that the plot material is not new. Same splendid dramatic effects have been obtained, particularly in the court scenes, owing largely to the proper handling of suspense and to the fine acting of Mr. Salisbury. He has the faculty of getting the most out of the various situations and of always keeping within the character he is playing. In this instance he is well assisted by Edna Earle, who plays the role of Lucy. Miss Earle, after playing very quietly during the opening reels, fairly rouses the observer with her breakneck ride in the final scenes. She brings new thrills to the familiar "averted hanging" situation.

"HER BODY IN BOND"

Universal Feature Presents Mae Murray in Story of Emotional Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT would be hard to devise a more despicable form of villainy than is employed by Harlan E. Quinn, the predatory male in this number. Having set his heart upon the wife of a vaudeville performer, he gains access to the wife's letters from her husband and alters them in order to cool her love. The husband, Joe Blondin, has been sent West for his health and Quinn forges various requests for money in the letters to the wife. He in the meantime stands ready to give her the money on request, at the price of her honor.

This is the main situation in this five-reel story of emotional quality, one of the strongest in which Mae Murray has found expression for her particular style of acting. That the husband returns from the West, restored to health, in time to give the villain the punishment he deserves, makes an effective close to the narrative.

The subject, which was written by H. Sheridan Bickers and produced by Robert Leonard, begins with a pleasing little prologue, introducing the leading characters as Pierrot, Pierrette and Harlequin. Then comes the modern tale in which the principals play the roles of Joe and Peggy Blondin and Quinn. Mae Murray appears as the wife, a part which finds her facing trouble until the very end, when Joe is restored to her. Kenneth Harlan plays the husband and Al Roscoe appears as Quinn. Minor roles are assumed by Paul Weigel, Mabelle Harvey and Joseph Girard.

"YOU CAN'T BELIEVE EVERYTHING"

Gloria Swanson an Athletic Heroine in Triangle Picture That Raps Society.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SOCIETY gets a succession of vigorous raps in "You Can't Believe Everything," a five-part Triangle picture written by Norman Sherbrook and directed by Jack Conway. All the characters in the story are guests at a summer hotel, and a finer collection of "rotters" was never gathered under one roof. Most of them spend their time in tearing some one's reputation to pieces, and the male beings are worse than the women. The photoplay hardly presents a typical condition among well-bred people, but there is no denying that the average spectator will follow the plot with close attention.

The heroine is a decidedly unconventional young woman and, either from pure innocence or an utter disregard for consequences, gives the gossips on the porch plenty of opportunities to engage in their favorite sport. She goes swimming with young gentlemen in the most daring of bathing suits and is delightfully indiscreet in almost everything she does. Her name is Patria Reynolds, and Gloria Swanson, who plays the part, makes her likable and lovable in spite of it all and is a fetching figure, whether in bathing costume of eye-arresting design or clad only in those intimate garments which are popularly supposed to be always hidden from the gaze of man.

Patria's excuse for appearing in this startling undress is the best in the world. The man she loves is drowning and she waits only long enough to throw off her evening gown before plunging in and dragging her lover ashore. An enemy of hers succeeds in compromising her name, while the daughter of one of the gossips is the real culprit. A wedding ring on Patria's finger puts a stop to all the talk and a bridal tour takes her away from the hotel. A novel situation is a "Neptune" party, with all the guests in bathing suits.

"You Can't Believe Everything" is well produced and acted. It was photographed by Elgin Leslie. Darrell Foss, Jack Richardson, Edward Peil, George Hernandez, Iris Ashton and Claire McDowell are the prominent members of the support.

"CLOSIN' IN"

William Desmond Heads Cast in Triangle Melodrama of Regulation Western Type.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE model for "Closin' In," a five-part Triangle melodrama, has been used many times by writers for the screen. Joseph F. Poland is the author of the story and George E. Jenks fashioned the scenario. Directed by J. W. McLaughlin and photographed by Steve Morton, the picture has been given the benefit of a good cast headed by William Desmond, and the general result is an entertaining photo play. Starting in a small town in the United States, the action shifts to a mining camp in British Columbia and all the rough-and-ready life of the untamed Northwest, with its half-breeds, Indians and hard-fisted whites, is introduced. A fast and desperate fight is one of the thrills.

Jack Brandon, the hero, is told by his physician that he has an athletic heart and may die at any moment. Jack is in love with his employer's daughter, and when he discovers that her father has robbed the bank of which he is president the young chap offers to take the crime on himself, since he has only a few months to live and has determined to go away and die in secret. Jack's offer is accepted and his sweetheart is led to believe that he is a thief. Once in British Columbia his health is so much better that he joins the Northwest Royal Mounted Police, after being assured by the company surgeon that his heart is now as sound as a nut.

Banker Carlton having lost all his money through bad speculation, his son and daughter go to British Columbia when they read of a big gold strike at Jack's camp. Burt, the Carlton boy, hates Jack for his supposed crime and will not speak to him when they meet. Barbara Carlton attracts the attention of a half-breed Frenchman who owns a rich mine, and consents to marry him for the sake of her parents. La Roche, the mine owner, is already married to an Indian woman, and Jack, who still loves Barbara, saves her from being deceived. Clear skies appear when Barbara learns that Jack is innocent of crime, and a honeymoon for the pair is easily forecast.

William Desmond is capital as Jack. There has been a marked improvement in this actor's work of late. He acts with greater restraint and is more convincing in every way. Maud Wayne as Barbara, Darrell Foss as Burt, Louis Durham as La Roche, and Bob Thompson as Sergeant Barry, are the other important members of the cast.

"THE SCARLET ROAD"

Gladys Brockwell Picture Has Sordid Beginning, but Gets a Good Measure of Life.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE Brockwell picture, "The Scarlet Road," has a brand new story which, though it begins with a background termed "Bohemian," too sordid to be deeply interesting, gets a touch of a real and convincing Bohemia toward the middle of the story that is wholly delightful, because it seems true.

Miss Brockwell is a real actress, and even with the rather heavy burden she is forced to carry by the unpleasant trend of the early action almost accomplished the impossible through personality and art in the way of getting a sense of actual humanity into the doings we see pictured. She is well supported by Charles Clary (in the heavy part) and some of the lesser characters; but is particularly fortunate in having Betty Shade as "Tiny," for that very attractive and thoroughly human chorus girl character gives real life to the story in time to save it for the leading woman just before her big scene comes, when she finds that she has been duped and betrayed all around. The story without Tiny would be a pretty poor offering; with Tiny and Miss Brockwell's acting it is on a different plane wholly and has not only tragic human interest that cuts life to the quick, but charm and novelty. These lift it above the average offering and among the especially noteworthy films.

The script by Charles Kenyon exemplifies the deadening weight of the truly sordid in any work of art. The truly sordid is one level deadness, and there is no sure appeal to human sympathy from it. The thing that weakens this picture is the heroine's denial of real love for a most sordid "legitimate" union with a man whom she knows is disgusting. The mistake was in making us see that she knew it. This touch makes the author's whole Bohemia unreal.

NEW MUTT AND JEFF CARTOONS

"Meeting Theda Bara" and "Mutt and Jeff and The 75-Mile Gun" Are Laughmakers.

PROBABLY as amusing as any of this famous cartoon series is "Meeting Theda Bara," in which Jeff, after getting an inheritance, goes into the motion picture business with Mutt and they look about for a good vampire. Of course, Theda is the ideal, and while they want her, Mutt knows that she is under contract and is not to be thought of. Jeff perseveres and Mutt gets a knockout when he finds Jeff and Theda very friendly and taking dinner together in a restaurant.

"Mutt and Jeff" and the 75-Mile Gun."

Mutt and Jeff prove excellent camouflagers, and dressed up as a tree have fun putting out the Crown Prince, the Kaiser, Hindenberg and a troop of boches. Just how this is accomplished is more amusing than any description of it could be. It is good entertainment.

"GOOD NIGHT, NURSE"

Amusing Paramount Release, with "Fatty" Arbuckle at His Best in a New Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE are plenty of laughs all through both of the two reels of this release, not so much at the farcical incidents as at Arbuckle's characterization. Really an acrobat of great natural strength, in spite of his rotundity, a born comedian as well, the mere contrast of his physique with the role of a sanatorium patient evokes laughter, and his antics do the rest.

Arbuckle's efforts to light a match in a driving rain storm while under the influence of liquor, his good-natured submission to adverse circumstances, his boyish face and manner, above all, his keen sense of humor, compel laughter from the first. He tears along through ridiculous incidents from then on like a baby elephant out for a romp and careless of consequences. The story is naturally funny, one of the few of its kind, and it will prove a welcome relief to those which labor hard without spark of real humor in them. A winner.

"THE KAISER'S SHADOW"

A Timely Paramount Production, Starring Dorothy Dalton.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

STRONG point in favor of "The Kaiser's Shadow" is its entire plausibility, in spite of the romantic treatment where the scenes are laid in a mysterious American suburban house with a castlelike water approach and many ingenious trapdoors. The German spy system and propaganda in the United States have been conducted along lines so insidious and crafty that we can grant an author his own conditions in exposing the machinery of the Hun organization. The story amounts to an exposure and a warning, where it emphasizes the hypocritical attitude of a pro-German element pretending loyalty while secretly conspiring to keep a merciless autocracy enthroned.

The story is framed on an attempt to abduct, imprison and torture the young American inventor of a "ray" rifle, in order to obtain possession of his plans, very carelessly carried around in his pocket at times. His young bride is also abducted and held to witness his final agony in case extortion by ordinary methods fails. The important factors, however, are two supposed spies in the German service—the girl, Dorothy Dalton, an American by birth and sympathy; the man, a Frenchman, of romantic acquaintance while studying in Berlin. When these two come to be reunited in the German secret service, each believes the other to be in earnest, while both are operating against the enemy. Their separate rather than their united efforts result in saving the young inventor and in the capture of the entire gang of Hun agents through a series of adventures that bring about their own happiness.

Some of these adventures are ingenious, others disconcerting in their posture of circumstances, but the general effect gets over largely through vitality of theme. The cast is well chosen, the star entirely satisfactory in her limited role, the workmanship thorough, and, thus backed, the high elements of value should bring success.

"ANNEXING BILL"

Five-Reel Pathe-Astra Release Features Gladys Hulette in Light Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy

THIS five-reel Pathe-Astra number, "Annexing Bill," presents an amusing light comedy in which Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale play the leading roles, with Mark Smith and Margaret Greene in the supporting cast. The story was written by Edgar Franklin, directed by Albert Parker, and produced by Astra Film Corporation.

The plot material in this is of a slight but enjoyable sort. The humor is of a mildly amusing kind, and continues to hold up throughout the entire subject, giving the production something of the character of a breezy, well-written short story.

Gladys Hulette plays the role of Enid, a girl artist, who lives with a married friend, Mrs. Frayne, on Washington square. Her lover is Billy Dow, a well favored young lawyer, who wants very much to marry Enid. But when he hears that she has just inherited a million dollars from an aunt who went down on the steamship Palamic, Billy refuses to ask for her hand. He does not believe in marrying for money. Enid arranges to turn her funds over to George Frayne to invest for her in the hope of losing it, as Mrs. Frayne says he is bound to do. Billy in the meanwhile is arrested while trying to help a friend recover some stolen funds. Then Enid's aunt unexpectedly turns up and claims the million.

Affairs thus become considerably complicated, and there are still further interesting twists in the story toward the close.

"TINSEL"

World-Picture Presents Kitty Gordon in Story of Smart Society.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel World Picture based on a story by Fred Jackson and directed by Oscar Apfel tells an entertaining and strongly presented narrative of the smart social type in its more agreeable form. The effect of the whole is artistic and satisfying, and the observer feels that its lesson is a valuable one to mothers and daughters, as the press sheets advertise.

It is rather unfair to skelentonize the plot of this sort of a tale, for the reason that the setting forth of the plot in a few words gives the impression that it may not be worth while. While the motive is slight in this instance the good team work of an agreeable cast of performers holds the interest firmly.

Kitty Gordon appears as Princess Sylvia

Carzoni, mother of Ruth Carmichael by her first marriage, a role which she carries with dignity and conviction. Muriel Ostriche is charming, and does some splendid acting as the daughter, Ruth. Frank Mayo appears as Jefferson Kane, the "King of Butterflies," and Ralph Graves does well as Bobby, the girl's first lover. Bradley Barker plays Richard Carmichael, the first husband.

As the story goes, Princess Sylvia, having lost her second husband, the prince, longs to have her daughter, Ruth, whom she has not seen for years. She succeeds in getting the girl to visit her. Ruth is introduced to the smart set, and promptly falls a victim to the advances of Jefferson Kane. The chief dramatic moments of the story concern the way in which her mother awakens to the girl's danger and saves her from it. At the close the girl returns to Bobby Woodward, and the mother is reconciled to Richard.

The social atmosphere is unusually good in this number.

"THE FINGER OF JUSTICE"

Strong Anti-Vice Propaganda Production Being State-Righted by Arrow.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald

THE strongest, most effective picture of its kind that has been made is the seven-part production, "The Finger of Justice," the state rights for which are being handled by the Arrow Film Corporation. This picture was produced by the Rev. Paul Smith, pastor of the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, San Francisco, who was instrumental in opening the recent anti-vice campaign in San Francisco and throughout California. Through the State Law Enforcement League of California the picture was exhibited in the towns of the state, inspiring the effort which was later put forth in the different localities for the suppression of vice.

The story of the picture consists of a series of the most tragic events in connection with the campaign, and takes its foundation in the illumination of underworld politics and graft, the life of a political boss who actually met a violent death as a result of his own ill-doing. The Barbary Coast is symbolized in the story by an evil resort called "The Web." Here the chief Magdalen resides in luxury, doing her master's bidding in keeping the place popular. In revenge for his neglect of her she aids Flip, one of the decoys of the resort, in luring away the young daughter of the boss, who had been carefully kept out of harm's way in the country. In the scrap that follows when the enraged father discovers his undoing he is shot by the decoy.

There is also an incident of the ruin of another girl who is pictured at that despairing period when she is cast upon her own resources with no legitimate means of support. And there is the parallel story of the clergyman's fight for the removal of the city's dens of vice, one of the telling scenes of which is the visit to his church of a legion of women of the underworld to plead their cause. The subtitling of this portion of the picture is especially illuminative. The main incidents of the story are said to be authentic, and were linked together in story form by Grace Marbury Sanderson, granddaughter of a man who was eight times mayor of San Francisco. Crane Wilbur plays the parson, Harry Barrows that of the political boss and Jane O'Rourke that of the chief Magdalen. William Chaudet directed the picture.

The money realized from the production, which, by the way, was financed by means of donations from interested parties in San Francisco, will be used in the solution of the general rehabilitation problem and will be handled by the Rev. Paul Smith, Charles Jewett, mayor of Indianapolis, and Dan Brummit, editor of the Epworth Herald.

George Kleine System.

THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN (Rialto De Luxe), June.—A five-part adaptation of the Oliver Morosco stage success by Louis K. Anspacher. The picture is well made, elaborately set and well dressed, but the moral outlook would bar its recommendation for the "family group" for instance. A full review will be found in our issue of June 29.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE VIAL OF DESTINY (Pathe), June 23.—Episode No. 16 of "The House of Hate." This is another well-built instalment, which again continues the prolonged suspense for which this serial is noted. Pearl and Gresham escape from the island under exciting circumstances and the latter is again threatened with death through the instrumentality of a nurse substituted by the gang.

BRITAIN'S BULWARKS, NO. 8 (Pathe), June 30.—This instalment deals almost entirely with scenes from the camp life of the British soldiers on the French front. The men are seen on the march, in the trenches and repairing railroads. The Leicesters, Royal Highlanders, and other companies and regiments, are shown in closeups.

A LITTLE SISTER OF EVERYBODY (Pathe), June 30.—A five-reel subject featuring Bessie Love. The plot deals with love and socialism. The girl is the granddaughter of a socialist, who lives on the East Side in New York. The hero falls heir to his father's factory and dons workingmen's clothes to work in his own plant. Labor troubles furnish a basis for the action, which contains dramatic moments. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

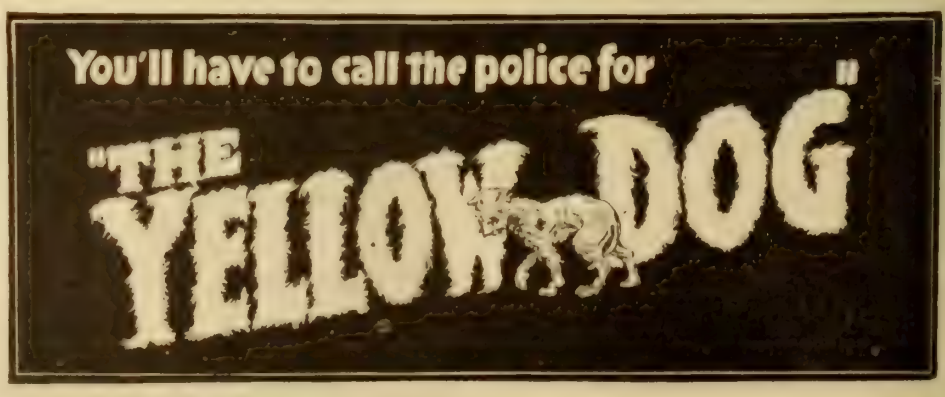
She also gives an interesting swimming exhibition. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.



CLOSIN' IN (Triangle), June 23.—William Desmond is manly and effective as the hero of this five-part melodrama. He puts up a great fight with the villain. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Company.

CURRENT EVENTS, NO. 58 (Universal), June 15.—This opens with the "Blue Devils" returning to France from this country. Other features are a military high mass held in St. Louis, cutting timber for aeroplanes, West Point cadets ready for France and other war scenes.

World Pictures Corporation.

THE HEART OF A GIRL (World Picture), July 1.—A five-reel subject, featuring Barbara Castleton and Irving Cummings. The story concerns society life in Washington, D. C., and has a strong political interest at the close. The girl in the case clears the name of a young candidate for governor, with whom her own heart is involved. This is not particularly strong, but makes a thoroughly agreeable and entertaining subject. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Directed by Raymond B. West.

The Story: Sidney Carson, in love with Robin Cameron, who has her home in Scotland converted into a hospital for wounded soldiers, gives her young brother a shaving set when he leaves for the front. A ship is sunk off the coast by a submarine, and one of the survivors is John Hamilton, a young American. He is cared for at the Cameron home, and falls in love with Robin. Hamilton is suspicious of Carson and Dr. Hyde, who is also in love with Robin. Trailing Carson, Hamilton finds him at the shore signaling to a boat. Knowing that Hamilton has a line on his activities, Carson contrives with Hyde to cast suspicion on the American. Hamilton is about to be arrested when it is discovered that Carson has a supply of shaving brushes which contain anthrax germs, and that he has been sending them to the soldiers. Robin's brother dies as the result of infection, and Carson, realizing that all is lost, commits suicide. Hyde is arrested for complicity. Hamilton leaves for the front after arranging with Robin for their marriage upon his return.

Feature Bessie Barriscale as Robin Cameron and Charles Gunn as John Hamilton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Sensational Photodrama Pictures Realistic Episodes in Kaiser's War Against Civilization.
Inspiring Theme of Loyalty Tinged With Impelling Love Story.
Woman's Devotion Glorifies Noble Sacrifice for Her Native Land.
German Treachery and Intrigue Foiled by Loyally Devoted Girl's Heroism.
Stirring Drama of the War Visualized Without Battles.
Exciting Episodes Bring Thrill of Sensation to Gripping Love Theme.

Stunt Suggestions: Get pictures of Miss Barriscale as the feature of window displays of safety razors, with a card guaranteeing that "these have not been tampered with by German traitors as were the shaving kits in 'Patriotism,' shown at (house and date)." Take advantage of the present U-boat raid to advise people to see how the invaders are given information from shore. In newspaper advertising play up the fact that this is a live drama of life in Scotland in war times and not a thin thread of narrative backed up by some clips from old news weeklies.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one and three-sheets. One six-sheet. Thumbnail and one to three-column cuts in electro or mats. Press book.

Gwendolyn Plummer.....Mabel Ballin
Aunt Judith.....Victory Bateman
"Blinky".....Tammany Young
Finklestein.....William Bechtel
Jefferson.....Jules Cowles
Martha.....Zula Ellsworth

Directed by Charles Miller.

The Story: To put herself in the class of women who have sweethearts, sons, and husbands at the front, Marilyn March claims that she is the wife of John Whitney Marshall, who is cited for gallant action "over there." She meets the mother of Marshall, who accepts her as the wife of her son without question. Some time later at the mother's home she meets a young man who, after investigation, turns out to be John Whitney Mar-

HE'S gone across—
YOU "come across"!

Adopt a SOLDIER and Supply him with "SMOKES" for the Duration of the WAR!

YOU know that our fighting men are begging for tobacco. Tobacco cheers them. They need it. "Send more cigarettes." "We can't get half enough smokes over here." "A cigarette is the first thing a wounded man asks for." Almost every mail brings many thousands of such requests.

$1.00 a Month Keeps a Soldier Supplied—Will YOU Be a "BIG BROTHER" or a "BIG SISTER" to a Lonely Fighting Man?

Every dollar sends four 45c. packages of tobacco. Mail the money and coupon right now.

Stunt Suggestions: Remember that the service flag is a patented proposition and do not try to work this idea without a license. You can, however, get a large flag or many small ones for a lobby display, and you might also obtain some relics, authentic or improvised. Pick up the line from the company material, "The Flag of All Mothers," and work that for all it is worth. It should have strong appeal. Get dealers handling service flags to make window displays, with the rotogravure one-sheets (framed if possible) for a central attraction. If at all possible use the editorial form of advertising first supplied for this attraction. It can also be used for a circular, but at any rate should be used in newspapers if the cost is not absolutely prohibitive.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six and one 24-sheet. Rotogravure one-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Coming and current slides. Advertising and scene cuts. Photographic line-cut copy for ads. Press book.

Pathe Presents Bessie Love in a Story of Universal Appeal.

Cast.

Celeste Janvier	Bessie Love
Nicholas Marinoff	Jos. J. Dowling
Ivan Marask	Hector Sarno
Hugh Travers, Jr.	George Fisher

Directed by Robert T. Thornby.

The Story: Celeste Janvier lives with her grandfather, an old philosopher, in the foreign quarters of a big American city. At seventeen years old, Celeste is a peculiar mixture of affection, shrewdness, and womanliness, and is much sought after by the young fellows of the neighborhood. Celeste mothers everything that comes her way—stray dogs and cats and unhappy humans. Suddenly the activities of anarchists are heard of, and men of whom Celeste is afraid come to make love to her. And then enters the young American chap—and Celeste escapes from her sordid surroundings and draws up to happiness with her those whom she loves.

Feature Bessie Love as Celeste Janvier and George Fisher as Hugh Travers, Jr.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Sweetly Pathetic Picturization of a Girl's Family Loyalty in Sacrificing Happiness.

"THE PAINTED LILY"

Triangle Presents Alma Rubens in the Story of a Country Girl Who Married to Enjoy City Life and Found Only Sorrow.

Cast.

Mary Fanjoy	Alma Rubens
Daniel Fanjoy	William V. Mong
Cecil Grey	Jack Richardson
Jeanette Wayne	Dorothy Hagar
Tom Burton	Francis McDonald
Mrs. Wayne	Alberta Lee
"London Louie"	Gene Burr

Directed by Thomas H. Heffron.

The Story: Mary Fanjoy, selling flowers to support her invalid father, meets Cecil Grey, who says that he is a broker, but who in reality is the proprietor of a gambling house. Shortly after her marriage to Grey, Mary learns the nature of her husband's business, and he tells her that their marriage is not legal. To shield her father Mary consents to her husband's demands to become his accomplice, and she poses as Jeanette Wayne, who was killed in a raid on Grey's establishment, so that Grey might obtain money from the dead girl's blind mother. Grey and "London Louie," one of his confederates, get tired of waiting for Mary to return with the money she was sent to extort from Mrs. Wayne and go after her, but Grey, upon seeing how satisfied Mary is with the old lady, tells "Louie" that he has decided not to disturb her happiness, but that they will tackle the town bank. "Louie" is killed in the attempt, and Grey, who is mortally wounded, confesses

"AFTER THE WAR"

Bluebird Presents Grace Cunard and Herbert Prior in the First Play Dealing with After-the-War Conditions. A Gripping Story of What Will Come.

Cast.

Gerve.....Grace Cunard
Phillippe.....Edward Cecil
Carl Wetz.....Herbert Prior Vyera.....Dora Rogers

Directed by Joseph De Grasse.

The Story: Phillippe, who is saved from death at the hands of a German firing squad, believes that he owes his life to Carl Wetz, the officer in charge of the squad. Sometime later at a musicale Phillippe sees Gerve, an opera singer and boyhood sweetheart, and after the affair he learns at her home that her great love for him prompted her to sacrifice her honor so that his life might be spared. In proof she shows him the child—her's and Wetz's. Wetz also calls on Gerve, and while the young girl is relating her story to him the wife of the German officer who had followed him and who had heard Gerve's story fires upon him and kills him. The law refuses to proceed against the avenger of Wetz's wickedness, and when she expresses a desire to take the child all the barriers of the love of Gerve and Phillippe are swept away.

Feature Grace Cunard as Gerve and Edward Cecil as Phillippe.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Woman's Sacrifice for the Man She Loves Brings Retribution Upon Hun Beast's Head.
The Curse of the Brute Hun Follows the Recovering Generations.
Great and Tragic Melodrama Involving the Burdensome World Problem.
Children of Hun Beasts Blight the Lives of Weakened Humanity.
Anticipating the Solution of a Sociological Problem Diplomacy Cannot Solve.
The Blight of Hun Hellishness Foreseen in Civilization's Problem.

Stunt Suggestions: This story should be told mostly through newspaper and program work. Do not attempt to tell much of the story, but announce that it deals with the problem of what will happen after peace is declared, when we must face the results of war conditions. Do not suggest too sensational a story and rouse expectation of the salacious. Treat it frankly as a consideration of conditions we must eventually meet after peace is declared. Use such catch phrases as, "After the war who will pay?"

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Player cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.
Released July 13.

"HELL BENT"

Universal Presents Harry Carey in an Unusually Vivid Story of the Hills and Deserts.

Cast.

"Cheyenne" Harry.....Harry Carey
Cimmaron Bill.....Duke Lee
Bess Thurston.....Neva Gerber
Jack Thurston.....Vester Pegg
Beau.....Joseph Harris

Directed by Jack Ford.

The Story: "Cheyenne" Harry, becoming involved in a shooting affray, goes to the town of Rawhide, where he protects Bess Thurston from the advances of Beau, a highwayman. Simultaneous with the discharge of Jack, Bess' brother, from the express company, Bess receives word that their mother is ill in a distant city, and to raise money to pay for her parent's transportation she goes to work in the dance hall. Jack is persuaded by Beau to become a member of the gang. Beau abducts Bess, and "Cheyenne," who has gone in pursuit, is captured. Beau, with Bess as his prisoner, starts for the Rio Grande. When Jack comes into the room where "Cheyenne" is a captive he is overpowered by "Cheyenne" and forced to change clothes with him. Dressed in Jack's clothes, "Cheyenne" escapes, and again goes after the robber. He catches him, and, refusing to kill him, suggests that they start on a fifty mile walk across the desert to the water hole. When they reach the water hole they find that it is dry, and Beau dies. Bess meanwhile informs "Cimmaron" Bill, who rescues "Cheyenne."

Feature Harry Carey as "Cheyenne" Harry and Neva Gerber as Bess Thurston.

Judy Saurin . . . . . Mary Mersch
Mrs Valetta . . . . . Marcia Manon
Maurice Stair . . . . . Jack Holt
Postmaster . . . . . E M Kimball

Directed by Robert G Vignola.

The Story: The action of the tale takes place in South Africa. Mary Saurin is left in the road by a drunken stage coach driver. She hears lions nearby. Her shot brings to her assistance Major Anthony Kinsella, who wears earrings. Mary is on her way to Fort George to meet her brother Dick. Kinsella follows to protect her. When the natives rebel, Kinsella, Dick, and Maurice Stair, the resident commissioner, who is smitten by the charms of Mary, ride off at the head of the British troops. Stair returns some days later with the news that the entire troop has been wiped out and that Kinsella's dying wish was to have him (Stair) marry Mary in order that she might be well taken care of. To dispel her doubts, Stair shows Mary an earring which he declares Kinsella sent her. But after their marriage Mary learns of Stair's cowardice, and she leaves him. She hears that Kinsella is kept a prisoner in the mountains by Stair. Realizing his infamy, Stair releases Kinsella, and is forgiven by Mary. Kinsella and Mary find happiness at last.

Feature Clara Kimball Young as Mary Saurin and Milton Sills as Anthony Kinsella.

Adam Fairbrother . . . . . L. O. Hart
Greeba . . . . . Dorothy Bernard
Jorgen Jorgenson . . . . . Charles Graham
Rachel . . . . . Doris Wooldridge
Danish Minister . . . . . Charles Brooke
Stephen Orry's mother . . . . Julia Hurley
Liza Killey . . . . . Carey Lee
Sunlocks . . . . . Harry Spingler

The Story: The narrative hinges on Jason's vow to wreak vengeance on his father for abandoning his mother. But his father dies, and Jason turns his desire for revenge against Sunlocks, his father's son of another wife. Both Sunlocks and Jason are in love with Greeba, daughter of the governor of the Isle of Man. Sunlocks and Jason go to Iceland, and are confined in prison. Jason, not knowing Sunlocks, saves his half-brother from death in the mines. Jason is freed, but Sunlocks is condemned to death. Greeba pleads for Sunlocks' life, and Jason sacrifices himself by taking Sunlocks' place and dying for him.

Feature William Farnum as Stephen Orry and Jason, his son, and Dorothy Bernard as Greeba Fairbrother.

Intensely Dramatic Picturization of Hall Caine's Great Novel.
A Photodrama of Love, Hate, and Extreme Human Sacrifice
Gripping Picturization of Sacrifice on the Altar of Love Intensely Emotional and Melodramatic Story of Sacrifice

Stunt Suggestions: Get your booksellers to display in their windows copies of Hall Caine's works, featuring "The Bondman," but showing the others which have been dramatized. Talk of the vivid action of these stories of the Isle of Man, and refer to the fact that Caine, of all the British writers, was selected by the Government to write the new British propaganda play now in process of making. Play up the star and his great opportunities in this virile work. Point to the success of the original presentation, and add that this new version is considerably improved. To get all the money there is to be made from this picture circus it.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheet and mats (mats can be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City). Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

Abe.....Anthony Byrd
Mrs. Murphy.....Inez Shannon
Jack.....John Tansey
Johnson.....J. Blake
Johnson's Manager.....L. Canfield
Kent's Manager.....J. Smiley

Directed by John Adolfi.

The Story: Betty Lansing, daughter of the late Senator Lansing, meets Congressman Kent through the informal introduction of smashing his automobile with the car she is driving. Kent becomes interested in her. She also attracts the attention of Francis Oakland, a wealthy idler. Kent is led to believe that Betty favors Oakland through overseeing his proposal of marriage, but determines to plead his suit, and finds acceptance. Called to Washington on political business he breaks an appointment with Betty, and in a fit of pique she goes riding with Oakland. She causes his horse to run away when he attempts to make love, but rescues him when she sees that he is helpless. The story gets into the papers and rouses the insane jealousy of Oakland's demented wife, of whom no one knows. She escapes and attempts his life, and a second time Betty comes to the rescue. This also gets into the papers and estranges Kent. Mrs. Lansing's devotion to bridge causes her to be denounced as keeper of a gambling house, and Kent's political adversaries seek to use the charge that he frequents a gambling house to prevent his nomination as candidate for governor. For Betty's sake he is silent, but she learns of the trouble, and at the convention tells the story and carries the day for Kent and herself.

Feature Barbara Castleton as Betty Lansing and Irving Cummings as Brandon Kent.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Flaming Love and Firey Politics Blend in Emotional Drama of Thrills and Excitement.

"GOOD NIGHT, PAUL"

Lewis J. Selznick Presents Constance Talmadge in a Charming Comedy Derived from the Musical Play of the Same Name in Which Ralph Herz Starred So Successfully.

Cast.

Matilda Landers.....Constance Talmadge
Richard Landers.....Norman Kerry
Paul Boudeaux.....Harrison Ford
Batiste Boudeaux.....John Steppling
Rose.....Beatrice Van
Mme. Julie.....Rosita Marstini

Directed by Walter Edwards.

The Story: Richard Landers and Paul Boudeaux are partners in business. They are in financial straits, and Matilda, the wife of Richard, plans to get them out of their difficulty. Paul's rich uncle, Batiste Boudeaux, has offered to give Paul $50,000 if he will marry and perpetuate the family name, but Paul is a woman-hater, and things look very black. When the uncle arrives for a visit, Matilda tells him that she is Paul's wife. Uncle Batiste beams and keeps his promise about the money, and everything seems rosy, since he is scheduled to return home that night and Richard is also out of town. The complications arise thick and fast when the uncle decides to stay for a month or so and Richard also returns to his home that night. The situation is, of course, finally straightened out; Paul finds a girl who changes his attitude on the woman question, and even Uncle Batiste is paired off with an enchantress.

Feature Constance Talmadge as Matilda Landers, Norman Kerry as Richard Landers, and Harrison Ford as Paul Boudeaux.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Wholesome Comedy Filled With Thrills and Spiced With Laughter.
Thrilling Comedy-Drama Providing the Most Satisfying Entertainment.
Bonanza of Mirth Filled With Thrills and Exciting Episodes.
Musical Comedy Success Improved by Translation to the Screen.
Constance Talmadge Charming Exponent of Comedy With Emotional Interludes.
Great Stage Success Brought to the Screen With Alluring Embellishments.

Stunt Suggestions: For your newspaper advertising use such lines as, "Don't borrow a wife a day, you may need her longer." "Don't be a slacker. Marry a wife; don't borrow one." "Don't try to trade in borrowed goods." Use the same or similar lines for a catch phrase for throwaways or mailing cards. Play upon the fact that the story is derived from a successful musical comedy. Get the dry goods stores to make displays of night dresses and women's pajamas with a card and a large picture of the star, and the title in large letters.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheet, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Window cards, 14x21. Heralds. Lobby display photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Cuts, two one-column, two two-column, one three-column, one one-half-column cut of star, and one one-column and one two-column cuts of star.

"THE WHIRLPOOL"

Select Pictures Presents Alice Brady in a Startlingly Sensational Play of New York Sporting Life from Victoria Morton's Novel.

Cast.

Bella Cavallo.....Alice Brady
Judge Reverton.....H. E. Herbert
Ferris.....J. H. Gillmore
Arthur Hallam.....William Davidson
Richard Brettner.....Robert Walker
Colonel Warren.....Warren Cook
Dr. Comyns.....W. E. Williams

Directed by Alan Crosland.

The Story: Bella Cavallo, a decoy at her step-father's gambling house, is much sought after by Richard Brettner, one of the patrons. He steals in order to buy expensive presents for her, and when his thefts are discovered and he is arrested and adjudged guilty, Judge Reverton, before whom he is tried, suspends sentence because of his youth and previous good record. Later, Brettner is suspected of a murder of which he is innocent, but Bella's cleverness clears his name by rounding up the real murderer, Arthur Hallam, the neurasthenic nephew of the murdered man. Through Dr. Comyns, who attended her mother on her death bed, Bella meets Judge Reverton, and eventually marries him.

Feature Alice Brady as Bella Cavallo and H. E. Herbert as Judge Reverton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Sporting Life in New York's Tenderloin Pictured in Advancement of Moral Crusade.
Crime and Villainy Exposed Through Cleverness of Pretty Girl.
Beautiful Girl Decoy of Gamblers Justifies Her Conduct Through Heroic Sacrifice.
Night Life in New York Revealed in Realistic Representations.
Life Under the Bright Lights Creates Acid Test of Loyal Hearts.
Intensely Dramatic Episodes Combined With Forceful Love Theme.

Stunt Suggestions: Playing cards and poker chips can be used to frame lobby and window displays, but the story does not lend itself to much stunting, and can best be advertised with lithograph work and in newspaper displays. The story should not be given in full. Preferably play up the situation in the sanitorium and leave the climax only hinted at.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Window cards, 14x21. Heralds. Lobby display photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Cuts, two one-column, two two-column, one three-column, one one-half-column cut of star, and one one-column and one two-column cuts of star.

Released in June.

"THE FLY GOD"

Triangle Presents Roy Stewart in a Unique Story in Which a Man's Fate Hangs on a Henpecked Husband and the Flight of a Fly.

Cast.

William Saunders ("Red")..,Roy Stewart
Robert Allers.....Edward Peil
Mrs. Allers.....Claire Anderson
Jimmy Hit-the-Bottle.....Aaron Edwards
"Shorty" Stokes.....Percy Challenger
"Wind River".....Walter Perry

Directed by Cliff Smith.

The Story: Red Saunders, a rancher, befriends Bob Allers, a consumptive, and his wife when they are robbed of their horse and money. Allers is on his way West for his health. From purely humanitarian motives Red gives Allers a position as bookkeeper, but when Allers discovers that his services are not actually necessary he tells Red that he is anxious to resume his journey. Red makes a collection from his cowboys and presents it to Allers, telling him that Sharpe, the thief, returned it. But that night Allers meets Sharpe, and is about to thank him, when the thief fires at him. Allers, in defense, kills him, and is arrested by the sheriff, Sharpe's brother. The jurymen, with the exception of Tom Cummings, who was not present at the time, have received instructions from the district attorney and the sheriff as to the kind of verdict to be handed in. But in the jury room the eleven instructed men find that it is not so easy to persuade Cummings that Allers is guilty. A fly appears on the window, and Cummings remarks that if it should touch the upper pane Allers is not guilty. In its flight it strikes the upper pane, and Cummings succeeds in convincing the men that Allers is not the murderer, and a verdict of "not guilty" is rendered.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Sarcastic and Sensational Lampoon of Frontier Justice as Represented in Jury Trials.
Thrilling Scenes and Exciting Episodes Mark Realistic Photoplay.
The Way of the West in Dealing With Crime Makes Exciting Drama.
Gripping Photoplay Spiced With Exciting Scenes and Adventures.
Lovers of Sensation Will Find in This Photoplay an Abundance of Thrills.
Suspense Maintained Through Exciting Scenes to Surprise Climax.

Stunt Suggestions: The story does not offer many suggestions for stunting. If you can get or make a large model house fly or even an enlarged picture of one you can offer it in your lobby as the real star of the play, telling that it decided a man's fate. Use the one-sheets for window work, and for the newspapers dwell on the fact that this was a henpecked husband's one chance to assert himself.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle Magazine. Press sheet.

Released June 30.

"THE KAISER'S SHADOW."

Thomas H. Ince Presents Dorothy Dalton in a Screen Version of "The Triple Cross," Originally Appearing in the All Story Weekly.

Cast.

Paula Harris.....Dorothy Dalton
Hugo Wagner.....Thurston Hall
Clement Boyd.....Edward Cecil
Dorothy (Robinson) Boyd.Leota Lorraine
Frederick Fischer.....Otto Hoffman
William Kremlin.....Charles French

Directed by Thomas H. Ince.

The Story: Clement Boyd, an American, invents a "ray rifle." Kremlin, a German spy, to get the plans, has his assistants, Paula and Hugo, kidnap Boyd and his bride. When searched, Boyd discovers the plans are gone. It develops that Paula has them, and hides them in a shade roller from which they are stolen by Hugo. Paula confesses to the bride that she is not a German spy, but is in the French intelligence service. Kremlin's house is surrounded by United States secret service men, and Hugo reveals the fact that he is also in the secret service. Kremlin is shot, and happiness comes to Paula and Hugo, who have learned to love each other despite the fact that each thought the other was an enemy.

Feature Dorothy Dalton as Paula Harris and Edward Cecil as Clement Boyd.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Mystery Drama Showing Hun Intrigue Foiled by Woman's Wit.
German Spies in America Forwarding the Kaiser's Dirty Work Meet Disaster.
Hun Plotters Outwitted by Clever Girl and Brought to Justice.
Popular Story, "The Triple Cross," Brought to Screen Under New Name.
Mystery Plot Developing Thrills as It Speeds to Surprise Conclusion.
Deep Mystery, Sudden Thrills, and Sensational Episodes Feature Great Melodrama.

Stunt Suggestions: In your newspaper work make what capital you can of the magazine story. This is especially necessary since the title has been changed. This is a strong action story with many surprises, but it is melodrama rather than propaganda (though it throws an interesting side light on spy methods), and should be advertised as such. If you can get hold of someone who can paint, paint a black silhouette of the Kaiser on white papered fences and letter the title, house and playing date in white. For a house front idea get an auto searchlight, paste an outline of the Kaiser on the lens, and place it so that the shadow is thrown on the sidewalk. Invite your patriots to come and walk on the Kaiser's shadow.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Released July 1.

Simplex

What is the real name of your House?

"Let The Simplex Twins Draw Your Crowd"

If you christened a nigger-baby "Snow White" that wouldn't change the color of its skin, would it?

On the same principle, there's no use of adopting the name of some famous Simplex-Projection Theatre if you haven't got Simplex Projection.

The real name of your House is written on the screen by the Twins in the Projection Room.

If that name is "NEVER AGAIN" the Simplex Twins will put a better name there. They will beckon to the crowds to come again and again and then many more times.

Like the Engine in an Automobile, your Projectors don't show, but . . .

Hampton DelRuth

Editor and Supervising Director

Screencraft

BY LOUIS REEVES HARRISON

An invaluable help to the writer who is making a serious effort to evolve stories for screen production.

Of great interest too to the individual who is watching the development of "the silent drama."

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

4500 What? 4500 Paid Subscribers!

An actual, bona-fide, paid-in-advance, genuine, confirmable, sworn-to-by-affidavit, dyed-in-the-wool, glory-be-to-Jupiter, monthly circulation. In addition to these 4500 paid subscribers, add 1500 surplus copies to take care of our news-stand circulation in the largest film centers of Latin America and our local needs, and you see revealed thus before you that the healthy, vigorous, actual

Monthly Total Circulation of CINE-MUNDIAL is 6000

The enormity of Cine-Mundial's success is best reflected by comparison with other of the general Spanish and Portuguese export periodicals, none of which, though their total circulation may vary from 10,000 to 22,000, make any attempts to claim more than a meager proportion of paid subscribers.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?

It shows that Latin America and Spanish-speaking Europe have been successfully penetrated by American-made film productions. It shows that Cine-Mundial and the New York film exporters know what they are doing. It proves that Cine-Mundial should receive the monthly advertising support of every wideawake film concern.

Cine-Mundial takes this opportunity of thanking its many advertisers for their announcements in its coming July edition, now on the press.

Each issue of Cine-Mundial has been growing by leaps now for more than a year. But the jumps in advertising, editorial, news and service pages in our July, 1918, edition is more than a mere jump. It is a leap, a bound, a veritable vault.

Three months ago Cine-Mundial knew it was growing rapidly with 2,700 paid subscribers. In the last 100 days, however, 1,800 odd more subscriptions have been paid for—now 4,500—altogether 6,000—and STILL GROWING!

Bigger Today Than Ever Before

"THE KAISER"

"The Beast of Berlin"

WITH the smashing Italian victory, plus a million of our irresistible fighters on the battle-front, "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," has doubled and tripled in value. Positively BIGGER TODAY THAN EVER, and admitted by thousands of Exhibitors to be the most amazing money-getter since picture-making began. There is

No Picture like it in the Whole World's Market

From every corner of the Nation—trade press, newspapers, critics and millions of people—has come an avalanche of praise of this huge masterpiece. As propaganda, it smashes every precedent—as thrilling dramatics, it will stand for years untouched—evidence that JEWEL accepts nothing but the very biggest in money-getting attractions.

"It's a Jewel Production"

Simply Pouring Money in Exhibitors' Pockets

"THE KAISER"

"The Beast of Berlin"

SIMPLY amazing have been the receipts on "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin." Records of actual cash taken in on every-length runs of big productions, up to a week and two weeks, have been smashed, obliterated, annihilated, shattered into smithereens!

Has put hundreds of Exhibitors on Easy Street

Hundreds of Exhibitors who have been only drilling along have suddenly made enough money with "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," to put them on Easy Street. It has brought home a first bank-roll to scores who never dreamed that so much money could be netted on any picture. Many have already played it three times—and we can show you money records challenging credulity, yet every record is TRUE—with facts and figures to back it up.

"It's a Jewel Production"

Colossal Publicity Backs "THE KAISER"

"The Beast of Berlin"

PUBLICITY in staggering volume has flooded the Nation on "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin." Papers heretofore hidebound and conservative have thrown their columns wide open on this production. Publicity from quarters never heard of before has deluged the JEWEL Offices—advertising this huge triumph to every man, woman and child in the United States.

No picture Ever Produced even Begins to Approach the Publicity given "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin"

This means every word it says. Exhibitors who never dreamed of paying the price, have thanked us in letters of congratulation for insisting that they book it, paying the highest prices in the history of the business for a picture of this length.

"It's a Jewel Production"

Book the Original and Only Proven Winner

"THE KAISER"

"The Beast of Berlin"

IMITATORS, watching every move of JEWEL PRODUCTIONS, have tried in vain to copy this picture's points of pulling power. Copy cats, realizing the simply unheard-of cash business of "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," are now offering the "Just-as-good"—"The nearly-like-it"—the substitute. Yet not one has come within miles of "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin." And Exhibitors have not been caught by the "just-as-good" conversation. To a man they still say that—

The Original still Stands Supreme as the Most Amazing Money-Getter of the Age

We have mountains of letters on the almost unbelievable sums of money taken in on "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin." Scores have played it two, three and four times—many, for a full week on REPEAT. Exhibitors themselves have even sold this production to brother Exhibitors. Your nearest JEWEL Exchange will tell you more—loads more. Wire today for booking—and demand repeat booking dates later.

"It's a Jewel Production"

That's the Date We're Thinking About!

WE are not concerned with next September. It is almost here. It's a year from next September that we are thinking about. We are planning far into the futu e.

On September 1st, 1919, Paramount and Artcraft Pictures must show a substantial year's growth in prestige, in artistry, in popularity with exhibitor and patron.

On September 1st, 1919, our organization must hold even more of the honestly-won good will of the exhibitor.

There is only one way to do this. We must devote all our energy toward giving the Service essential to the prosperity of the exhibitor, we must bend every effort to provide him with the moving pictures that will bring to him steadily increasing profits.

We have promised the greatest year's output ever announced by a moving picture producer. Now our entire organization is out to make good that promise.

Goldwyn Pictures

Exhibitors Forced Goldwyn To Double Its Output Of Productions.

GOLDWYN'S decision to make in excess of fifty productions in its second year is due to the pressure of the nation's exhibitors.

The twenty-six productions of our first year created a bi-weekly Goldwyn standard.

Every second week—or for one, two or three days in every second week—the new Goldwyn production then released gave the theatre in which it was played a tone and quality that at once brought increased business to the box-office.

Exhibitors soon found themselves puzzled over filling in the "Goldwyn day" or days of the in-between weeks.

Their public patronage sensed the tremendous difference between Goldwyn Pictures and "other pictures."

No man has to be hit with the force of a pneumatic riveter to feel a truth that affects his own pocketbook.

Before Goldwyn had been in business ninety days exhibitors were making the demand: "Give us a Goldwyn Picture at least once a week as a guarantee of sustained quality and patronage for our houses."

Our Goldwyn exhibitor patronage grew and grew until now there are in excess of 5,000 active contract accounts in force.

In time of war, at the height of the greatest crisis in human history, at a time when business "jumps at shadows" and takes as few steps as possible, the inspiring confidence of the exhibitors of America has forced Goldwyn to double its annual output of productions.

Great indeed is the law of supply and demand!

Goldwyn Is Not Content

With Quantity—Quality Comes First.

THE average motion picture viewpoint would be: "Oh, well, since the exhibitors want fifty pictures, we will give them fifty pictures."

Goldwyn has equipped itself to offer in excess of fifty productions next year.

GERALDINE FARRAR will have more dramatic and unusual stories than she has ever had before. We are avoiding the costume plays that the public taste now rejects.

PAULINE FREDERICK will do the modern emotional dramas through which she won instant popularity when she came from the stage to the screen.

REX BEACH is doing for you what he has never done before—offering six Rex Beach productions in one year. Annually for five years his new picture has meant a profit-making festival for exhibitors.

MABEL NORMAND, with unrivalled talents and millions of admirers, will be presented in comedy-dramas, with chief emphasis laid upon the comedy.

MAE MARSH, having drawn tremendous patronage for exhibitors in "Polly of the Circus," "The Cinderella Man" and other big successes, will be starred again in emotional and romantic dramas.

MADGE KENNEDY, who won instant screen popularity, will greatly increase her appeal and drawing power in dramatic comedies like those in which she has proved herself a box-office money-maker.

TOM MOORE has been made a star by you—the exhibitors of the country. His nation-wide success is assured in advance by the public's and your own liking for him.

Here you find no "deadwood" stars. Each of these personalities possesses the power to stand alone; each has challenge and a tremendous following.

And each will appear in productions of the quality and type that have made the Goldwyn name the best known name in motion pictures in the brief period of twelve months.

CAPITOL COMEDIES

"Oh, Mister!"

- - - Think of having comedies for your patrons that are made on the same careful and lavish scale with which some producers make their big productions. Comedies with the fire and humors of life in them; comedies that are not thrown together in haste, but are built skilfully to appeal both to your sense of fun and your intelligence. The instant success both with large and small exhibitors of is due to the lively speed and humor of his stories; to the "finish" which makes them stand alone. Their latest metropolitan triumph is a booking at the Strand Theatre, New York; a solid booking at the Marcus Loew theatres, including the big Stillman Theatre, Cleveland; and in more than 2,000 other houses whose managers recognized a big hit the moment they saw it.

Capitol Comedies are distributed exclusively through the offices of Goldwyn in nineteen American cities. Have YOU booked them?

Exhibitor investments must be protected. This is essential to the future welfare of the industry.

Every wide awake exhibitor, be he large or small, must appreciate this.

Mr. Roth of the California Theatre in San Francisco, and Mr. Miller of the Lyric Theatre in Plymouth, Pa., are Co-partners in the Hodkinson Plan.

As far-sighted business men, they are convinced that the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan offers them the only rock-solid protection possible.

When two men, whose investments differ greatly in size, agree so closely—exhibitors, large or small, the country over—should supplement the thinking they are now doing by action.

A DISTINCTIVE note in screen comedy, founded on the famous E. K. Means story of the same name which appeared in The All Story Weekly. The inimitable drollery of real negro humor has been filmed in this bright, wholesome, fast-stepping comedy of life in Tickfall. This is a new creation in clean, rib-tickling humor which you will want to feature an extra day or two. Get that date now.

PLEASE don't be finicky because shipping restrictions threaten. Be calm and don't mind changes in the existing order of things. Adjust yourself to them. Remember that conditions aren't normal, that the world is in very much of an upset. A war, involving the lives and destinies of a billion human beings, is going on. And some folks expect "business as usual!" Reasonable persons expect nothing of the kind, and are willing to gladly bear hardships and restrictions as long as they can stay in business. And foreign buyers of American film are assured of enough American film to keep running. They have no reason for complaint, therefore! They mustn't gloom. The earth and American films aren't coming to an end YET! Which Would You Choose

A GOOD PRODUCTION OF PROVED VALUE? or AN UNKNOWN PRODUCT OF THE PICTURE MILL?

One of the things you have learned is that a good picture will always stand repetition, whereas a poor picture makes no impression at any time.

Many well-known successes have been greater sources of revenue later than they were at the outset.

"THE BIG SIX"

give you a chance to obtain in one collection, under one agreement, independently of all other bookings, six of the greatest productions in which have appeared since they have been screen favorites—the six productions which more than 5,000 exhibitors have practically unanimously declared to be the pictures they most desired to show again.

BARA { "A FOOL THERE WAS"
"THE CLEMENCEAU CASE"
"THE TWO ORPHANS"

"THE BONDMAN"
"A SOLDIER'S OATH"
"THE PLUNDERER" } FARNUM

And no one who has looked over the remarkable casts but realizes, without being told, that here are players no one manager of today could possibly assemble; that in these BIG SIX are more famous and better actors than now are to be seen in twelve ordinary pictures!

New Versions—New Prints—New Appeal—New Arrangement—New Editions

Comparatively few of the whole number of persons patronizing picture theatres today have seen any of THE BIG SIX, and those who have seen them will set the pace in the direction of the theatre that advertises its intention to show them. No! even a Boche bomb raid could keep people away.

This is the time to sign for a clean-up. SOMEBODY IS GOING TO PROFIT BIG FROM THE OPPORTUNITY WILLIAM FOX IS NOW OFFERING. It will either be you or your competitor, and your chance of getting in is as good as the other fellow's. If you'll wire or write to your nearest Branch Exchange, WILLIAM FOX WILL DO THE REST.

NAILED!

An Open Letter to the Committee on Ways and

Dear Sir: June 28, 1918.

On June 18th, 1918, Mr. Patrick A. Powers of the Universal Film Company appeared before your Committee as one of a delegation appointed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

In appointing Mr. Powers as one of its delegates it was the purpose of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to lay before your Committee certain facts relative to the film footage tax. It appears, however, that Mr. Powers took advantage of the opportunity thus afforded him to misrepresent the relationship between Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Mr. William Randolph Hearst; and also to question the good faith of the Committee on Public Information in awarding to this Company the contract for the release of the ALLIES' OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW.

By reference to "the Pathe-Hearst Company" and "Hearst-Pathe," etc., and other clever insinuations, Mr. Powers apparently left your Committee under the impression that there is such a company or organization actually in existence. Mr. Powers also informed your Committee that Pathe is a French Company.

It is the purpose of this letter to correct any false impression which Mr. Powers may have given and also to make clear to you the circumstances under which the contract for the release of the ALLIES' OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW was awarded to this Company.

In the first place Pathe Exchange, Inc., is not a French Company. It is an American corporation, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York and has no connection direct or indirect, remote or contingent with Mr. Hearst or any organization with which he is connected, nor does Mr. Hearst directly or indirectly own or control one single share of stock in this Company.

Long before the United States entered the war Pathe Exchange, Inc., entered into a contract with the International Film Service, a corporation controlled by the Hearst interests, for the release of news items in motion pictures photographed by International. As one of the considerations for the contract it was agreed that the news weekly should be known as "Hearst-Pathe News." Under the terms of said contract this Company reserved the absolute right to edit, cut, interchange and title all pictures submitted to it by International for release, at its discretion, and this we have consistently done.

In other words, our sole relation with the Hearst subsidiary is to distribute films made by it in just the same way that we distribute films made by other producing companies.

Relative to the contract for the release of the ALLIES' OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, I beg to say that this matter was first taken up with us in conjunction with the Universal Film Company and the Mutual Film Company, the proposition submitted being that the three companies should jointly release the official war pictures; and the amount payable by each of said companies was calculated in proportion to the number of positive prints of news reels distributed weekly by the respective companies. The terms proposed were accepted by a representative of each of said companies, the Universal being represented by Mr. Cochrane. The agreement was signed by Mr. Hart as Director of the Division of Films and also by this Company, and we have in our possession, at this time, the original signed agreement; the duplicate thereof being in the possession of the Committee on Public Information. When the time arrived for the final execution of the agreement by the Universal Film Company, it, for reasons unknown to us, declined to do so. Competitive bids were thereafter called for, for the release of the ALLIES' OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW and this Company among other leading film companies presented its bid. It did not seek to make any profit out of the transaction and in fact we named a figure which, as experience has shown us, will result in actual loss. We of course know nothing relative to the bids submitted by the other film companies, but the contract was awarded to this Company in open competition with others.

When Mr. Powers appeared before your Committee on June 18th Mr. Treadway asked him whether the Universal Film Company was prevented from procuring war films.

Mr. Powers replied that he could not get a war picture except from the Creel Committee and indicated that the Committee on Public Information had given this Company a monopoly, stating:

> "He (Creel) has allotted to one concern the exclusive privilege of releasing these pictures on the arrangement he has made. I do not know what bid these people (meaning Pathe) made but I know they have secured the exclusive right to publish these pictures;"

and further that his Company was unable to secure any official war pictures; that such pictures could not be shown unless obtained from Mr. Creel or purchased from Pathe, and he even went so far as to state that he had endeavored to buy such films from this Company.

In the issue of the Motion Picture World (post dated) July 6th, 1918, the Universal Film Company carries in its advertisement the following extract from a letter from Mr. Charles S. Hart:

> "Each week beginning June 3rd we will place at your disposal OFFICIAL WAR FILMS that we consider valuable to the news weeklies. You will be charged $1.00 per foot for each foot of the film used by you."

I want to bring especially to your attention these two contradictory statements. Mr. Powers represented to your Committee on June 18th that his Company could not obtain official War Pictures. In his advertisement he quotes a letter received from Mr. Hart several weeks theretofore agreeing to place at his Company's disposal OFFICIAL WAR FILMS.

It is only reasonable to assume that Mr. Powers, as Treasurer of the Universal Film Company, had full knowledge of the facts stated in the advertisement referred to when he appeared before your Committee on June 18th, 1918.

I think it only fair to this Company to have the real facts in the case explained to you in order that any impression created by Mr. Powers' insinuations to the effect that this Company has any kind of a monopoly or is influenced or controlled in any manner by Hearst or any of his interests may be removed. I am sure your Committee wants the truth and nothing but the truth and we court the most scrutinizing investigation for the purpose of confirming each and every statement herein contained.

Very truly yours,

The U. S. Government is employing this Motion Picture to render an accounting to the Nation

How America's fighting sons are spending their lives
How American labor is backing them up
How our Government is spending the National Wealth

These sub-titles tell its story

The world conflict takes upon itself the nature of a Crusade. The Crusaders were the efforts of a new world striving after a better ideal than that of piracy and fraternal bloodshed.

We go forth in the same spirit in which the knights of old went forth to do battle with the Saracen.

Notwithstanding the sacrifice we shall gain from it a noble manhood and a deeper sense of America's mission in the world. Thousands of parents are asking "why are we giving up our boys?" It is most essential that they see and know. The young men of America are going out to rescue Civilization. They are going to fight for one definite thing, to save Democracy from death. This mighty exodus of America's manhood to the plains of Europe may well be called The Eighth Crusade.

The German policy of "the broken word" in execution. Germany creeps upon her prey.

Belgium: Her feet are placed mid Death, Desolation and Ruin but Honor crowns her brow.

German arrogance casts its shadow over America when the Deutschland rises like a serpent in our harbors.

The Lusitania, the object of Germany's colossal butchery. But, if those who perished shall have aided in saving Democracy, how glorious their sacrifice.

Plots, fires, strikes, agitations fomented by German agents to strike terror in our hearts have but fixed our determination to conquer at whatever cost.

America's answer. April 6th, 1917. President Wilson goes before Congress.

——"the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured—God helping her, she can do no other."

Of her wealth America has already given five billion dollars, oversubscribing the first Liberty Loan by $1,617,532,300.

America puts her hand to the plow.

When America entered the war the Government became the largest business corporation in the world with its interests affecting practically every industry.

Ten million questionnaires were sent to the Provost Marshal General by ten million of America's manhood ready to pour out their life blood for the ideals of their country.

Finger prints of every soldier are filed for reference and identification purposes.

Thirty-eight of these National Army cantonments have been built in the United States. Over a thousand buildings to house 1,500,000 men.

For the enormous task of clothing two million men the Government had to install machinery to lay in long folds the miles and miles of khaki necessary for uniforms.

Sixty thicknesses of cloth are cut at once by the portable electric knife. Six hundred and sixty coats are in this one length of folded material.

It is interesting to note that every woman working in Uncle Sam's tailor-shop has a near relative in the service.

Five and a half million shirts and nearly eleven million pieces of underwear have been turned out for our soldier family.

Six million blankets have been made, compressed to one-third their original size and baled for shipment.

Eight million five hundred thousand pairs of shoes have been supplied to the army.

Here's the supply of meat for one camp for one day. Two million boys have six million husky appetites every day.

The army bakers turn out 500,000 loaves of bread every day.

The Y. M. C. A. is always found wherever the army stops long enough to sit down.

The Knights of Columbus take good care of the Knights of Democracy.

The Masons have not forgotten the great brotherhood in arms.

The Hostess House of the Y. M. C. A.

Great shipyards have sprung up all over the country as if by magic. By autumn fifty ships will be turned out in these yards at one time.

When America calls the American workmen answers. Here is Labor swearing allegiance to the flag.

SHIP BUILDING

Mighty ships are being built in reply to Pershing's cry: "Build us a bridge of ships."

Every available wooden ship will help battle the German Monster.

An 8 inch Howitzer whose ultimate use is to shell the Huns out of the trenches.

These 14 inch guns are sixty feet long and weigh seventy-eight tons. They will hurl tons of American righteous anger into the Boche dugouts.

Here they are:. Fourteen inch shells, every one destined to strike a blow for freedom.

The most dramatic incident in our participation in the war occurs when the Secretary of War draws the first number in the great lottery which created our National Army.
An itinerant camp kitchen used at the front.

The national standby—beans. To see 'em every day makes a soldier so mad he could lick ten Germans.

Off for the day's training in the art which will help our Allies drive the Kaiser over the Rhine.

A practice advance. All must reach the enemy's lines at the same time.

Dear Sirs:

I will open The Symphony Theatre with your production of "The Unchastened Woman" a screen adaptation of Oliver Morosco's Broadway stage success of the same name, and in which Grace Valentine is starred.

My decision came after viewing an unusual number of very fine productions which were offered for consideration as the opening feature of the Symphony.

After twelve years in the producing field of the motion picture art, I am glad to say that your production is one that fitly exemplifies the dignified policy of the Symphony Theatre to give its patrons the very best obtainable.

Your screen adaptation of "The Unchastened Woman" is splendid. The story itself is unusual. The artistry of the star, Miss Valentine, is an histrionic achievement. The supporting cast was perfectly chosen.

All in all I consider it a great production. It is the very quality of picture that the Symphony wishes to continually offer.

Give us more like it.

Very truly yours,

Read what the critics say of The Street of Seven Stars:

"A clean entertainment, full of heart interest that will appeal to all classes. Book this picture."—P. S. Harrison in Motion Picture News.

"Breezy, whimsical, light bit of pathos, fun and romance that will please folks everywhere."—Wid.

"This is indeed a picture de luxe, a step forward in motion picture building. It registers the biggest kind of a hit. This unprecedentedly beautiful screen idol, all smiles and tears, will afford pleasure to the world at large for many a day and should be booked all over the country. Doris Kenyon is in a class by herself, being of the spiritual type of feminine loveliness."—Marion Russell in Billboard.

"If all pictures contained as much that is new and entertaining, there would always be something to look forward to."—Aileen St. John Brenon in Morning Telegraph.

"It is pleasing to the eye, and Doris Kenyon is bewitching and radiantly beautiful."—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

"Doris Kenyon is charming. Entertainment, story and photography are good, and the technical handling and acting throughout are very good."—Dramatic Mirror.

"Doris Kenyon radiantly beautiful in a sweetly simple story."—New York Review.

"A pretty story, full of quiet pathos and keen insight into life."—Moving Picture World.

"It is irresistible. Doris Kenyon lends a charm and fascination to the picture that are quite distinctive."—N. Y. C. Evening Mail.

Which Is Your Choice

A committee of the National Directors is considering the applications of five national distributing systems for the physical distribution of the product, released through the Affiliated. After investigating the service and terms offered by these companies, a distributing system will be selected by a referendum vote of all the directors. Advise your national director today of the distributing organization which, in your opinion, offers the most efficient service for simply the physical handling of pictures. An exhibitors' booking office will be maintained in each unit to do all the selling, arrange all bookings, fix all prices and classify theatres.

THESE EXHIBITORS ARE AT YOUR COMMAND

THE names in the opposite panel of the National Board of Directors of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, are those of exhibitors known to you personally or by reputation. Their standing is the highest.

These exhibitors are your direct representatives, elected by their fellow exhibitors. They represent business organizations of exhibitors which have taken out their charters and put up their money to back the Affiliated plan of co-operative booking.

They are the managers of the Affiliated. They run the organization for you. They make certain exhibitor control in all things and at all times.

Exhibitors of equal prominence are associated with them as officers of the exhibitor booking organizations in each territory.

You should get in touch with these directors or officers at once. Already, 2025 booking days have been subscribed, and pictures are now being considered for release.

Don't be left out of the most beneficial movement for exhibitors that has ever been instituted in the moving picture industry. Act today

Facts and Comments

MORE than ever are we astonished as time goes us opportunity for contemplation at the performance of the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which went to Washington the other day to talk to Chairman Kitchin and the Congressional Ways and Means Committee. That committee was supposed to give the Congressmen some ideas regarding the way to tax the motion picture industry. A careful reading of the proceedings fails to reveal just what information, if any, was communicated. Several of the delegates hastened to assure the Congressmen that the industry wanted to pay its share of the national requirements, but in the next breath they went on record as being against increasing the admission tax. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD rises here to ask that if admission taxes are not raised who is going to pay the tax?

Everybody knows that if an increased tax is levied upon raw stock or the finished product the cost of a completed reel of pictures will be increased. Everybody knows that if the cost of making pictures is increased that the rental price will be increased. As the exhibitor pays the rental price any increase along that line will fall on him. If not, then who will pay it? Plainly there is no escape for the exhibitor paying the tax up to this point. This was made quite clear when the question came up last fall on the proposition to charge an additional 15 cents a reel on each release a week to cover the footage tax levied by the Government on raw and finished film. It is quite plain that any effort to place an increased tax on film will increase the cost to the exhibitor. It is useless to argue otherwise.

Now then if the exhibitor must pay additional rental, where is he to get the money? How is he to pass the tax along? Apparently the only way he can do that is to raise his admission price. Does the N. A. M. P. I. committee know of any other way? If it does the information would be gratefully received by several thousand exhibitors.

Another matter respectfully submitted to the committee from the N. A. M. P. I.: One of its members was interrogated by Chairman Kitchin on the question of footage tax in Great Britain. Mr. Kitchin made the statement that Great Britain imposed a footage tax on film, and the N. A. M. P. I. man admitted the statement to be true. If he had been at all conversant with the question he would have known that no footage tax is imposed by Great Britain on film made and used in Britain. The British footage film tax is on exports and imports; home-made film pays no such tax. Manufacturers of film there pay a high income tax and theaters collect an admission tax. If the N. A. M. P. I. can do no better than this something must be lacking in its service.

THE latest indoor sport seems to be hectoring George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information. Several people have had their innings in the game, and now the motion picture men are taking theirs. On this branch of the committee's activities Congress has been induced to ask Mr. Creel what he is doing and what contracts he has made for distribution, with whom and what he is doing with the money. Bob Cochrane started the row, which may result in clearing up the situation. If there is a colored gentleman hiding in the wood pile by all means let him be smoked out.

CONCERING the activities of the Creel committee the Division of Films wishes exhibitors to understand that official war pictures are being released by all the different news weeklies every week. This service began June 3 and has continued without interruption ever since. "Don't let anybody tell you different." The Division of Films is releasing "Pershing's Crusaders" through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and "Allied War Review" through Pathe, Inc.

A Great Theme

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

OVER and over again it has been tried in story form, but it can be told in a thousand different ways, each unlike the others, all of profound interest to spectators of any class or condition.

The making of a man.

Ditmars has shown us on the screen that some of the lower orders of animal life care for their young only a few weeks—after that the little ones are self-supporting, some almost from the moment of birth.

Of all living creatures the most helpless during infancy is man.

Left to himself he would soon cease to exist.

From the very first he is dependent upon others for food, shelter and clothes, and the complicated organization of modern society, tending more and more to specialization of work, brings about an interdependence rendering each of us almost as helpless as we were in times of elementary need. Even such a simple requirement as that of water to drink brings about the tremendous construction of costly aqueducts. The individual exists as he is only through organized social effort.

As an intense individual he is usually in a state of revolt.

Society says he shall do so and so. He must conduct himself according to certain rules and regulations or expect to be isolated, perhaps condemned to punishment. He is thus obliged to keep his attention strictly in line with that of his group, unless he can command the attention and respect of his group long enough to start a revolution of common opinion. As a rule, however, he is a mere drop of water engaged in trying to alter the course of an entire river. He can only do that at some moment of flood, when he carries a mass of others along.

Each man of native power thus feels a sense of responsibility.

Native power he must have, but it will be wasted unless directed along lines indicated by high intelligence. Even his physical strength, great though it be by inheritance, must be nourished and trained, and that may depend upon the place where he is born and raised, the circumstances in which he is brought up.

Thus his story becomes one of environment.

It may be a brilliant and fascinating story, full of adventure and romance, yet show at every step the effects of his early training, his mental differences from other men, the effect of his associations, even of his religious views, or lack of them. The latter influence may be parental—an enormous number of great scientists, literary men, artists and creative geniuses are descended from ministers, deans and pastors. Then his social environment counts heavily.

But greatest of all is the effect of his education.

Very decided genius may be a substitute for education—the man may educate himself—but a very small proportion struggle up from a condition of neglected instruction, barely one or two in a hundred. Some ninety-eight per cent. of the achievements in the world which count have come from men of well-trained minds. The logical necessity of a fine education, well-believed in here, can thus be enforced.

Here is splendid opportunity for some Griffith, Blackton, Porter or Ince.

Given a maximum amount or superior education in a community, even in a family, and we have the rich ground in which ability can best grow and flourish. While this purpose could be submerged, made subordinate to that of story interest and entertainment, it would show how education enables a man to select and successfully pursue a career out of the ordinary. It would be entirely practical to demonstrate that education is the determining factor of individual progress, so that all who grasp the story's meaning could cheerfully assent to improvement in our methods as one of the best and most economical of public measures.

In that question the whole human race is concerned.

Why not give the leading roles to leaders of men?

The inconsequential hero can never satisfy the public today.

Picture him a true man, self-doubting at times, yet overcoming difficulties through an education which is the "bread of his soul."

Let us see the making of a man.

The Scope of Screen Fiction

By Edward Weitzel.

THE screen produces fifty photoplays or screen novels to every drama seen on the stage, but the scope of the older art is infinitely greater than that of the shadow play up to the present time. Screen fiction is now very circumscribed. Its serious drama seldom departs from the simplest and most elementary form; its aims to do the thinking for its patrons: to point out the right from the wrong much in the same way that a parent endeavors to instruct a child.

Vice is punished and virtue rewarded at the end of the fifth reel with such regularity that it is easy to forecast before the end of the first thousand feet the happy fate of the hero and his sweetheart and the unpleasant doom of the villain or his partner in crime, the sinuous but seductive vampire.

No argument can be advanced against the use of this formula, of course. It occupies an honorable place in popular esteem, both on the stage and on the screen, and has an influence for good that should not be underrated. But it does not truthfully reflect life in all its phases.

A Higher Form of Screen Fiction.

A marked tendency among some of the producers of photoplays, and also of one or two critics of the screen, is to decry anything that may stir the spectator deeply, the claim being advanced that people go to the moving picture to be entertained and do not want their feelings harrowed up by death scenes, especially where a little child is involved. This point is well taken in many cases—but the objection comes from the handling of the incident, not the incident itself. A perfect work of art never offended the sensibilities of a human being worthy the name, and the major portion of the men and women who attend the moving picture theaters is not deficient in right feeling when it knows that the anguish depicted on the screen is the natural outcome of the story. Who that recalls the death of Little Paul in "Dombey & Son" ever fails to realize its beauty and its chastening influence?

The allusion already made to the class of fiction that very nearly dominates the screen, shows that it follows a form of stage drama that is not of the highest type. Commercially successful, like the drama of "Everywoman" with its obvious and crudely sketched types, these examples of screen fiction demand nothing of the spectator but a childlike faith and receptivity. He is taken by the hand, and human existence is shown him shorn of most of its sidelights and much of its truth.

The hero is without a blemish and the villain's soul is devoid of one decent instinct. Everything is symbolized and every precaution taken to save the spectator from using his own gray matter. Once virtue always wore a black cloak, while vice attired herself in one of red. On the screen innocence is soonest recognized by her modest white nightgown; infamy by the richness and daring of her silk pajamas.

This is not an artistic error—for the grade of art it represents. No art can exist without its conventions. But is it ever going to be worth while commercially for the screen to show life whole?

There is no question of its artistic advantage. Galsworthy did it in "Justice." He did not take either side of an argument. He showed his audience a slice of life as it is, with all its complexity, its strength and weakness, its suffering and compassion, and left it to the man in front of the footlights to find his own moral. The play appealed to the brain as well as the emotions. It was successful in London and New York. It broke no records on the road, but in London it started a much needed prison reform, and in this country it gave a fine company of American actors an opportunity to achieve a signal success.

Will the same grade of fiction make a place for itself on the screen?

Moving Picture World Man Honored

F. H. RICHARDSON, who has for many years conducted the Projection Department of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and who is also editor of the Projection Department of Cine Mundial, the Spanish edition of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, is in receipt of the following communication:

Buenos Aires, Argentina, May 14, 1918.

Mr. F. H. Richardson, Cine Mundial, 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Dear Mr. Richardson: I have the honor to notify you that the Board of Directors of the Association of Moving Picture Operators of Argentina, at the meeting held on the fifth of the present month, voted to tender to you appointment as honorary general director of the society. All the members of the society approve said appointment, which enables us to include in the society so honorable a gentleman and one of such recognized talent.

Board of Directors Association Moving Picture Operators of Argentina,
By Bruno E. Tedeschi, Secretary.

The above named society is, we are informed, the largest association of its kind in all Latin America and even larger than any in Spain. The honor done Mr. Richardson is significant as showing how firmly Cine Mundial, the Spanish edition of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, is becoming intrenched in Latin America. It is pleasing that Mr. Richardson should have gained such standing with the Spanish speaking men in so comparatively short a space of time, particularly in view of the difficulties he encounters in his work in Cine Mundial. Mr. Richardson does not himself speak Spanish, hence it is necessary to translate communications to his department into English and then translate his reply into Spanish.

DEATH OF SOL J. BERMAN.

Sol J. Berman, manager of the New York exchange of Jewel Productions, Inc., died on Tuesday morning, June 25, at his home 801 West End Avenue, New York, aged 32 years. He leaves a widow and a daughter. Interment was made at Beth Alom cemetery, Cypress Hills, New York, on Friday, June 28.

The deceased entered the film business as an office boy for Clarke & Rowland in that firm's Pittsburgh office several years ago. Mastering the details of the exchange business he was appointed manager of the firm's office at Des Moines, Iowa. Subsequently he opened a branch office at Omaha for the same company, but later went into business for himself. Then he was in the employ of the Mutual and eventually came to New York City to assume charge of the New York exchange of the World Film. He was with Bluebird and Select before joining the Jewel organization. He had many friends in the business and his death will be felt keenly.

Loss of Gerard Print Stirs Officials

Fear That Thief May Attempt to Use Subject in Neutral Countries to Disadvantage of United States.

AGENTS of the Department of Justice have taken in hand the task of locating the missing print of Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," which was stolen from the projection room of the Globe theater, at Fifteenth street and Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, on the night of Wednesday, June 15.

The disappearance of the film took place under suspicious circumstances, which has led the Brooklyn police and the Department of Justice officials to believe it was taken for the purpose of shipping it into some foreign country, where the print could be duplicated and exploited to the advantage of pro-German interests. For several days past all outgoing steamers have been zealously watched, but as a result of the rigorous rules applying to the shipment of films abroad there seems to be small chance of its getting past the Government officials.

There is, however, a possibility that the parties responsible for the theft of the film intend to smuggle it into Mexico and Central and South American countries. With this idea in mind representatives of the Department of Justice are now maintaining a sharp watch on the border.

It has been known for some time past to Ambassador Gerard and his film associates that representatives of German propaganda are highly desirous of securing a copy of the picture, it being their evident intention to distort the sub-titles in such a way as to make the production appear to their advantage. If this were done in countries like Mexico and Chile, where pro-German influences are strong, there is no doubt the picture could be made a large financial success. It might also exert considerable influence favorable to Germany's war aims.

Whoever took the film from the Globe theater chose an unusually opportune moment to execute the theft, as Rudolph Sanders, proprietor of the house, was taken to the hospital with an acute attack of appendicitis the day before the film disappeared and has been confined there ever since.

Operators Are Declared Non-Essential

Those Within Draft Age Must Secure Other Employment, Pittsburgh Delegation Is Informed.

REPRESENTATIVES of the Pittsburgh motion picture operators' union, who visited Washington last week, were informed that the members of their trade would not be exempted from the recently announced "work or fight" regulations promulgated by the provost marshall general. They were given an opportunity to confer with officials of the office of the provost marshal general, arrangements having been made by Congressman Garland.

The officials of the provost marshal general's office hold no uncertain views in this matter. They feel that it is perfectly feasible, in the event that men not in the draft cannot be secured in sufficient numbers to replace the operators who must go into more essential industry, to send women into the booths of the theaters to operate the projection machines.

KUNSKY PREPARING FOR OPERATOR SHORTAGE.

With the possible shortage of motion picture operators due to the Crowder work or fight order, the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, operating ten theaters in Detroit, are planning to install a school for women and men who are over the draft age. George W. Trendle, secretary of the Kunsky Enterprises, believes the government will draft the operators into the war plants, and that it is up to exhibitors right now to start training women and other older men for the work. "We are not going to wait until the worst has happened, but we are going to prepare for it," said Mr. Trendle.

Players Ask for More Equitable Taxation

Point Is Made Before Congress Committee That Large Incomes of Screen Actors Are for Few Years Only

DECLARING that the members of the motion picture industry would neither urge nor desire any reduction in the income tax, Grant Carpenter, of Los Angeles, Cal., assistant secretary of the Motion Picture Service Association, appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee in Washington last week to point out some of the inequalities and inequities of the tax law.

Mr. Carpenter explained that the Motion Picture War Service Association is an organization formed primarily for the purpose of unifying and concentrating the patriotic work of the 175,000 people employed in the motion picture business.

Among the officers of this association are David Wark Griffith (chairman), Mack Sennett, S. E. V. Taylor, Cecil De Mille, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Lois Weber, Douglas Fairbanks, W. S. Hart, Jesse L. Lasky, Marguerite Clark, and William Fox.

"In order that there may be no misunderstanding of our purpose in this hearing," declared the witness, "we state positively and unequivocally that we neither urge nor desire any reduction in the income tax. The members of our association are not only willing, but eager, to bear their full share of the burdens of the war, and they consider it a privilege to serve our country in this crisis. We ask merely the opportunity to call to the attention of this committee the existing tax law, and some of the results that will flow from a material increase of the present rates.

"Especially do we ask for a heavier tax on unearned income than upon earned income, adopting as a definition of 'earned income' the phraseology of the English law as follows:

"'Income arising in respect of remuneration from any office or employment of profit or in respect of any pension or compensation given in respect to past services of the individual, or of the husband or parent of the individual in any office or employment of profit, and income derived from the exercise of a profession, trade, or vocation.'

Compares Income from Art and from Dividends.

"Income derived from any other source, therefore, shall be deemed 'unearned.' This definition is obviously based upon a recognized distinction between tangible and intangible capital, and income derived from accumulated wealth, and that derived from cumulative effort. Permit us at this time to draw a comparison between the individual who derives his income from his art and the individual who derives his income from dividends on investments. I have in mind a woman in one of the arts who began only last year, after many years of poorly paid apprenticeship, to earn large sums of money. Her intangible capital is the experience and the knowledge of her art she has accumulated, and upon which she has only begun to realize.

"The tax, as now applied, takes almost half of her earnings. In the nature of her business she can not expect, under the most favorable conditions, to enjoy the popularity that brings her this income for more than a few years—five at the outside—and the hazards and risks of her employment—a brief illness or a scar on the face may end her earning power at any moment for all time. During that period she may be taxed anywhere from 25 per cent to 50 per cent of all the earnings of a lifetime, and at the end of it her capital is gone.

"On the other hand, take a man with a similar income derived from dividends. This man's income would not be taxable at all under the excess profits law, nor would he pay any normal income tax; so that, when the war is over, and the tax removed, this individual's capital would be unimpaired, and he would perhaps enjoy a larger income on the increased valuation of his property through no effort of his own."

Declares Industry Has Suffered Depression.

Mr. Carpenter was asked by Congressman J. Hampton Moore, of Pennsylvania, whether or not it was a fact that the moving picture shows were doing a bigger business generally since the war began than prior thereto. In answer he declared that the industry as a whole has suffered a depression; many theaters have closed all over the country, and in Los Angeles, where 75 per cent. of the pictures are made, the production has been largely decreased, salaries have been cut, and the falling off of business has impaired the earnings of the artists and actors.

Several members of the Ways and Means Committee sought to have Mr. Carpenter detail the salaries paid to the well-known stars, but he gracefully avoided that. He was also questioned at length as to the extent of the business done in Los Angeles.

He sought to show why the law should be changed with respect to the motion picture people, pointing to the case of Charlie Chaplin, who, he said, was taken to the music halls by his father when he was a child, and he suffered all the privations up to a very short time ago, and served a long apprenticeship. Committeemen declared that many other professions could be found where the members thereof had gone through privations in the early years of their profession, and there has been heard the same sort of argument concerning John D. Rockefeller.

He was asked by Mr. Moore if he, or the profession which he represents, would object if there should be a release of the excess profits tax so far as salaries are concerned, that the income tax should be increased so as to meet so far as that proportion would help out the exigencies of the Government

"I cannot say as to that," was the reply. "I think that the people I represent want to do whatever is right and fair. And they want to bear whatever is their share of the burden, and not more. In the final analysis, that is what the committee will have to decide."

Congressman Says Industry Has Done Wonders.

Mr. Moore: I believe that, thoroughly, and the representatives of the moving pictures have been here, and they have spoken with equal evidence of patriotism, and they are willing to be taxed, and we have admitted, most of us, I think, that the moving picture industry, and the moving picture artists, have done wonders to contribute to the success of the various war funds. Now, the President has issued a call for $24,000,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury has said, speaking for him, that we must raise approximately $8,000,000,000 of that by taxation. We must go into the pockets of the moving picture actors and artists and others, and raise twice as much by taxation as we did last year. And the problem we have is raising more and without any changes lowering the tax unless we have been properly charged with inequity. I state this to you in all fairness, because I know that you come here in good faith.

Mr. Carpenter: All that we are maintaining here is the question of the earned income and capital principal, and we believe that unearned income should be distinguished and differentiated from earned incomes.

"We are not asking for an exemption. We are asking that if there is to be an increase in the tax that motion picture people who earn their incomes by their efforts be excepted from the operation of the excess profits law, because their earnings have no connection whatever with the war. On the contrary, the war has depressed the business greatly and has reduced the earnings of the business."

Congressman Green, of Iowa, stated that the Committee very likely would remove the feature that the witness was objecting to, but in the end the people he represents are likely to pay more, and the witness replied "We do not object to paying mor, if it is equitable."

"There is one thing I want to say before I close," said Mr. Carpenter, "just a word. I want to call the attention of the committee to the useful and essential character of the services of motion picture actors. You may think that it is a frivolous employment altogether, but there are about 175,000 people engaged in the industry, showing pictures through about 15,000 theaters to about 45,000,000 people a week. Any industry that can stir up the patriotism and keep up the hopes and confidence of the people of the country is useful. Any business that can do what this industry has done in the way of advancing Government propaganda, second in publicity not even to the press, is absolutely essential. And, gentlemen of the committee, a part of my mission here is to see in the various departments of the Government how the motion picture industry can further help the Government by any publicity or any sort of production that can be given."

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Ochs Is General Manager of Exposition

Elected at Meeting of Massachusetts League—National League Going Ahead with Plans.

AT a meeting of the Massachusetts branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at its rooms at 127 Pleasant street, Boston, Tuesday afternoon, June 18, National President Lee A. Ochs was appointed general manager of the motion picture exposition that is to be held in Boston in the Mechanics' Building July 13 to 20.

The object of the meeting was to discuss the plans for running the exposition without the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which voted to withdraw at a recent meeting held in New York. At just one-half hour after the New York vote was taken William A. Brady signed a contract for $750 worth of space for his daughter, Alice Brady.

Mr. Ochs addressed the exhibitors regarding the exposition: "At a recent meeting in New York it was agreed that there should be two expositions, one in the winter and one in the summer," he said. "They were both to be held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The one in the winter was to be held in New York and the one in the summer, to be held wherever the league chose. For the summer of 1918 Boston was decided upon for the convention city. The plans were all arranged for the exposition. When only three and one-half weeks away the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry withdrew and left the Exhibitors' league to run the exposition alone.

"The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is going to run the exposition, and if they can get the stars to come to Boston they are assured of making it a success."

Mr. Ochs spoke of the hard work in getting the producers to allow the stars to come to the exposition. He said they would lose from three to six days. The stars would not work the day before the trip, the day of the trip and the day after. If they allowed the stars to come to the convention it would cost them an enormous amount of money, which they are not willing to spend to make the exposition a success.

Mr. Ochs stated that the convention would be an absolute failure without the stars and asked the branch managers of the different film exchanges to use their influence toward getting the stars for the exposition. It was the plan of Mr. Ochs to have the opening night an Alice Brady night and have as many other stars present as he could get.

At a recent meeting Mr. Ochs organized a company called the Motion Picture Exposition company. At a conference with Mr. Berkamp, attorney for Charlie Chaplin, he received the assurance of Mr. Berkamp that Sidney Chaplin and very likely Charlie Chaplin would be at the convention.

Presence of Five Stars Pledged.

Mr. Ochs then gave the names of the following stars that he was sure he could get: Billie Burke, Marie Doro, Charlie Chaplin, Alice Brady and June Caprice. He said Mr. Zukor of the Paramount and Artcraft was against the exposition, but if the other companies went into it he would. Mr. Fox of the Fox pictures and Mr. Powers of the Universal made the same statement.

Mr. Ochs said when the exposition was held at Chicago all the boosters came there from Boston and made their plans for the Boston convention. They told of the big things that they would do at their convention and "now it is up to the Boston film men to put it over." Mr. Ochs said there has always been a large amount of talk of the industry being the fifth largest in the world and people would expect them to make the exposition a success, even if they did have to run it without the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

He went on to say that he expected over 100,000 people would see the exposition in Boston and that they would have the support of every newspaper in the city.

"While I was in New York the Boston American rang me up at my headquarters several times in regard to advertising space and agreed to run several pages of advertising a week," said Mr. Ochs. The national president said the people wanted to see the stars and would pay money to see them and without them they could not make the convention a success. "They do not want to see one or two stars but forty or fifty of them, and that is sure to draw a crowd every night of the exposition."

Mr. Ochs then read a list of the following who had already bought space in the exposition: William Brady, for his daughter, Alice Brady, $750; William L. Sherry, $750 for his stars, Doris Kenyon and Catherine Calvert; World Film Corporation, $500; Simplex projection company, twelve to fourteen hundred dollars.

Ochs Named Chairman of Success Committee.

A motion was adopted appointing Lee A. Ochs chairman of a committee to go into the details of the exposition and make it a success. Those appointed on the committee were: Lee A. Ochs, chairman; Alfred S. Black, of the Maine branch of the league; M. J. Lydon, president of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island branches; P. F. Lydon, of Dorchester; Ernest H. Horstmann, of Boston; J. Laurie, of the Modern and Beacon theaters, Boston; B. H. Cornell, of Boston; Leon Dadmun, of the Atlas Film Corporation, and Frank J. Howard, of the Atlas Film Exchange, Boston; George Fecke, of the World Film Exchange, Boston; Harry Wasserman, Samuel Grant, of Boston; Stanley Sumner, of the Fenway theater, Boston; Al. Somerby, of the Bowdoin Square theater, Boston; Joseph Di Pesa, of Boston; Nathan Hoffman, of Boston, and Charles H. Ross, of the Lancaster theater, Boston.

Mr. Ochs said that according to the contract with the lessees of Mechanics' Hall they could not begin to move the things in until the 10th of July and they would have to work fast, as they would have only three days after that before the opening night of the convention. Mr. Ochs said: "If we can pull this convention through and still make ten or fifteen thousand dollars we will feel very well satisfied with our efforts, but we must allow for the enormous cost of newspaper and street car advertising. A night will be dedicated to the city and state officials and the soldiers and sailors, for on those nights we will issue complimentary tickets. The proceeds of the exposition will be divided between the local and the national organization, each getting 50 per cent.

A move was then made that a committee of three men send a telegram to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry condemning them for drawing out at the eleventh hour. The three men appointed were: Ernest H. Horstmann, Alfred S. Black and Colonel Henry L. Kincaide.

O'Donnell Elected Pennsylvania Head

Following Two Day State Convention Keystoners and Their Friends Go to New Jersey for a Frolic.

THE annual state convention of the Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, held in Philadelphia on June 24 and 25, was supplemented by an outing in Westville, N. J., which was attended by the exhibitors, exchangemen and those employed in the industry, accompanied by their friends and families. The election and installation of state officers, delegates and alternates occurred on the second day of the convention, the result of which was as follows:

Judge J. O'Donnell of Philadelphia, was unanimously re-elected state president; Fred G. Nirdlinger of Philadelphia, first vice-president; George L. Bittender of Plymouth, second vice-president; Charles H. Goodwin of Philadelphia, secretary, and A. H. Nace of Quakertown, Pa., treasurer.

Delegates for the National Convention, Albert E. Brown, J. S. Evans, J. Conway, Charles H. Goodwin, Dr. S. Steinberg, Charles Rapoporte, Columbus Stamper, A. H. Nace and Sam Blatt. Alternates, Judge J. O'Donnell, George Naudascher, Al Fischer, A. Roganzer, Edward J. O'Keefe, Fred Nirdlinger, Ben Shindler and A. E. Jeffries.

A resolution made by Dr. S. Steinberg condemning the music tax law and urging a hearty support to the Government's war plans was unanimously adopted by the League.

A motion authorizing the chairman to appoint an executive committee of five in addition to the state officers, and with the addition of one member to be placed on the committee as each local is formed, was seconded and passed by the body. A resolution to furnish ways and means of furnishing a state organizer to organize new localities throughout Pennsylvania was also carried.

There was a lively time at the picnic and many contests were indulged in by the men and the fair sex. The fat man's race was won by Judge O'Donnell, while Dr. Steinberg won the fat man's high jump. Steve of the Metro won the 100-yard dash in a race where there were over fifty entries. A hotly contested baseball game was won by the exchangemen, who defeated the exhibitors by a score of 7 to 4. During the evening after the crowd had partaken of the picnic luncheon many speeches were made lauding the newly elected state president, Judge O'Donnell, and many toasts were offered wishing his success as the next National President of the League. The final event was the dancing contest, which was won by Daniel Heenan and Sam Blatt.

Maryland Exhibitors Hold Meeting

Defer Action on Election and on Music Tax, but Choose Delegates to Boston.

THE annual meeting of the Maryland Exhibitors' League was held at headquarters, 210 West Lexington street, on Friday afternoon, June 21. Frank A. Hornig, president of the League, presided, and the meeting was called to order at 3 o'clock. Several matters of importance to the Maryland exhibitors generally were taken up, but action was held over until further investigations are made of conditions. One of these was the scarcity of operators and the other concerned the tax on music.

The annual election of officers should have taken place at this meeting, but on a motion made by Thomas D. Goldberg that the present officers hold their positions until another meeting is called, this action was adopted.

J. Louis Rome made a motion that a crab feast be held in the near future for the members of the League and their families. This motion was unanimously passed. A committee was appointed to make arrangements for the affair including Louis Schlichter, Milton Caplon and William E. Stumpf.

Quite a discussion ensued when the question came up as to how the Maryland exhibitors should go about fighting the present tax on music which they have to pay or go without certain music. The final decision on the matter was that they will hold off from any action until they know what procedure will be taken at the Convention which is to be held in Boston.

Delegates from the Maryland League to the Boston Convention were then elected, as follows: Frank A. Hornig, of the Horn and Royal theaters, chairman; L. A. DeHoff, of the New theater, and J. Louis Rome of the Broadway.

According to the usual custom of the League a committee of two was appointed to audit the books of the secretary and treasurer. These were Eugene B. McCurdy and Charles Nolte.

Those present at the meeting were E. B. McCurdy, C. W. Pacey, Milton Caplon, William E. Stumpf, Phillip Scheck, Frank A. Hornig, Louis A. DeHoff, J. Louis Rome, Thomas D. Goldberg, Louis Schlichter, William Emmish, Charles E. Nolte and M. A. Berger.

TEXAS MEN CONVENE JULY 8.

When the cool gulf breezes blow over the island city of Galveston during the second week in July, Texas amusement men will be there. Dates for the 1918 convention of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association have been fixed for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, July 8, 9 and 10, and headquarters will be maintained at the Tremont Hotel. Thus early indications are that there will be a full attendance. Texas moving picture fellows always have a good time when they get together, and each time, those who attend say, the opportunity is greater to learn some valuable things about the conduct of their business. E. H. Hulsey, of the Queen and Old Mill theaters, Dallas, is president of the association, which is two years old and will celebrate its third birthday in July. P. C. Levy of the Strand theater, Fort Worth, is treasurer and a member of the board of directors.

VIRGINIA STATE CONVENTION DEFERRED.

The special A. E. A. Virginia state convention, which was scheduled to be held at Ocean View, Va., August 25 and 26, has been postponed to a later date, after the national A. E. A. convention to be held at Chicago, August 20. Due notice of the Virginia meeting will be announced in these columns.

FRANK KEENAN STAGES BENEFIT.

Frank Keenan was the master of ceremonies at a benefit performance by the Stage Women's War Relief on Thursday, June 20, at the Mason Opera House in Los Angeles. The Pathe star staged a vaudeville show at $2 admission, with Maude Adams as the headline act. It was her first appearance in vaudeville. Other distinguished players were Fannie Ward, also a Pathe star; Nat Goodwin, Julian Eltinge and a half-dozen others of like caliber. Leopold Godowsky, the piano virtuoso, also was on the program.

LANG OF NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY IN COLON.

Arthur J. Lang, export manager of the Nicholas Power Company, has arrived safely at Colon. He was well received and gave a column interview in a local newspaper, in which he didn't forget to say that "Everybody in the States is right behind the President."

Colonel Roosevelt's Works to be Filmed

Frederick L. Collins Will Supervise the Production—Accruing Royalties for Benefit of War Charities.

IN the belief that his action will materially benefit the American Red Cross and other kindred war charities to the extent of many thousands of dollars Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has consented to the picturization of his various books and writings under the supervision and direction of Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company. When seen at Oyster Bay regarding his important decision to permit the screen to visualize some of his most important literary works Colonel Roosevelt made the following statement:

"Several of the more important producers of motion pictures have approached me with plans for films based on the books that I have written. I have never considered any of these offers seriously until recently, when it occurred to me that large sums might be realized for the American Red Cross or other war charities through the production and exhibition of such pictures. I have therefore consented to the production of a limited number of pictures to be produced and exhibited in accordance with a properly coordinated plan on the definite condition that all of the royalties received by me during the war may be devoted to such war charities as I may designate.

"Knowing very little about the film business myself I have placed my motion picture affairs in the hands of Frederick L. Collins, publisher of McClure's Magazine, who already has wide interests in the motion picture field, and who is, I believe, in a position to produce these pictures or to secure their production under his supervision in a dignified and successful manner.

"I shall be very glad to co-operate in every possible way with Mr. Collins and his associates in the hope that a considerable sum may be raised and help meet the war needs. The final success of the undertaking, of course, depends not upon me, but upon the consideration and support of the great motion picture public. Exactly to the extent that the motion picture public approves these pictures it will help to provide additional means for backing the men at the front."

Possibilities for Charity Convinced the Colonel.

Speaking of the decision of Colonel Roosevelt to consent to the production of his works in film under his supervision Mr. Collins made the following statement:

"It is true that I have at last been fortunate enough to convince Colonel Roosevelt of the desirability of adapting his books and writings to motion picture. When the matter was first broached to him he was not at all favorable to the plan, but when it occurred to the Colonel that thousands of dollars for the Red Cross and other war charities would be raised by the production of such a series of patriotic pictures at this time he began to see the matter in quite a different light.

"The uppermost thought in Colonel Roosevelt's mind today is to win the war, so he has very generously insisted that he should have the privilege of designating certain war charities to which the royalties which would normally go to him should be donated. With this end in view he has promised his hearty co-operation in making the films as successful as possible.

"My associates and I have not as yet decided whether we will produce all of these pictures ourselves or arrange for their production, under our supervision, by other producers. Probably one film, based on one article of Mr. Roosevelt's, will be produced by a different firm. In fact, we have not determined finally the order in which the pictures should appear."

Some of Colonel Roosevelt's more recent patriotic writings of a non-political character, such as "Fear God—and Take Your Own Part," "Put the Flag on the Firing Line," and "The Hun Within Our Gates," should certainly be among the first films to be produced, although a picture of a more general character, based on "Theodore Roosevelt—an Autobiography," may be the first production to be released.

Every attempt will be made in the production and distribution of these pictures to have every detail comport with the dignity of the colonel's position and with a full realization of the opportunity for patriotic service, which his generosity has made possible.

DORCAS MATTHEWS' INJURY BECOMES SERIOUS.

Owing to injuries received more than a year ago Dorcas Matthews, wife of Robert McKim, a well-known member of the Thomas H. Ince players, will be confined to her home for about two months.

Enrico Caruso Becomes a Screen Star

Famous Players-Lasky Confirms Story of Great Tenor's Appearance Before Camera.

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has finally confirmed the report that Enrico Caruso has been signed as a Famous Player star and will begin work July 15, probably in the east. The negotiations were conducted through Julius Steger, who has for two years been trying to induce the world-famous tenor to appear upon the screen. Confirmation of Caruso's engagement came from Famous Players-Lasky Monday, July 1, although Mr. Steger had for several days before that insisted the deal was consummated, but always lacked Adolph Zukor's official O. K.

"Pagliacci," greatest of all Caruso's operatic achievements, will very likely be the first picture produced for Famous Players. As customary in big deals in which celebrities are brought to negotiate screen engagements, "big money" is hinted at in the Caruso deal. In some papers it has been printed that the tenor will receive $200,000. From other sources the figure arrives at $100,000 with a percentage of the profits.

Julius Steger will personally direct Caruso's screen achievements, and it was with this understanding that the famous Italian operatic star signed the present agreement with Mr. Zukor. The International Film Service, Inc., where Mr. Steger is permanently associated, has consented to the arrangement.

The second Marion Davies production is under way, with Mr. Steger directing, and after the Caruso productions are completed Mr. Steger will supervise productions for the International in which Anna Case will be presented.

"The Finger of Justice" Turned Down

Anti-Vice Film Not Permitted by Commissioner Gilchrist to Open at the Lyric.

THE Rev. Paul Smith's anti-vice drama, "The Finger of Justice," which was reviewed favorably in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World, was not permitted to open at the Lyric theater, New York, Saturday evening, June 29. At the usual hour for starting the performance the reverend gentleman appeared on the stage and read a letter from Commissioner Gilchrist, of the Bureau of Licenses, warning the Lyric Theater Company that its license would be revoked if it persisted in going ahead with the showing of the photoplay.

In the opinion of the commissioner "The Finger of Justice" is immoral, and the stand he has taken is based solely on that ground. The picture, it will be recalled, is the outcome of a vice crusade in San Francisco, which the clergyman conducted among the fallen women of that city. The women were driven out of their regular haunts and a delegation of over four hundred visited the minister and asked him: "What are you going to do with us?" The picture answers that question.

The matter has not been finally settled. The clergyman on Sunday night addressed an audience at the Church of the Strangers on the subject, and termed Commissioner Gilchrist "the Czar of the Movies." He also obtained an order from Justice Pendleton for the commissioner to appear before Justice Mullins last Monday morning and show cause. Decision went over until Tuesday.

At the Lyric theater Harold Bell Wright's picture, "The Eyes of the World," was shown Saturday night in place of the forbidden film. The next night William A. Brady's production of "Stolen Orders" was transferred from the Park theater to the Lyric for a run.

FAMOUS PLAYERS TO MAKE "THE SILVER KING."

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased the screen rights to "The Silver King," one of the great successes of the English-speaking stage. This splendid old melodrama, first produced in the early eighties, will be interpreted on the screen by an all-star cast under one of the most capable of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's directors, and will be one of the nine special productions to be produced during the coming year, commencing September 1, under the Paramount and Artcraft banners.

ENDERT MANAGING SEATTLE FOR UNIVERSAL.

George Endert, one of the most popular exchangemen in the Northwest, became manager of the Seattle offices of the Universal Film Exchanges on June 15, succeeding J. R. Meldrum, resigned. Mr. Endert was formerly manager for Pathe and Paramount in that territory. He resigned from the latter organization to come to Universal.

Fox Shows Government 500,000 Feet of Film

Under New Ruling Film Company Has to Unpack and Screen Subjects Destined for Export.

AN indication of the far-reaching effect of the recent Government order regarding film exports is given in a statement from the Fox Film Corporation that when the Government's ruling was received that corporation had to unpack and give a screening of 500,000 feet of film, which was all ready for shipment to all parts of the world.

When the order from the Treasury Department was received, the Foreign Department of the Fox Film Corporation had on hand cases of films ready to be shipped to Wellington, New Zealand; Australia, England, South America and Canada.

At a moment's notice all these goods had to be unpacked, customs officials had to be brought to the projection rooms of the Fox Corporation at 130 West Forty-sixth street, and then, for about a week, everybody in the Fox foreign department had to labor far into the night to get the shipments ready again. By dint of tremendous efforts the consignments were exhibited to customs officials, approved, and put back into their cases on time.

In addition to this there was a large quantity of Fox films in transit to various American ports for shipment out of the country. These for a time were threatened with delay at the hands of the Government's agents, but the modification of the Treasury Department's original order, on solicitation of various film producers, allowed shipments in transit to go through without being censored by customs officials.

A brief history of the change in procedure will show how the sudden switch makes it more difficult for the exporter: Before June 1, the film exporter applied to Washington for an export license. After getting the license, the exporter was then in a position to ship immediately to the Allied countries without censorship and to South America after the film had been censored. Under the present system the exporter must first have the films for all countries except Canada censored by customs officials. Then he gets his license. But he can get an export license only for the amount of film censored. Thus one of the most troublesome features of the whole change is that the exporter cannot tell how soon after he has had his films censored he can ship.

How much delay will be entailed by the new system cannot be estimated at this time, but it is not believed it will be a great deal. The customs officials, the Fox people say, have been showing splendid co-operation and have been trying in every way to make things as easy as possible.

Goldwyn Starts String of Beach Stories

First of Half Dozen, on Which Work Begins Next Week, Will be "Laughing Bill Hyde."

GOLDWYN'S cameras will begin turning next week on the first of the six big Rex Beach productions that are to bear the Goldwyn imprint next season. The first of this new series of Rex Beach pictures will be his popular story, "Laughing Bill Hyde." Goldwyn has done the unusual thing in this instance of enlisting with Mr. Beach the talents of Willard Mack in the preparation of the scenario from the Beach story and in giving the direction of the production over to Reginald Barker. This, in effect, means an all-star scenario organization, a star director and linking other identities with one of the most popular authors.

During the coming season, Goldwyn will provide exhibitors with six Rex Beach productions. It is quite likely that the others in the series in addition to "Laughing Bill Hdye" will be "The Crimson Gardenia," "The Net," "Going Some," "The Silver Horde" and one other story as yet unnamed.

Those partially successful authors who are complaining all the time in print about their unsatisfactory relations with the motion picture producers might profit a great deal by emulating Rex Beach, whose experiences with the screen producers are at variance with those of nearly all other writers. Mr. Beach has never complained that his stories are unsympathetically produced or that the makers of motion pictures do not understand the successful writer or give him encouragement.

Primarily Mr. Beach himself is responsible for his tremendous successes. His stories contain screen story essentials. There is never a dearth of dramatic material or action. The problem in the making of a Rex Beach story for the screen is to condense them into screen form—to get in all of the wealth of material that the author provides.

As proof of their success one has only to think of "The Spoilers," "The Barrier," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "The Auction Block" and "Heart of the Sunset."

Carmel Myers Under Universal Contract

CARMEL MYERS, the star of many Bluebird screen victories, was born in San Francisco and remained loyal to the Golden Gate until one year to a day before the earthquake, when she left Los Angeles. Enrolling at the Los Angeles grammar school Miss Myers rapidly became popular, and started her dramatic career as Ellen in Scott's "Lady of the Lake."

Carmel Myers.

Entering high school Carmel was slated to play the lead in the school play. The teachers after a consultation decided that the part had best be played by the daughter of a school board power so Carmel quit school and fooled 'em.

In her father's library the gifted girl prepared herself for serious dramatic work. She read and studied and entered the films with a stable foundation of knowledge.

After some preliminary work with D. W. Griffith under the Fine Arts banner in which she appeared in "The Heiress of Coffee Dan's" and "Nina, the Flower Girl," and other productions she went to Metro and starred with Harold Lockwood in "The Haunted Pajamas."

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, discovered her among the ranks of the extra players and immediately pointed her out to his directors as a coming star, with the result that Universal put her under two years' contract. Her first picture was "Sirens of the Sea," a Jewel production, with Louise Lovely and Jack Mulhall.

Then came two more successes, "The Lash of Power" and "The Wife He Bought," Kenneth Harlan playing opposite in both pictures.

"My Unmarried Wife" was the star's next success, and was rapidly followed by "The Girl in the Dark," "The Wine Girl," "The Marriage Lie" and "A Broadway Scandal." Miss Myers recently completed "The City of Tears," which was released on June 24.

In addition to her work before the camera Carmel Myers is a sincere Red Cross worker on the salvage committee, and is constantly echoing the President's plea: "Win the war."

PERCIVAL TO MAKE SCREEN DEBUT.

Walter Percival is the newest recruit from the ranks of musical comedy stars to "go and do it." In the role of Beauty Blair in Metro's production of "Our Mrs. McChesney," Miss Barrymore's first screen vehicle of this season, Mr. Percival is making his first appearance before the camera and is particularly fortunate inasmuch as he makes his motion picture debut in Miss Barrymore's new play and also as the part of Beauty Blair contains some of the best comedy in the play.

Mr. Percival is well known to lovers of musical comedy, particularly in New York, for he holds the unique distinction of having played eight years without a break on Broadway, and during that time at but three theaters, the Broadway, Knickerbocker, and Casino.

MACHINIST MARTIN DISPOSES OF EQUIPMENT.

L. M. Martin, proprietor of the People's theater, Athena, Oregon, now a machinist in the United States Navy, stationed on the west coast, was in Portland a few days last week en route to Athena to arrange for the disposal of the fine equipment of his house there. S. H. Elliott, his partner, now in Lebanon, was with him in Portland.

Mr. Martin built up a successful business in Athena on practically exclusive Universal service, and left his business only to go into the service of the United States for the duration of the war.

Eight Affiliated Districts Elect Officers

Butterfield Heads Michigan Unit, While Lustig is Chosen To Head Northern Ohio.

THAT the exhibitors' booking corporations associated with the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation are losing no time in making operative the booking plan of the Affiliated was evidenced last week by the election of officers in several additional units. The officers elected in each territory are as follows:

Exhibitors Booking Corporation of Michigan.—President, W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek; first vice-president, Paul Schlosman, Muskegon; second vice-president, Harry Trendal, Detroit; secretary, King Perry, Detroit; treasurer, John P. Church, Detroit; national director, C. H. Seaman, Grand Rapids.

Exhibitors Booking Corporation of Northern Ohio.—President, Henry H. Lustig; secretary, M. B. Horwitz; treasurer, William J. Slimm; national director, Samuel Bullock; manager, Michael Schachtel, all of Cleveland.

Exhibitors Booking Corporation of Southern Ohio and Eastern Kentucky.—President, Charles Weigel; vice-president, Henry Hoefle; treasurer, Otto D. Dickman; secretary and national director, John Weining; assistant secretary, John Huelner, all of Cincinnati.

Exhibitors Booking Corporation of Illinois and Wisconsin.—President, William Heaney; vice-president, William Burford; secretary, H. Gundling; treasurer, M. A. Choynski; national directors, L. H. Frank and Joseph Hopp; directors, Sam Gold, Abe Ostrofsky, Jacob Cooper, George Hopkinson, Clyde Bates.

Exhibitors Booking Corporation of Upper Western New York.—President, Ira Mosher, Palace Theater, Buffalo; directors, Harold B. Franklin, Buffalo; William Fait, Jr., Utica; W. H. Linton, Little Falls; Charles Hyman, Niagara Falls; William A. Callahan, Rochester.

Exhibitors Booking Corporation of Indiana and Western Kentucky.—President, Hugh O'Donnell, Washington; vice-presidents, Charles Olson, Indianapolis, and A. C. Zearing, Indianapolis; G. R. Andrews, Muncie; treasurer, B. V. Barton, Indianapolis; national director, Frank J. Rambusch, Shelbyville.

The booking corporation in each territory handling the product released through the Affiliated maintain offices under the supervision of the officers of each corporation. Experienced managers have been chosen for these offices. In addition to this manager and his staff a representative of the Affiliated is assigned to each territory at the expense of the Affiliated to co-operate in the sale of bookings in excess of the units' quota.

The physical handling of the Affiliated product is to be placed with one national distributing system in order to provide uniformity of service and to insure the greatest degree of efficiency.

N. A. M. P. I. Nominate Directors

All Classes Have Named Their Selections to Be Elected at Boston Meeting—General Division Meets.

WITH the meeting of the General Division at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on Friday, June 28, nominations for directors of the association were completed. These selections will be voted for at the annual meeting, which is to be held at Copley Plaza Hotel, Boston, on Friday, July 19, at 11 o'clock a. m. The full list of nominations includes these names:

Producers' Branch—William A. Brady, D. W. Griffith, William L. Sherrill, Carl Laemmle, Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldfish, William Fox.

Supply and Equipment Branch—J. E. Brulatour, J. H. Hallberg, W. C. Smith, Donald J. Bell, Walter J. Moore, J. F. Coufal, E. M. Porter.

Distributors' Branch—Walter W. Irwin, Richard A. Rowland, Paul Brunet, W. R. Sheehan, Arthur S. Friend, P. A. Powers, Ricord Gradwell.

General Division—Paul H. Cromelin, John C. Flinn, James L. Hoff, Paul Gulick, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Thomas G. Wiley, Fred Beecroft.

At the meeting of the General Division the Interocean Forwarding Company, Inc., and Reginald Ward, Inc., were elected as members of the exporters' section, and the following were elected as individual members: George A. Strader, Herbert S. Clark, Morris Ryskind, A. M. Botsford, Patrick Kearney, Jerome Beatty, R. G. George, R. E. Pritchard, P. H. Stilson, Frederick Gage, W. H. Jackson, Norris Wilcox.

A committee of three was appointed to make arrangements for a luncheon to be given on Wednesday, July 24. It was also decided that all members of the General Division who had gone into the service of the Government should be absolved from the payment of dues during their period of service.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" Opens

Initial Showing of Metro Production Is Greeted by Enthusiastic Throng at the Broadway.

THERE was a large and enthusiastic body of spectators at the Broadway theater Sunday night, June 30, to re-echo the sentiment of the latest screen classics presentation, "To Hell With the Kaiser." Written by June Mathis and directed by George Irving, the picture is a succession of punches that will make the average good American feel that he is watching the German emperor get just what is coming to him.

The story is highly improbable, but its spirit is cleverly calculated to catch the popular taste, and it was received with rounds of applause and hearty bursts of laughter. The heroine is an American girl, whose sister is assaulted by the Crown Prince and whose father is killed when he attacks the Kaiser's eldest son. Melodrama of the most vigorous sort runs all through the picture, and the subtitles are skilfully handled in assisting the story to spread hatred of the Hun.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" is shown in a literal sense. The Devil appears as the German ruler's closest adviser, and the last scene is devoted to his reception at the home of his master. Lawrence Grant's impersonation of the leading part is in keeping with the character of the photoplay, and makes the man anything but a heroic figure. During the intermission the actor came out on the stage and proved that he was quite as able at speechmaking as at acting for the screen. Olive Tell as Alice Monroe, Betty Howe as her sister, John Sunderland as Winslow Dodge and Frank Currier as Professor Monroe are the other leading members of the cast. A review of the picture is printed on another page of this issue.

Start Sunday Opening Campaign in Ohio

Meeting Held in Columbus and Committee Chosen to Raise Funds—Will Act as Did Baseball Men in Similar Matter.

A MEETING was held in Columbus, Ohio, Wednesday, June 26, to start a campaign to amend the Sunday closing laws of the state so that theaters may operate without legal technicalities on the Sabbath. Agitation for Sunday closing has developed of late and several small towns have been closed up by the ministerial element.

There were about fifty representatives from every part of the state at the Deshler hotel in Columbus. The first move made was the appointment of a permanent committee, one man from each section of the state, to solicit all exhibitors in order to raise a fund for carrying on the campaign. The method of procedure is to work to have the laws changed similarly to the way the Sunday baseball folks did a few years ago.

UNIVERSAL MANAGERS TO MEET IN CHICAGO.

An event which may have a far-reaching effect upon the present producing and sales policy of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is scheduled to take place on Sunday, July 7, at Chicago, when the first convention held by the members of its sales organization in years opens for a three day session at the Sherman House.

With the exception of the man in charge of the exchanges at San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland, Seattle, Boston, and in Canada, every Universal exchange manager has been notified to be on hand in time for the opening of the first session.

The delegation leaving New York will be headed by Carl Laemmle and Joe Brandt. Harry Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., will accompany the Universal officials for the purpose of representing his company at the discussion of plans scheduled to take place.

WILLIAM FOX BUYS "THE STRANGE WOMAN."

For the last two years all the women stars of the screen have had their eyes set covetously on "The Strange Woman," the powerful drama of American life which was produced by Klaw & Erlanger and ran a full season in New York City. The author, William J. Hurlbut, however, would not part with the motion picture rights of his play at figures offered. William Fox made a bid for the play and his price was high enough to satisfy Mr. Hurlbut. Now "The Strange Woman" will be produced on a big scale by Mr. Fox. The play was bought for Gladys Brockwell, and will probably be produced in California.

Commission Amends Explosives Regulations

Interstate Commerce Body Approves Changes as Submitted and New Rules Probably Will Be Effective August 1.

THE assistant chief inspector of the bureau of explosives, W. S. Topping, under date of June 26, writes to Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, outlining the amendments to the Interstate Commerce Commission regulations covering the transportation of explosives and other dangerous articles by express. These amendments were submitted on May 27 and have been approved. It is expected they will go into effect August 1. The regulations as amended will provide as follows:

Motion Picture Film No. 43 (a). Motion picture films must be packed in spark-proof metal boxes or cans complying with Specification No. 32. Not more than eight reels (approximately 1,000 feet each) may be packed in one such outside container.

(b) Motion picture films may also be packed in outside wooden boxes complying with Specification No. 19, provided each reel is placed in a tightly closed inside metal container. The gross weight of such a package must not exceed 200 pounds.

(c) Unexposed motion picture film in tight rolls must be packed in interior metal cans not to exceed five rolls (approximately 2,000 feet) in one inside can; the cover of each inside can must fit tightly and be held in place by a strip of adhesive tape or paper; the interior cans must be securely packed in outside wooden boxes complying with Specification No. 19. The gross weight of one outside container must not exceed 200 pounds.

(d) Non-inflammable motion picture (cellulose acetate) films may be accepted without other restrictions when securely packed in strong packages of sufficient strength to carry to destination without rupture or leakage of contents; each outside container must be plainly marked "Motion Picture Films," and, in addition, must be marked "Not Dangerous," as prescribed by paragraph 34 (c).

(e) When non-inflammable motion picture films are packed in the same outside containers with inflammable motion picture films the outside packages must bear the yellow label, and the total contents of the outside container must not exceed the quantity of gross weight permitted for inflammable films.

(f) Shipments of motion picture film with advertising matter attached to the outside container must not be offered for shipment. Shippers desiring to include advertising matter with their shipments of motion picture film must place the same inside the outside box containing the film.

Note.—Shipping containers complying with Rule 43 (a), effective October 1, 1914, and purchased prior to May 15, 1918, may be used for the shipment of motion picture film until December 31, 1918, provided they are securely closed and in good condition, and provided further that if fitted with telescopic covers the covers fit tightly against the shoulder of the box body.

Leather or web straps, if used, must be in good condition and tightly fastened.

String or rope must not be used.

Celluloid, fiberloid, pyralin, viscoloid, zylonite, etc., scrap, including scrap motion picture films (cut or torn in pieces), must not be shipped by express.

Shipping Container Specification No. 32.—Metal cases or cans for outside containers for inflammable motion picture films.

1. Cans or cases must be made of sheet iron not less than 0.02 inch thick. These cans or cases must be lined throughout with hard fiber board at least one-eighth inch thick, or with some other equivalent insulating material approved for this purpose by the Bureau of Explosives.

2. Covers, if hinged, must be permanently attached to metal cases or cans by not less than two hinges, which must be securely riveted, or they must be slip covers, closely fitting. The covers must be lined with insulating material of the same character and thickness as required for the body of the container.

3. Hinged covers must fit tightly against the shoulder of the body, and lap over or inside the body not less than seven-eighths of an inch on all sides. A strong metal hasp must fit over staple or eyebolt, and must be provided with a permanently attached catch to engage in staple or eyebolt.

4. Telescopic slip covers must fit tightly against the shoulder of the body and lap down over or inside the body not less than 3 inches (except that for a one-reel box the lap may be 2 inches). Telescope or slip covers must be secured to cans or cases by a strong, positive, mechanical device made of metal. This device must be approved by the Bureau of Explosives both as to design and construction.

5. Each outside metal case or can must be plainly and permanently marked "Complies with I. C. C. Specification No. 32" or, if desired, this marking may be indicated by a symbol consisting of a rectangle as follows:

I. C. C.-32.

The letters and figures in this symbol must be at least one-half inch high. The symbol shall be understood to certify that the package complies with all the requirements of this specification.

In connection with the foregoing it is respectfully requested that you arrange for a complete distribution among all the film exchanges in the United States, and for as wide publication as it is possible to give to this matter. If you are in position to assist the matter with any association representing exhibitors we will appreciate very much your action in this respect. The exhibitors are subject to the same requirements in connection with their return shipments.

W. S. TOPPING, Assistant Chief Inspector.

BEATRICE MORSE, WORLD PICTURES SCENARIOIST.

Beatrice Morse, a scenario write of reputation, has been engaged by World Pictures to read scenarios and pass on their value. Miss Morse before taking up this line of work was for a number of years a constant contributor to well-known fiction magazines both here and abroad.

Congressmen Inquire About Picturemaking

Chairman Creel Explains What Has Been Done by Government Agencies to Tell the Story of the War.

FOLLOWING the introduction of his resolution calling for an inquiry into the taking and disposition of motion pictures by the Signal Corps, Congressman Treadway of Massachusetts was afforded an opportunity to tell the Military Affairs Committee more regarding his stand on the subject in an executive session June 27.

The resolution, which was introduced June 25 and immediately referred to the committee on military affairs, called upon the Secretary of War to furnish information in regard to those who were taking pictures for the Signal Corps, what disposition were made of them and what revenue was derived from them.

As the hearing before the committee was executive no details could be secured of what took place. Congressman Treadway presented the material that was contained in the reports of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee, at which P. A. Powers, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, testified to the alleged monopoly given the Hearst-Pathe company for pictures taken by the Signal Corps men and others.

Mr. Treadway declined to discuss the actual testimony, but after the hearing called attention to the fact that these photographs were taken by Government men with the intention of giving them widespread distribution throughout the country. "The Government wants to get the pictures before the public," he said, "and the fact that one concern has sole control over their distribution interferes with the general public viewing the pictures."

He referred to the testimony offered by George Creel when he appeared before the house committee on appropriations to secure funds to carry on the work of the Committee on Public Information, in which the committee's work in the photographic field was fully explained.

"It seemed to me that the motion picture was one of the most important aids to our campaign of education and interpretation," testified Mr. Creel, "as millions of people go to the motion picture houses every day. We went to the Signal Corps and explained to them our view that since new pictures were being made for the historical record there was no reason why these war pictures could not be used to good purpose in the United States so that the people could see the war going on. We worked with them in securing the best photographers in the United States. Those men went to France and made pictures over there and the pictures were sent back to this country.

"Then we sent army and navy photographers around to the cantonments, to the factories and to the fields; we sent them to the training camps, and tried to make a photographic record, as far as we could, representing democracy's preparation for war. Those pictures we put into single-reel and two-reel releases, and even up to eight-reel features, and released them all over the United States. We had the captions put in many languages and sent these pictures to all parts of the world so that other peoples might see what our country is, what our institutions are and how America is rallying to the colors. The first of those great feature films, 'Pershing's Crusaders,' has had phenomenal success in the larger cities, and we will have another picture ready in six weeks."

PICTURE MEN ATTEND ROTARIANS CONVENTION.

The convention of the International Rotary Clubs, which was held in Kansas City during the week of June 24 to 29, had a Motion Picture division of which J. W. Farrell, of Orange, N. J., was chairman, and George Weida, manager of the Adfilm Company, Kansas City, vice chairman. A number of out-of-town film men who also are Rotarians were visiting the city.

Frank Newman, of the Royal and Regent, although not a Rotarian, gave valuable assistance to the members with reference to the motion pictures to be shown and the details of exhibition. He and Mr. Weida both helped also in the taking of some pictures. The exhibitions included showings at Convention Hall and the local theaters. The distribution of reels to the down-town picture houses included subjects put out by the government as well as subjects brought by different local Rotary bodies as a contribution to the convention.

ALICE BRADY ENTERTAINS SOLDIERS.

Goldwyn's Eastern Managers in Session

Discuss Plans for Coming Year and Also Attend Entertainments Arranged in Their Honor.

THE Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, in making announcement of its plans and productions for the year about to begin, adopted the procedure of holding regional conventions not only of its managers in its various zones, but of every Goldwyn salesman.

The meeting of the eastern division—the offices east of Pittsburgh and north of Washington—was held June 22 in the home offices of Goldwyn Pictures and Goldwyn Distributing corporations, and F. B. Warren, a vice-president of the latter.

Goldwyn Managers Attending Eastern Convention.

Telegraphic reports from Alfred Weiss at Cleveland indicate an enthusiastic meeting of the men of the Central division there. In Chicago, under the direction of Nathan Ascher, Aaron J. Jones and Harold Bolster, the other vice-president of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, a hundred per cent. attendance was established for that section.

The Goldwyn men from the east had the advantage over their fellow-managers and salesmen in one respect, at least: they were able to spend half a day at the Fort Lee studios of the company, meeting and being photographed with the stars who were engaged in indoor studio work for the day and winding up their day with an evening party at the New York Winter Garden, accompanied by executives of the company.

The morning business meeting at the New York headquarters of the company was confined entirely to a discussion of the new stars and of productions for the coming season, this talk being continued at a luncheon in a private dining room of the Hotel Astor. Immediately after the luncheon the entire party went to Fort Lee to see the big Goldwyn plant in operation and there be received by Geraldine Farrar and Madge Kennedy, both of whom stopped work for an hour to hear directly from the men who sell their Goldwyn productions what the exhibitors of the country want.

Willard Mack, head of Goldwyn's scenario organization, also gave up most of his afternoon to a conference with the Goldwyn managers, and after going over the plant, A. Lehr, the general manager of the studios, together with Mr. Goldfish, gave the entire party their first look at one of Miss Farrar's first Goldwyn productions and also the Goldwyn production in which Tom Moore is to make his debut as a star.

Branch managers of the Eastern Division in attendance at the conferences were Samuel Eckman, Jr., New York; George A. Hickey, Buffalo; Herbert W. Given, Philadelphia, and M. R. Camp, Boston. George F. Lenahan, the Washington manager, was unable to be present, but sent in his stead Frank Price, Jr., head salesman of the Washington office.

Monte Katterjohn with Famous Players

MONTE M. KATTERJOHN, one of the best known of the younger scenario writers of the country, has been permanently engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a member of the scenario staff at the West Coast studios. Mr. Katterjohn has already written the continuity for "The Source" and "Broken Threads," two forthcoming Paramount pictures starring Wallace Reid. He is now at work on an original script for Lila Lee, the new star of Paramount.

Monte M. Katterjohn

Monte Katterjohn hails from Indiana. He began his career as a newspaper and magazine writer and also as a publisher. He in fact issued the first magazine for photo-playwrights.

In 1908 he began his screen career as a free lance and writer and later went to Universal as scenario editor; thence to the New York Motion Picture and later to Triangle.

He is the author of numerous successful photoplays, including "The Clodhopper," "Madam Who," "Carmen of the Klondike," etc., besides many adaptations.

"I am happy to have become a member of the Famous Players-Lasky scenario staff," declared Katterjohn, "because it affords me the scope I have long wished for. There is such a wide variety of stars that it is almost impossible to miss the mark in writing. If a story proves unavailable for one it may be exactly the thing for another. There is intelligent co-operation from author to exhibitor which takes in everything that is intermediate. The atmosphere is ideal for work of a creative character and the reputation of the Artcraft and Paramount pictures is such that it is a pleasure and a satisfaction to be affiliated with the organization responsible for the productions released under these brands. I have many ideas in mind for the various stars."

Mr. Katterjohn has a facility for subtitling, a remarkably active imagination, a keen sense of dramatic proportions and balance and knows the picture business thoroughly. Thus equipped he may be expected to turn out his best work in the months to come.

CLAIMS EXEMPTION FOR GOWN TAXATION.

June Elvidge, World Picture star, has made application for a reduction in her income tax. This prayer for relief grows out of the enormous expense entailed on Miss Elvidge in consuming her roles in the dozen productions that she makes in a year. She contends that it is not alone impossible, but impracticable for her to use the same gowns in other productions—moreover, these gowns cannot be used in private life—and that the expense involved is absolutely necessary in pursuit of her profession and is just as essential as office expense to a business man, for which the Government permits a deduction to be made in his tax returns.

The outcome of Miss Elvidge's application will be watched with great interest by the large number of moving picture actors who are similarly situated.

TAYLOR HOLMES SIGNS TRIANGLE CONTRACT.

H. E. Aitken for the Triangle Film Corporation has closed a contract with Taylor Holmes for a three years' term with that company to make comedy pictures. It is the purpose of the Triangle to feature the well-known actor as a comedy star and present him in a series of program releases along the lines that made Douglas Fairbanks famous when Triangle introduced the latter to the film field about three years ago.

Charlie Chaplin Has His Picture Taken

Sits In for a Moment with Godowsky and His Family and Then Goes Back to Work.

THE fact may not be generally known, but despite his acknowledged success as a screen actor Charlie Chaplin is one of the hardest subjects in the world to photograph with an ordinary camera. Publicity men innumerable have torn their hair because of their inability to get Charlie to pose for illustrations to accompany their stories dealing with various angles of his off-stage life and recreations.

The reason for this is that Chaplin puts every ounce of energy and interest into his acting, and when he has finished the day's work he wants to get as far away from the sight and sound of a camera as possible. He declares that when he is not acting, it is almost painful for him to have a camera pointed in his direction.

James J. Tynan, who recently succeeded Carlyle Robinson as personal publicity representative for Chaplin, has only succeeded once up to date in getting his employer to pose for his picture. This occurred on the occasion of a recent visit of the famous pianist, Leopold Godowsky, and his family to the Chaplin studios.

In response to the request of Godowsky Charlie took a few minutes off between the scenes of his second comedy now in process of making and sat for his picture. It is interesting to note that the comedian appears in his shirt sleeves, in the attitude of a man who has paused in the midst of real labor.

Definite news regarding the result of his industry will be released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in the very near future.

Editors Respond to Universal Letter

Many Newspapers Publish Editorials, Setting Forth That Motion Picture Screen Is Essential.

EVIDENCE which proves conclusively that the majority of newspapers throughout the country are in hearty accord with the stand taken by moving picture men that this is an essential industry is now pouring in upon Universal as the result of a letter sent out some time ago by Carl Laemmle.

As told in this publication several weeks ago, the head of Universal wrote a letter to the publishers of all the newspapers, in which were outlined the reasons which made it imperative that the screen be allowed to continue the work it is now doing. That this plea touched a responsive chord is evident in the analysis that has been made of the newspaper clippings received at the Universal offices.

Typical of the spirit displayed by the publishers is the editorial recently published in the Evening Herald of Los Angeles. The arguments advanced by Mr. Laemmle in his letter were utilized by the editorial writer, and according to film folk who make their home in Los Angeles an extremely favorable impression was made upon the readers of that publication. The article was entitled: "Keep the Theaters Open as You Would Keep the Nation Cheerful."

Copies of the editorial have been sent to all of the Universal exchanges, and it is Mr. Laemmle's plan to have the publicity men of these branches supply them to publishers of the newspapers in their respective territories.

Although prominent Government officials have placed themselves on record as favoring the industry it is considered extremely important by Universal that the campaign being waged to have motion pictures regarded as essential to the welfare of the nation and conducive to the winning of the war be conducted more vigorously than ever. Not a single statement advanced by fanatics, zealots and pro-Germans which cast reflection upon the screen's activities should be allowed to go unanswered, while unremitting vigilance should be exercised so that movements injurious to the welfare of the industry be checked in time.

At Leading Picture Theaters

THE RIVOLI.—William S. Hart in "Shark Monroe," his latest Artcraft picture, written by C. Gardner Sullivan, is the featured player at the Rivoli the week of June 30. Katherine MacDonald heads the support. Scenes in British West Indies, a comedy and the Animated Pictorial were also on the bill. The soloists were Julia Beverly and Lieutenant B. C. Hilliam.

THE RIALTO.—Official Italian War Pictures were shown at the Rialto and shared honors with "The Claws of the Hun," a Paramount picture starring Charles Ray. The photoplay was written by Ella Stuart Carson and directed by Victor L. Schertzinger. Jane Novak plays opposite the star. Annie Posner and Carlos Mejia were the soloists.

THE STRAND.—Mary Pickford in "How Could You, Jean?" was the star feature at the Strand. This Artcraft picture was written by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd. "Outwitting the Hun," a novel feature directed by Giovanni Pastrono, was also shown. A Chester-Outing scenic and the Topical Review completed the screen numbers. The Strand Soldier Quartette were on the musical program.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER.—First half, Enid Bennett in "A Desert Wooing," and another installment of "The Eagle's Eye." Latter half, Bessie Barriscale in "Patriotism."

FORTY-FOURTH STREET THEATER—Thirteenth week of "Hearts of the World."

SYMPHONY—"Ruggles of Red Gap."

BROADWAY—"To Hell with the Kaiser."

LYRIC—Fifth week of "Sealed Orders."

Guy Standing Now a Commander

Herbert, His Father, Gets Word of Promotion and Decoration of Popular English Actor-Sailor.

HERBERT STANDING, for years a distinguished player on the English stage, and the father of seven sons, all of whom adopted his profession, and now a Metro player, is receiving congratulations on the double honor recently bestowed upon his eldest son, Guy Standing, by King George of England. Guy was raised from the rank of lieutenant commander to that of commander in the Royal British Navy and decorated with the order of the British Empire.

The elder Standing has heard from private sources that Guy, who abandoned the stage at the outbreak of the war to enlist in the British Navy and who served for three years in the danger zone, had a part in the recent exploit of the British Navy in bottling up the harbors of Ostend and Zeebrugge.

HEARST-PATHE WILL CONTINUE WAR NEWS.

The fact that the Hearst-Pathe News will continue to contain the same live up-to-date war stuff as before, now that Pathe is also to release the Allies' Official War Review presented by the Committee on Public Information, is learned this week.

The war pictures which will be shown in the Allies' Official War Review are exclusive. This assures those who play both the Hearst-Pathe News and the Allies' Official War Review that all of the war pictures in these releases will be different.

Miss Young to Build in Pasadena

Citizens of California City Vote Heavily in Favor of Allowing Production Company to Settle Among Them.

HARRY GARSON, manager of Clara Kimball Young, announces that Miss Young will build her own studio in Pasadena and that the site for the studio is practically determined.

It is said Mr. Garson's recent proposal to the Pasadena Board of Trade to establish a large motion picture studio there met with much discussion, due to the fact that heretofore all motion picture companies have been barred from Pasadena. The proposition was given much public consideration by prominent business men of the city, and when the proposal was put to the vote at a recent citizens' meeting 155 out of 175 votes went for the erection of the studio.

It is announced that Miss Young will spare no expense to make her studio site one of the beauty spots of Pasadena. The various studio buildings will be drawn on the old mission style of architecture, and will include the installment of a pipe-organ.

Miss Young will also build a permanent home in the fall, probably in Pasadena. Her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Kimball, purchased their home in Los Angeles last week.

Upon the completion of "The Savage Woman," which will be her next release, Miss Young will leave for New York, for the production of her next picture "Cheating Cheaters," work upon which will be started early in July. It is her intention while in New York to purchase an entire new wardrobe, consisting of gowns, hats, shoes, and all "trimmings" necessary for a prolonged stay in the West. When "Cheating Cheaters" has been produced, and the matter of clothes and packing up settled, she will return at once to the West.

Elmendorf Signs With Educational

Famous Traveler Makes Long Term Contract Whereby Harvest of Negatives Will Be Available to Picture Men.

AT last Dwight L. Elmendorf has decided to lend the public the use of his splendid collection of moving pictures, photographed during his years of travel all over the world. This he is doing through the Educational Films Corporation of America, with which he has entered into a contract for a series of his films. The signing of this contract places the Educational Films Corporation of America in the position of having signed, with one exception, all the great Nature directors in the field: Elmendorf, Bruce, Newman, Wright and Ditmars who are leaders in their respective fields.

Mr. Elmendorf was a pioneer in the fascinating field of exploring nature for the purpose of giving the public the results in the combined form of travel talk and motion picture. He first got the remarkable close-up effects of distant objects by his use of the telephoto camera. His treasury of travel negative is now being looked over by President George A. Skinner of the Educational Films Corporation, with a view to printing for exhibitors' use the most timely scenes and subjects. These will include many of the locations of the present battlefields of Europe and of the great European cities that have been attacked by the Huns.

The first release of the Elmendorf pictures through the Educational will occur late in August or early in September, when they will appear at intervals of two weeks. Each subject is one reel in length, but if so desired five or six units of kindred topics may be shown together.

Schlank Opens Middle West Offices

Head of Capital Company Announces He Will Soon Come East to Open Exchanges.

THE definite date for beginning to make its releases will be announced by the Capital Film Company within the next two weeks. The president and general manager, Ike Schlank, has just returned to the company's executive offices, in Indianapolis, after completing a tour of the Middle Western states. Mr. Schlank has been superintending the establishing of exchanges and offices.

"Presently," he announced on his return, "I shall make a tour of the Eastern states for the same purpose, but, in the meantime, we shall complete our preparations for release and apprise the exhibitors of the date. This company, as most exhibitors by this time fully understand, is dedicated to the making of one-reel, two-reel and three-reel pictures. Everywhere I have gone I find the demand for these increasing daily. We are preparing to satisfy it on a large scale. To this end our central location is of extraordinary advantage. Our executive offices are strategically well situated here in Indianapolis and here also will be our studio and laboratories. We have negotiated the purchase of a fifty-acre tract of land, splendidly improved, on the outskirts of the city, and there the work of erecting the studio and other necessary buildings will be begun at the earliest possible date. In the meantime the buildings on the site will be employed and will serve very well with minor alterations, until the permanent studio buildings can be erected."

German Film Trust Carries Universal Title

Similarity of Names Causes Annoyance to Carl Laemmle and Associates—New Concern Seeks Film Control.

CABLE dispatches have lately created considerable annoyance for Carl Laemmle's Universal Film Manufacturing Company because of the reported organization of a film trust in Germany carrying the title of the Universal Film Company. The word "manufacturing" is omitted from the Hun organization, but this fact may have been overlooked by persons who have confused the Laemmle concern with the German trust.

"The man who says Mr. Laemmle has any film interests in Germany is a liar," said R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in an interview with trade newspaper representatives recently. "When Universal was organized the old Imp concern was a factor in the consolidation. Imp had offices and distributing facilities in Germany and for convenience Universal used the Imp organization in Germany and other foreign countries until war was declared."

The Universal Film Company of Berlin, according to recent cables, has been organized with the purpose of emerging from the war with Germany the supreme film power—if they can get away with it. The Deutches Bank, the Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd steamship lines and fifty individually rich Huns have formed a $6,250,000 trade combine, with world control of films the objective.

Universal Has a Woman "Salesman"

Not Only That, But Miss Cross Is Traveling in the Mountain Country Out of Salt Lake.

TO Universal's Salt Lake office belongs the unique distinction of introducing to the film trade located in the exceedingly difficult "mountain territory" controlled by that branch the first "salesman" belong to the fair sex. This newest addition to the "Big U" sales organization is Miss Donzella Cross.

Miss Cross is no novice in the film business, for she had been connected with the executive organizations at Universal City for some time. Prior to that she was associated with various other business enterprises in which expert salesmanship was necessary.

Miss Cross is a Salt Lake girl, a graduate of Northwestern University of Chicago, and also a graduate of the University of California; an accomplished musician and a skilled linguist, besides being "as clever as they make 'em."

She is making a trip through Utah and the adjoining territory and meeting with a success that makes Manager Hager feel his judgment was right when he selected her as a member of the sales force in Salt Lake.

CARLSON BUILDING HOUSE AT COLUMBIA CITY.

The Houlton theater, Houlton, Oregon, has been leased temporarily from the proprietor by O. J. Carlson, who opened Saturday for a four-day-a-week run. Mr. Carlson is having his own theater built at Columbia City, and will take charge of it in about two weeks.

CHAPLIN FILM MAKES NEW YORK RECORD.

Records kept by Carey Wilson, sales manager of the First National Exchange, Inc., of New York, show that Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" has played in 535 theaters in New York City and State up to and including June 21. According to Mr. Wilson's calculations this record stands unique in the field of film exhibition during the current year.

HERRICK TO ADDRESS CITY EDITORS.

Howard Herrick, publicity director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, has accepted an invitation from Clyde P. Steen, president of the National Association of City Editors, to make an address at the annual convention of the association, to be held in Pittsburgh on July 6. His subject will be "The Work That Has Been Accomplished by the Division of Films."

Foreign Trade News

Conducted by F. G. ORTEGA.

Fight on Censorship Helps Abroad

Paul Cromelin of Inter-Ocean Shows That Films Critics Have International Fault.

AMERICAN exhibitors do not realize that their combating of unjust censorship here is reflected in the foreign picture field," says president Paul H. Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean Film. "Recently a very unpopular American censor was deposed and it will result in no end of good abroad. There is not a surplus of censo ship in foreign countries to-day, and what censors there are seem to be very fair. But just as the foreign film buyer looks to America for picture styles the foreign picture censor looks to American censorship field for points. And they have been noting the growth of the censor-autocrat.

"Conversation with foreign buyers indicated to me that the American idea of censor-autocrat was due for foreign trial. So high are we regarded in film matters that whatever is good enough for America is good enough for a foreign country—if it has to do with pictures. If the censor-autocrat was good enough for us! Well, it had to come, said the foreign buyers. And now they are sending with glee to their home offices copies of the Moving Picture World telling of the defeat of the autocrat. You may leave it to the men on the spot to get this good news before the proper authorities. The fall of the autocrat will have as sharp an effect on the foreign censorship situation, therefore, as on the local one, and I congratulate the forces who have brought it about."

Another side-light on this problem is reflected by recent correspondence received by the head of the Inter-Ocean from his London house, which proves that American assailants of the films have nothing on their British brethren in speaking of an entertainment they have never attended.

"Occasionally our own trade press," says Mr. Cromelin, "reveals the so-called 'singular' fact that some prominent enemy of the movies has never been to see them. I have read this 'startling' disclosure a dozen times in connection with well-known American reformers. But now a member of our London staff writes that he is just returned from the small English town of Carnoustie, where the Town Council was discussing the opening of cinema houses on Sunday. He says that two 'reformers' by the name of Heggie and Pottinger were the chief foes of the local picture men, that they had reason after reason for denouncing the films. And then in reply to a question, they both admitted they had never set foot in such dens of perdition."

Picture Company Organized in Sweden

New Concern Will Be the Largest in That Country and Probably Will Distribute Product Through Pathe

ACCORDING to advices received from Wallace J. Young, United States Consul at Goteborg, Sweden, the local press has announced that the memorandum of association for a new film company has been filed. This company will be the largest in Sweden and the next largest in Scandinavia to the Nordisk Film in Copenhagen.

The new company will do business under the name of Filmaktiebolaget Skandia, and the promoters are Centralgruppens Emissionsaktiebolag, Aktiebolaget Emissionsinstituet, Aktiebolaget Investor, Hasselblads Fotografiska Aktiebolag, H. Mannheimer, bank director, and Nils Bouveng, director.

The company has a capital stock of $1,072,000 subscribed for in full, divided into shares of 100 crowns ($26.80), and provision is made for its possible increase to $3,216,000.

The new concern will take over Hassel lads Film, with its facilities for taking pictures here in Goteborg, and also Pathe Freres' branch business in Sweden. The new company thus obtains sole right to the Pathe Freres moving picture apparatus a d films for Sweden, Norway, and Finland, in addition to which the new company, in selling its products, can avail itself of Pathe Freres' selling organization. Further, Goteborgs Biografaktiebolag, Bi grafaktiebolaget Sverige and Aktiebolaget Sveafilm are to be fused into the new concern, in addition t which negotiations are being carried on with several similar companies, which will, in all probability, join the new enterprise. Thereby the latter will come in possession of a large number of first-class moving picture show premises over the whole country, which will give an immediate market for the company's productions. Business abroad is expected to be made possible through the association with Pathe Freres.

The company expects to have under contract popular Scandinavian actors. The studio will be that of the Hasselblad Company, at Sodra Liden (Goteborg). The present structure will be enlarged and modernized so that there may be production on a large scale. The new company will start producing in May.

Goldwyn Campaign in Foreign Markets

Arthur Ziehms, in Charge of the Export Department, Has A Varied and Picturesque Career.

TO complete the initial phase of a world-wide campaign for the introduction of a new brand of pictures in a little over six months represents an extraordinary achievement, even at the present time when American films are in general demand. This feat, which is unique in the case of an American producing company, has been accomplished by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Arthur Ziehms.

Goldwyn productions are being distributed to-day, on a contract basis with local exchanges, in Great Britain and practically all the territories comprised within the British Empire; in Scandinavia, in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador, all of Central America and Mexico, and final negotiations are now in progress for France, Italy, Spain and Portugal, the Dutch East Indies, China and the Phillippines, Cuba, Japan and Holland.

Arthur Ziehms, the export manager of the Goldwyn company, and to whose efforts is due most of the credit for the closing of these transactions, has had a remarkable career, so much so that it could easily be mistaken for the scenario of a serial thriller. At the age of sixteen and a half years he joined the second regiment of the French Foreign Legion and served in the Province of Oran, in Algeria. He left the regiment to ship before the mast in a crew of eight different nationalities, and in this way managed to travel all around the world. His next appearance is in the Philippines, made some time later was as a member of the Sixth United States Cavalry, and under General Pershing's command he participated in the Moro campaign in 1906-1909.

After leaving the army, Mr. Ziehms entered the film and theatrical business in the Far East and was for six years connected with the pioneering activities of Pathe Freres in those territories. He opened and controlled the first up-to-date cabaret as well as the leading theater of the Archipelago, the Cinema Savoy of Manila, which is still in business.

As vice-president of the Oriental Theatrical Corporation,

Mr. Ziehms brought the first American musical comedy company to the Orient, of which the now famous Roscoe Arbuckle and his wife were members. Later on he was instrumental in financing and managed the tour through Hawaii, Japan, China and the Philippines of the first American dramatic company ever presented ou there.

Mr. Ziehms, who speaks and writes half a dozen languages, has been with the Goldwyn company since last September. In these strenuous times his experience in the army has turned out to be as useful as his knowledge of foreign markets. He is a sergeant and drill instructor of Company D of the Seventy-first Regiment of the New York Guard.

Brockliss Celebrates First Anniversary

Sidney Garrett Completing Plans for the World-wide Film Distributing Organization.

ON June 25, J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., celebrated the first anniversary of its entry into the export and import film industry. Sidney Garrett, the president of this successful concern, is conceded to be one of the most energetic executives in filmdom.

Born in England, he came to this country five years ago, and for a period was engaged in the export and import business of general merchandise. When J. Frank Brockliss decided to open a New York office he began looking for an executive in whom he could place confidence and in complete charge of the Brockliss affairs. He met Mr. Garrett socially, and was so impressed that he made him an offer to go into business with him. Mr. Garrett accepted and since then the house of Brockliss has been building a business reputation for itself.

Sidney Garrett.

A few of the manufacturers that this firm represented in the past year include the Rex Beach Company, Arrow Films Corporation, Rita Jolivet Film Corporation, Selig Polyscope Company and King-Bee Billy West Company.

Sidney Garrett is also exclusive purchasing agent for the Mundus-Film Company of Paris, Clement Mason of Australia and the J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., of London. These companies have their own hiring organizations. The following subjects sent there give an idea of the volume of business done. "Charlie Chaplin" (First National), "The Barrier," "Lest We Forget," "Billy West Comedies," "The Natural Law," "The Submarine Eye," "The Whip," "Blue Jeans," 'Revelation" and "The Cold Deck."

Mr. Garrett's latest venture has to do with the Spanish and Portuguese speaking markets, in connection with which Mr. Garrett has been busy during the past six months on a plan that will place his firm among the export leaders covering all the neighboring republics.

Foreign News and Comment.

The control exercised by the Eastman company on the output of raw stock for picture production seems to be getting on the nerves of the French manufacturers. Henry Coutant, the well-known cinematographic writer, reminds the French trade from the columns of the Paris Cine-Journal that all film producing enterprises are paying tribute to the United States (he means to the particular concern that controls a large part of the raw stock sales) and of the fact that up to the present all attempts at competition have ended in failure. Mr. Coutant attributes the Eastman supremacy in this field to the fact that the United States has an overwhelming advantage over all competitors in the possession of the necessary ingredients that enter into the manufacture of raw film, and suggests that in this age of advanced scientific discoveries and adaptations it should not be impossible to devise, through chemical research, a practicable substitute that could be produced in all countries. Judging by the general trend of the French writer's statements, it appears that European scientists and inventors are already at work trying to solve the problem. In England the question has already been favorably answered, from the British point of view, by the establishment of a competing firm manufacturing, not a substitute, but the same product. As a result, the American article is sold in Great Britain cheaper than in the United States, furnishing in this way a logical reason, and the only one, for the film exporting activities of London in some of the markets of the world.

President Wilson's message to Latin America, embodied in his speech to the visiting Mexican editors, is bound to accelerate a reciprocal current of good-will in all the southern republics. It has already produced in this country many beneficial effects, and one of them, the importance of which cannot be underestimated, will surely tend toward the improvement of our relations with our Spanish and Portuguese speaking neighbors. Recent conversations with producers and exporters have brought out the fact that the government officials engaged in the supervision of pictures destined to foreign markets have been instructed to bar the shipment of all those subjects based on ignorant race prejudice. This, we presume, is only the first step, and an attempt will no doubt be made soon to prohibit their exhibition in this country, as they do more harm here than anywhere else by breeding senseless hatreds and antagonisms, besides serving encouragement to certain predatory interests.

Our Washington correspondent reports that under a new ruling of the War Trade Board, cinema films and photographic goods will be licensed for export to European Holland and Denmark proper and, in the near future, will probably be permitted for export to Sweden. That country, however, is not included in this ruling because of the new agreement just concluded, an announcement regarding which will soon be made by the board.

The board calls particular attention to the necessity of complying with the rules and regulations heretofore published with respect to obtaining import certificates and affixing to applications for export licenses the appropriate supplemental information sheet.

Hiller & Wilk, Inc., selling agents for the foreign rights to "My Four Years in Germany," announce the disposal of the rights to the following countries: India, Burmah, Ceylon, Dutch East Indies and Philippines, to David P. Howells. The Australasian Films, Ltd., own the rights to "My Four Years in Germany" for Australia, Hong Kong and Straits Settlements. Ambassador Gerard's picture has been shown in the largest cities of Australia to most enthusiastic audiences, and Mr. Howells feels certain the reception it will get in the Philippines, Japan, China and India will tend toward establishing America's position in the world war to the Oriental peoples. To insure proper showings he is planning to have the picture exhibited under government auspices in the various countries. This transaction leaves open the following countries for which negotiations are now pending: France, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Holland, Russia, Poland, Balkan States, Mexico, Central America.

S. S. Krellberg, of the Trans-Russian Film Corporation, reports that negotiations have been concluded on its behalf by H. G. Kosch, general counsel, for the purchase of the world's rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada, of "Mothers of Liberty," starring Barbara Castleton and Walter Miller. Through its London office, negotiations are now pending for the disposal of Great Britain, France and Italy. Through the New York office, it has already disposed of Japan and the Far East, and is now in touch with importers of Scandinavia and South America.

Julian Ajuria, of the Sociedad General Cinematografica of Buenos Aires and Barcelona, is advertising Fox pictures in Spain in regular American fashion. He uses many of the dailies for advertising purposes and in some of the trade papers is carrying as many as fifteen pages announcing Fox releases. By the way, Mr. Ajuria, who is in Buenos Aires at the present time, has declared in an interview published in one of the Argentina papers that the Italian interests in Spain tried to start a boycott of his American program among the exhibitors, and went as far as "to buy most the trade papers." This is a very serious charge—if he was quoted correctly.

Some of the Mexican papers that were running a novelization of "The Bull's Eye," an eighteen-chapter Universal serial featuring Eddie Polo, suspended the publication when the part dealing with Mexican bandits was reached. One of the trade papers that took this action explained the affair in stating that, although there was no direct insult in the picture against the Mexican people in general, the tone of most of the last episodes could give rise to misinterpretations—and that the serial would not be shown in Mexico, anyway.

The Paralta program has been placed in Cuba by Leon Schlesinger, of the Inter-Ocean, and of World Pictures in the West Indies, by Ricardo Castro, manager of the Latin-American activities of the same company. The London and Paris offices plan a simultaneous drive on the European markets with the "Fulco" accessories, Inter-Ocean's latest acquisition.

Jacobo Glucksmann, New York representative for Max Glucksmann of Buenos Aires, calls the attention of this department, regarding a recently published interview with Bernardo Herrera, to the fact that his firm has acquired the exclusive rights for the exploitation of "Damaged Goods" in Chile direct from the American Film Company, and have not disposed of them to any other house.

Vincente Blanco, member of the firm of Blanco & Martinez, arrived in New York about two weeks ago in search of new productions for his territory. He has already purchased the rights for Cuba on the serial "The Eagle's Eye."

TRANS-RUSSIAN SECURES "STOLEN ORDERS."

S. S. Krellberg, president of the Trans-Russian Film Corporation, announces that after negotiations lasting two weeks, the company's general counsel, H. G. Kosch, has finally concluded arrangements with William A. Brady for the purchase of the rights to France and her colonies, Egypt, Scandinavia, China, Japan and the Philippine Islands, on "Stolen Orders," a companion to "The Whip," and one of the successes of the year. It is understood that a record-breaking price has been paid for this picture. Prints will be immediately shipped abroad, and will open simultaneously in Paris, Copenhagen, Tokio and Hong-Kong.

EXPORT AND IMPORT GET ROLFE RIGHTS.

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export and Import Film Company, announces that he has just completed negotiations whereby his firm has acquired the sole foreign rights to the forthcoming B. A. Rolfe productions.

The first release of this concern will be a sensational serial in ten to twelve episodes, featuring "Houdini," whose name is familiar to theatergoers throughout the world and who has just completed an engagement at the New York Hippodrome, where his escapades have thrilled thousands at every performance.

Following this the B. A. Rolfe Company contemplates producing a series of special features in which Florence Reed will be starred.

These together with all other releases of the B. A. Rolfe Company have been acquired for all the foreign territories by the Export and Import Film Company. The "Houdini" serial will be ready for release on or about the 15th of September, 1918, and we are informed that numerous offers have already been received.

Film Exporters Hold Fourth Meeting

Adopt By-Laws and Will Hold Election of Permanent Officers on July 11.

THE adjourned meeting of the Film Exporters of America, Inc., was held at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, June 27. Mr. Howells presided and Mr. Kosch acted as secretary. After the minutes of the previous meeting had been read and approved Mr. Howells, as chairman of the committee appointed to confer with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, reported that the officers of that organization, owing to stress of business, had been unable to arrange for a conference. The committee was continued with instructions to report at the next meeting.

Mr. Kosch, as a member of the committee on cablegrams, reported that he had taken up the question of cables with the Federal Reserve Board and advised that all cable transfers of money would have to be vised by the board and that all dealers would have to obtain certificates. Compliance with these regulations would facilitate all cables and mail.

The committee on by-laws, composed of Dr. Shallenberger, Mr. Thomas and Mr. Kosch, presented to the meeting a proposed set of by-laws prepared by Mr. Kosch, who has been acting as attorney for the association. These were discussed clause by clause and, with slight modifications, adopted.

Mr. Howells announced he had been informed that a decision declaring unconstitutional the one-half cent footage tax on films for export had been handed down by the United States Supreme Court. This matter was referred to Messrs. Howells and Kosch for investigation.

A committee on credentials was appointed to obtain applications for membership in the association, composed of Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, chairman; J. Wilk, L. Knocke, L. E. Thomas, D. P. Howells, H. G. Kosch, secretary.

It was tentatively resolved that the initiation fee should be fixed at $25 and the annual dues at $10.

The meeting was then adjourned to July 11, at which time the permanent officers will be elected.

Export Instructions Are Amended

Rules for Censoring Motion Pictures for Foreign Use Modified by the Division of Customs.

AS a result of the visit of the committee of exporters headed by Paul Cromelin, the Division of Customs at Washington has issued to Collectors of Customs and all others concerned the following circular:

The instructions contained in Division of Customs Circular Letter No. 45 of May 29, 1918, are hereby amended as follows:

(1) The War Trade Board having granted R. A. C. License No. 8 for moving picture films exported to Canada, such films need not be submitted for censorship until further instructed.

(2) The provisions of Circular Letter of May 29, 1918, do not apply to films licensed by the War Trade Board and which were in transit on or prior to June 8, 1918.

(3) When multiple copies of any given film are intended to be exported, only the original thereof will be censored, which, if approved, shall be sealed and retained in customs custody. After the original has been censored and approved, the copies may then be submitted to the Collector of Customs for comparison with the original. For purposes of comparison the Collector will not require each and every print of the same subject to be projected, but only such number as he considers necessary. If the representative copies so examined are found to be identical with the original, all of the copies will be approved and sealed and retained in customs custody pending exportation.

American Film Company Outlines Plans

President Hutchinson Tells of His Policies in Distributing Concern's Product Direct to the Exhibitor.

DURING a visit to the plant of the American Film Company the other day I learned from the president, Samuel S. Hutchinson, that an entirely new sales plan for the company's product will be formally announced to the trade in the near future. The recent withdrawal of American productions from the program with which they have been associated for many years past has made a way for the new policy, which has been carefully considered and planned.

The basic features of this policy, which will soon be put in operation by the American Film Company, are:

1. Dealing direct with the exhibitor in the matter of bookings.
2. The placing of personal representatives of President Hutchinson in all required distributing centers throughout the country, and the placing in their hands, sixty days ahead of release, of every American production turned out, thus affording exhibitors the privilege of a showing before a booking is made.
3. The decision of the American Film Company to make no more program features and to confine the company's entire activity to making multiple-reel, special features at irregular intervals.

"The announcement of our new policy will mark another milestone in the history of the American Film Company," said Mr. Hutchinson. "American productions have long been famous for their photography, careful direction and the drawing power of their stars, but in the past we have been somewhat dependent upon the wishes of our distributing organization and so have occasionally been forced to speed up studio work to meet insistent demands for a picture on a certain date. Now, I am glad to say, all that is changed. In the future American will control the distribution of its productions as well as their manufacture. We will make each picture as a separate unit, taking as long as may be necessary to handle the task properly.

Will Have Representatives in Every Center.

"Just as we have perfected our forces for the making of pictures we are now ready to build our distributing organization. I shall have personal representatives in every distributing center throughout the United States, and these representatives will be there to render service. I do not mean that we aim to teach the exhibitor his business or show him how to run his theater, for we have no such thought. We know the exhibitor has problems of his own, which he himself is best fitted to handle; but the personal representatives of the president of the American Film Company will be right there on the ground, in close daily touch with the exhibitors, and making daily reports direct to the home office. It will thus be possible for us to establish a closer contact between exhibitor and manufacturer than probably any other film producer has yet obtained. We can thus be of real service in many ways to exhibitors which have not been thought possible before, and which will in no way antagonize the theater manager. I am frank in saying that we hope to gain much direct benefit from our close contact with the exhibitor.

"Our productions will feature such favorites as Mary Miles Minter and Marguerita Fisher, and in addition we shall aim to make an occasional picture with an all-star cast. Such pictures will likely base their drawing power on the story itself more than on the players. In addition to these we will control the releasing of the features made by William Russell Productions, presenting the athletic star, William Russell, whose drawing power is already known to every exhibitor who has presented one of these features within the past year.

"No special limit has been set on the length of our mutliple-reel, special features, but they will not be longer than is in harmony with the best interests of the exhibitor. We shall begin releasing early in the fall. Directors Edward Sloman, Henry King and Lloyd Ingraham are already well along on the first three productions.

"You will recall that about six or eight weeks ago we announced that we were prepared to pay anywhere from $1,000 to $25,000 for stories suitable for American production. As a result of that announcement we have received hundreds of manuscripts, several offers of moving picture rights to certain popular novels and to several stage plays. From this material we have already chosen a number of stories, which will, we believe, prove superior to anything that American has hitherto secured; and we still have hundreds of manuscripts to look over, as every mail is bringing in new ones. Many of the authors, I am pleased to say, are men and women whose names are well up among well-known American writers. I shall have more to say about these authors in the future.

Sales Campaign Will Start in July.

"We expect to begin our formal sales campaign some time in July, though none of the subjects will be released until early fall. In fact, the exhibitors will be given an opportunity to see for themselves every picture that we release about sixty days in advance of its first public showing. As rapidly as pictures are completed prints will be placed in the hands of my personal representatives in each territory, and these representatives will screen the productions for interested exhibitors.

"These new feature American productions will be booked largely in the order in which exhibitors make application for them. Of course, exhibitors who have found William Russell, Mary Miles Minter and Marguerita Fisher pictures real drawing cards will want to file early applications, while those who have not yet had the opportunity of knowing the fine drawing power of these stars will probably give the matter consideration in order to add them to their box office attractions.

"All exhibitors should immediately get in touch either with the home office of American or with my special representative in each territory. Until such time as I formally announce the name and territorial office of each personal representative exhibitors seeking early bookings on the forthcoming productions should write direct to the executive offices of American Film Company, 6227 Broadway, Chicago. Every exhibitor who addresses the home office will be advised by mail just when and where the first of the new offerings can be seen and booked; and, as I have already said, the bookings will undoubtedly depend largely upon the order in which the applications are made.

"I wish specially to emphasize the fact that the new American policy will aim at quality in its productions rather than at number."

Goldwyn Branch Managers Meet

One Feature a Week Will Be Released in Coming Year—Number of Productions by Various Stars Announced.

A MEETING of the Goldwyn branch managers and salesmen of the Middle West was held in the Blackstone Hotel, this city, Saturday and Sunday, June 22 and 23.

Harold Bolster, vice-president of the organization, came on from New York to conduct the meeting, which was pronounced by him a great success. The new plant and policies for the new year, beginning September 9, were thoroughly outlined and discussed.

Starting September 9 Goldwyn will release one production a week instead of one every alternate week as heretofore, and the releases will be as follows: Six Geraldine Farrar features, six productions of as many of Rex Beach's works which have not yet been adapted for photoplay purposes, the first two being "The Silver Horde" and "The Iron Trail"; eight in which Pauline Frederick will star, eight by Mae Marsh, eight by Madge Kennedy, eight by Mabel Normand and eight by Tom Moore. The first release, the title to be announced later, will have Geraldine Farrar as the star. The new Goldwyn stars announced are Geraldine Farrar and Pauline Frederick.

Madge Kennedy was in the city during the meeting and afterward returned to New York. She has just finished "Friend Husband," which will be released soon.

Mr. Bolster, during a brief interview, was enthusiastic in his praise of the branch managers and other workers in his organization. In his opinion they form the most efficient body of men of its size in the business in this country. Goldwyn's second year, he announces, will be Goldwyn's "Success Year," although the first year far exceeded expectations.

Mr. Bolster gave a banquet at the Hotel Sherman Saturday evening to those in attendance at the meeting. He left for Minneapolis Wednesday evening, where he made a stay of three days, returning to Chicago and thence to New York. He will visit the Pacific Coast shortly afterward.

The branch managers present at the meeting were R. C. Robinson, Kansas City, Mo.; R. Fox, Minneapolis; Paul Bush, St. Louis, and H. J. Bailey and W. E. Banford (assistant manager), Chicago.

Action on Amended Maypole Ordinance Deferred.

At the meeting of the judiciary committee of the city council Tuesday, June 25, it was decided to postpone action on the Maypole ordinance until after the trial of Major Funkhouser.

Several women organizations attended this meeting and gave their approval to the Maypole measure on condition that certain amendments were made. All of these amendments except one were accepted by Alderman Maypole. The amendment in question would give the second deputy superintendent of police the power to veto recommendations of the censor board in cases where the vote on a picture was six to five. The censor board also would be given power to overrule the veto of the second deputy in case eight affirmative votes were recorded. Alderman Maypole withheld his decision until further consideration was given the matter.

The ordinance as amended would enforce the following provisions:

The censor board to be under control of the chief of police; censors to submit their recommendations in writing and the reports made a public record; the board to have power to recall and revoke permits; all censored pictures to bear the Chicago label, such as shown on pictures passed by the National Board of Review; permits for pictures to be shown to adults only abolished; no permits to be issued while pictures are involved in court litigation.

The Funkhouser Trial.

The trial of Major Funkhouser before the Civil Service Commission, on charges filed by Acting Chief Alcock, opened Monday morning, June 24, the first witness being the acting superintendent himself. He was on the stand all that day and most of Wednesday, June 26.

Concerning his testimony the Chicago Tribune has editorially commented that it seems to have no doubt that Alcock is bent upon Major Funkhouser's official demolition, and that his animus is manifest. In brief space it charges that the acting chief's evidence up to the time of writing consists of very general statements and accusations, and expresses the opinion that as a matter of common justice the trial board should insist on the most detailed substantiation of his statements and accusations.

Nothing relating to the major's actions as a censor has thus far been even touched upon, the whole proceedings being confined to his actions as head of the morals department. A review of the trial so far, therefore, would have no interest for readers of these columns, as the testimony of women from the red-light districts concerning the major and his aides would show.

One worthy lady—Miss Kate J. Adams, a former coworker with the major in the vice crusade here—is much incensed against him. She is at a loss to know why he spent $86 of the city's money to have her shadowed by one of his men. The records in the suspended second deputy's office show that she was not shadowed until four days after she had closed her investigation, thus demonstrating that it was impossible for the investigator to have checked on any of the reports made by her. Miss Adams, however, acknowledges her indebtedness to the investigator for the accuracy of his report as to her movements later.

Fuel Laws Must Be Rigidly Observed.

The executive committee of Chicago local, Illinois branch, M. P. E. L. of A., held the regular weekly meeting at headquarters Tuesday, June 25. The chief business before the committee was the consideration of a communication from Fuel Administrator Garfield regarding the extravagant use of electric displays in front of theaters in this city. Mr. Garfield sent out a warning about a week ago, declaring that conditions require the utmost economy in the use of fuel during the summer months. Members of the committee stated that quite a number of exhibitors in the city were using electrical front displays during the entire day, which was unanimously declared an absolute waste. The committee therefore sent out a letter to every exhibitor in the city, irrespective of affiliation, drawing attention to this deliberate waste and insisting upon strict observance of the fuel laws. The letter closed with the warning that lightless nights will return very shortly unless the strictest observance of light saving is followed.

In this letter the committee also drew the attention of exhibitors to the danger of using copyright music without license, as violations are now being rigidly prosecuted by music authors. The use of non-taxable music only was strongly urged by the committee.

Charles W. Taylor a Proud Father.

Charles W. Taylor, Omaha branch manager for Select Pictures Corporation, who attended the recent convention of the general officers and branch managers of that organization in this city, was one of the proudest men at the gathering. His unusual elation was due to the fact that a baby girl, weighing nine and one-half pounds, arrived at his home the morning of the first day of the convention. Both mother and baby were doing well, Charlie stated, and she sent a telegram, which was read at the Chicago meeting in the Hotel Sherman, wishing good luck to all Select men present. Mr. Taylor is well known in Chicago film circles, having been Chicago manager for several years with the General Film Company in the City Hall Square Building.

Select's Chicago Office Breaks Record.

Fred C. Aiken, Chicago manager of Select, made an announcement at the late Chicago convention which greatly enthused all present. This was to the effect that his office had broken all previous records during the week in which the convention was held, and both he and Ben W. Beadell, Chicago sales manager, received hearty congratulations from the general officers and branch managers present.

Changes in Chicago Distributing Circles.

Merle E. Smith, formerly district manager of the George Kleine System for the Middle and Far West, was promoted on June 14 to the position of general manager of the entire system.

William H. Jenner, manager of the Fox Chicago office, resigned that position to accept that of assistant general manager of the George Kleine System.

H. W. Willard has succeded William H. Jenner as manager of the Fox Chicago office. Mr. Willard formerly held the position of district auditor for Mutual for one year, and afterward became assistant business manager for Triangle's Chicago office for two years.

Harry A. Scott, district manager of the George Kleine System in eastern territory, resigned that position June 15.

Metro War Picture Popular.

Starting July 7 "To Hell With the Kaiser" (Metro) will have a two weeks' run at The Playhouse, on Michigan avenue. This strong Metro production is having great success in Chicago and seldom misses crowded houses.

"The Claws of the Hun," Orchestra Hall.

"Sandy" (Lasky) in the last moment was substituted for "A Desert Wooing" at Orchestra Hall for the week beginning Sunday, June 23. Assistant Manager Hill informed me that business was fair with this picture.

Charles Ray in "The Claws of the Hun" is the attraction for the week of June 30. This is a Thomas Ince picture.

Linick to Manage Chicago Office of Circle Film.

Fred Linick, formerly on the sales force of the Unity Photoplays Company, this city, informs this office that he has been appointed manager of the Chicago office of the Circle Film Exchange, a New York organization, which at present is buying and distributing state rights features and single reel comedies. The Chicago office of the company is located at 112 North La Salle street, and the business in the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin will be handled from it. A. M. Gollos, formerly of the Photo Releasing Company, is the New York representative.

Teachers' Meddling Disavowed by Weidner

Assistant War Savings Director Says They Acted in Defiance of National Committee's Wishes.

MOTION picture exhibitors throughout the United States will be glad to learn of the official ruling just obtained for them by Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of Metro Pictures Corporation, from the National War Savings Committee. It is to the effect that any one who advises school children, their parents, guardians, or teachers, to stay away from motion picture theaters during the war is acting in defiance of the wishes of the National Committee.

Recently in California several public school instructors told their pupils that, were they really patriotic, they would refrain from attending photoplay theaters and devote the money thus saved by them and their families to the purchase of thrift and war savings stamps.

When they were asked for their authority for such statements the teachers said they had so construed the wishes of the National War Savings Committee as expressed by G. A. Davidson, state director of war savings for California.

While indignation meetings were being held in Los Angeles and other Coast cities by exhibitors, exchange men, and producers affected by these wild statements, Mr. Engel called the attention of the War Savings Committee to the motion picture industry's tremendous financial activities in aid of the government and to the great revenue which naturally would be lost to the government were the public misled into staying away from photoplay theaters.

Mr. Engel's letter bore valuable fruit; for it obtained from Perry W. Weidner, assistant state director of war savings for California, the official ruling that "such a movement (i. e., the teachers' officious meddling and misstatements) is unauthorized either by the National or State War Savings Committee."

Mr. Engel's letter to the state director, under date of June 14, is as follows:

I have the honor to report to you the formation, under the rules of the Treasury Department of the United States, of the Metro Studio War Savings Society of Hollywood. We received from you on June 10 the data as to how to organize this society and on June 12 we were duly and completely organized, with a 100 per cent. membership of all permanent employes on the Metro payroll. Thus the Metro Studio War Savings Society is, I think, the first society in the United States to qualify and be chartered, due in no small measure to the enthusiastic help received from Perry W. Weidner of your office.

While it is slightly away from this particular field, let me say, too, that the Metro studio won an honor flag for 100 per cent. efficiency and loyalty for subscriptions to and sales of the Third Liberty Loan bonds. We also have a 100 per cent. honor designation for Red Cross donations. And the employes of this organization were the first in the country to pledge themselves voluntarily to be paid not less than 15 per cent. of their weekly salaries in War Savings Stamps.

I believe that the spirit of loyalty, self-sacrifice and determination to do everything possible to help win the war, as exampled by the Metro record, dominates the entire motion picture industry in every collateral branch. What Metro studios in Hollywood and New York have done, as two units in the business, the entire motion picture world is only too ready to do.

Yet recently there appeared in several Los Angeles newspapers the statement that your office had encouraged the idea among school children, their teachers and their parents, that they should remain away from motion picture theaters and devote the money thus saved to the purchase of War Savings Stamps.

I trust the report is untrue, and as the chief basis of my hope will you permit me to call a few financial facts to your attention?

Nobody other than the Internal Revenue office in Washington, where returns from the entire United States finally are compiled, can state with exactness the total of taxes paid by the various branches of the motion picture industry. But my position as stockholder and financial officer of Metro Pictures Corporation and reports which I receive from other sources fortify my belief that the producers, distributors, and exhibitors of motion pictures in the United States will pay into the treasury of their country for the calendar year 1918 probably not less than $200,000,000 in taxes.

This is in the form solely of direct taxes—not Red Cross contributions or purchases of Liberty Bonds, War Savings Stamps, short term notes, certificates of indebtedness, etc., which would, were they all added together, swell the total of revenue directly and indirectly received from the motion picture industry well above $1,000,000,000—or $340,000,000 more than Congress appropriated for the entire airplane program for one year.

We of the motion picture business pay these direct taxes in several ways. There is a tax on every foot of negative and positive film we use; a tax on every reel of film leased to theaters; the internal revenue theater tax; then comes the corporation income tax and the excess profits tax; there is the tremendous income tax of all individuals engaged in the industry—executives, actors, directors, writers, etc.; the theater ticket tax, contributed by the people, truly, but made possible as a source of Government revenue solely because the motion picture industry is maintained despite the many handicaps under which it operates.

Surely an industry so whole-heartedly American, so enthusiastically minded to help win the war, so capable of preaching the President's gospel of democracy and anti-Prussianism—certainly such a business the pleasure of the people and for the people, should not be further hampered by asking children and their parents to abstain from supporting it.

JOSEPH W. ENGEL,
Treasurer Metro Pictures Corporation.

In reply to Mr. Engel's letter the following official statement of the National and California State War Savings Committees' attitude and intentions was written by Perry W. Weidner, assistant state director for California, and Mr. Engel was authorized to give this official statement to the entire motion picture industry. Mr. Weidner's letter is, in part, as follows:

We greatly appreciate the information contained in your favor of the 14th inst., and while we know that the tax burdens upon all sources of your industry ran well up into seven figures, yet we did not realize that it reaches nine figures.

From several sources we have been advised that some people are telling the people, especially children, to avoid motion picture theaters as a plan to save money with which to purchase War Savings Stamps. Such a movement is unauthorized either by the National or State War Savings Committee.

G. A. DAVIDSON, State Director.
By Perry W. Weidner, Assistant State Director.

In addition to writing this letter, so clearly defining the government's attitude, Mr. Weidner informed Mr. Engel that he was forwarding the two letters above quoted and all attendant data direct to Frank A. Vanderlip, with the request that Mr. Vanderlip himself add whatever he desires toward acquainting the people of the United States with the fact that the government is not only not opposed to attendance at motion picture theaters but instead wishes eagerly to encourage it.

Triangle Players at Bear Valley.

Two new players have been engaged by Triangle for Director J. W. McLaughlin's latest feature picture, "Beyond the Shadows," in which William Desmond has the leading role. They are Hugh Sutherland, who will be seen as the heavy, and Bert Apling, who also has an important part.

The McLaughlin company is now at Bear Valley for exteriors and it is expected that the director will secure some wonderful scenic locations for "Beyond the Shadows," a story of the Canadian Northwest country, written by Ralph Westfall, who at one time was a member of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police.

When the company left the Triangle's big Culver City studios for the mountains it was expected that not more than a week would be required on the exteriors, but a rainstorm was encountered, which may give the players two weeks in the mountains. With Director McLaughlin are William Desmond; his leading woman, Josie Sedgwick; Ed Brady, Ben Lewis, John P. Wilde, Hugh Sutherland, Bert Apling, John Lince, Graham Pettie and Alberta Lee.

Hart Ends First Year of Artcraft Contract.

When William S. Hart returned from filming the final scenes of "Riddle Gawne" he completed the first year of his contract with the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, through which his productions are being released. The Artcraft contract calls for eight pictures a year, featuring the famous Western actor, and "Riddle Gawne" is the eighth. The contract, however, does not expire with the ending of the fiscal year, but continues for some time to come. The William S. Hart Productions, Inc., will continue to produce at the company's own studio in Hollywood, and the pictures will still be marketed through Artcraft.

Plans for the second year of the contract have been practically completed and several stories are ready for Mr. Hart to start making. His next picture will be somewhat of a change from the average Hart production, although it is a Western story, as it deals to a great extent with military affairs, and Mr. Hart, in part of it, will be clad in khaki instead of in the usual Western attire, with which he is identified. The plot, however, will not be of the regular "war story" variety, and will be laid entirely in the Western United States. There will be no battle scenes in it, except the well-known Hart battles, in which revolvers and fists play the prominent parts.

Regarding the completion of the first year under his new arrangement, Mr. Hart says: "The accomplishments of the last twelve months have been a source of great gratification to me. I believe that they have formed the brightest year of my career to date. I also believe, judging not from my own viewpoint, but from the viewpoint of the public with which I am familiarized through various sources, that the future holds far more than the past. My pictures seem to increase consistently in popularity and art, and I am going to continue to work with the idea that success is still ahead, still to be achieved. No man is a success when he admits it himself, for then ambition ceases, and success without ambition is a gun without a bullet—you can aim at anything, but you can't hit it."

Fire at Diando Studios.

Valuable films belonging to pictures under production by the Diando Film Corporation were destroyed in a fire of unknown origin at the studios on Saturday, June 15. W. A. S. Douglas, president of the company, estimates the loss at approximately $10,000.

The fire started in the concrete film vault and was discovered by Studio Manager John English. He received burns about the face and arms in saving some of the films. The prompt action of the studio fire force in going into the vault among the blazing film saved many thousand dollars in positive prints and camera equipment.

Upon checking up the films that were saved it was found that many scenes from the "Wolf-faced Man" serial and the current Baby Marie Osborne feature had been destroyed. One of the most valuable scenes lost was a stunt performed by George Larkin for the serial, which required two hundred extras for atmosphere.

An investigation conducted by Mr. Douglas and Mr. Osborne, chief executives of the company, has failed to discover the cause.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Olga Grey, who was with the Triangle playing forces for a short time during which she supported J. Barney Sherry in a most unusual labor picture, "Fanatics," is again at the Triangle Culver City studios, having been especially engaged for an important part in Director Christy Cabanne's new picture, the temporary title of which is "The Mayor of Filbert." Sam Landers, who has cranked the camera for Mr. Cabanne on many of his past pictures, will be responsible for the photography in this feature.

William Dowlan has been engaged by Triangle and is now handling the megaphone of his first feature picture at the Culver City studios, "Alias Mary Brown," a crook story, in which Casson Furgesson has the leading role. Dowlan has been directing Mary Miles Minter until recently. Before joining the American forces he was a director at Universal. In this picture, by E. Magnus Ingleton, Furgesson essays a dual role, that of a college youth who turns crook and works in the disguise of a pretty young stenographer.

Buff Jones, champion rope thrower and broncho rider, is no longer a member of Director Cliff Smith's western company, which makes Triangle thrillers with Roy Stewart as the hero. Jones is now wearing Uncle Sam's "o. d." He has enlisted in the army and is employing his talents breaking wild horses for Uncle Sam's officers at the remount station near Jacksonville, Fla.

Director Jack Conway, Earle Williams and a company of Vitagraph players have returned to Los Angeles after spending eight days on location near Santa Barbara. With the exception of Earle Williams, who returned a day before the others, the entire company suffered from eye trouble due to working on location with artificial lights.

On Harry Carey, Universal's cowboy star, was conferred a signal honor recently by the Los Angeles Advertising Club, when he was chosen to act as grand marshal of the parade of club members from the Southern Pacific station to the organization's headquarters, staged in honor of the visit of Celestine J. Sullivan, special envoy from President Wilson to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. Sullivan brought to the Angeleno scribes a message from the nation's Chief Executive urging every member to attend the convention of the associated clubs at San Francisco, July 7 to 11, inclusive. Carey with his band of Universal cowboys welcomed the official emissary with a fusillade of gun shots and a series of war whoops.

Mary MacLaren's second Universal special production has just been completed under the direction of Ida May Park. The photodrama is an adaptation of the story, "Bread," by Evelyn Campbell, who first achieved fame in the films by her authorship of "A Soul for Sale," in which Dorothy Phillips recently starred. "Bread" is the story of a young girl whose whole scheme of existence is changed by the entrance of a loaf of bread into her life. Included in the cast are Kenneth Harlan, Edward Cecil and Virginia Chester.

William Russell has commenced work on his fourth feature at the head of his own company, "All the World to Nothing." Henry King, who has produced all of the features with this star in since he formed the William Russell Productions, is again handling the directing end of the picture. Winifred Westover, who made her debut as leading woman for Russell in his last feature, has been held over to play opposite him in his present story.

With Carmel Myers as the star, a Bluebird photoplay version of Margaret Widdemar's well-known novel, "Why Not?" has just been completed at the Bluebird's west coast studios. Thomas Holding and Philo McCullough have the principal masculine roles in the production. It was directed by Elsie Jane Wilson. The story concerns a girl, with a small legacy, who uses the money she inherits to make the dreams of those about her come true. The play abounds in picturesque California scenery, as Mount Wilson, Bear Valley, Seven Oaks, and other well-known spots of Southern California were used as locations.

Director Stuart Paton has taken the Diando serial company to Newhall for several days. A mountain slide will be photographed, in which George Larkin and Betty Compson will be rescued. Fifty cowboys are with the company and all of them are camping.

After an illness of several weeks Harry Pollard, best known for his direction of Margarita Fisher productions for the American, is back at the Bluebird west coast studios. Pollard started to direct "Which Woman?" starring Priscilla Dean and Ella Hall, but was taken ill early in the production, and the directorial megaphone was turned over to Tod Browning.

Edith Roberts, who first claimed film fame as the leading woman of the Lyons-Moran comedies, has become a full-fledged Bluebird star and henceforth will be seen in comedy dramas. She has just completed her first Bluebird production, a screen version of Ethel M. Kelly's well-known novel, "Turn About Eleanor." It was made under the direction of Tod Browning. Thornton Church, Hal Cooley, Lottie Kruse and Winifred Greenwood are prominent in her supporting cast. The script was written by Bernard McConville.

Lois Weber's next production, starring Mildred Harris, will be another story from the pen of Marian Orth, author of "The Price of a Good Time." Production on this new play has already started at the Weber studios in Hollywood, with a notable cast surrounding the clever star of "The Doctor and the Woman," "The Price of a Good Time" and "For Husbands Only." Lew Cody, who was seen in the leading masculine role in the latter named photodrama, will also play opposite Mildred Harris in this newest Lois Weber creation. "Orange Blossoms" is the tentative title given the story by the author, and it will be made at the Weber studios under that name.

ROUSSEAU GOES TO SPARTANBURG.

Arthur E. Rousseau, for three years secretary of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has resigned. Mr. Rousseau will go to Camp Wadsworth at Spartanburg for military training. He is conversant with the English, French, Flemish and German languages. Mr. Rousseau was born in Roulers, Belgium. He came to the United States in December, 1913, and a few months later entered the service of Pathe. In August, 1914, he became secretary of the corporation, which office he has held ever since.

Mr. Rousseau has been succeeded by Lewis Innerarity, a lawyer and banking authority of Baltimore.

Coming Year to Make Industrial Record

World Works Points Out to Exhibitors Great Opportunities to Capitalize Remarkable Financial Conditions

THE coming season will mark the biggest year in the history of the motion picture industry, in the opinion of World Pictures. This is not the hope born of desire but is the deduction based on certain incontrovertible facts. In the last issue of World Works, a house organ published by the World Film Corporation and distributed among its employes, attention is called to the fact that opportunity is crying in a stentorian voice; that she is close at hand and exhibitors should not neglect the chance of reaping the reward that accrues to the alert and industrious.

An enumeration of these facts follows:

Farm Products.

A billion-bushel wheat crop. The states particularly interested are those north of the Mason and Dixon line.

The largest oat, barley and rye crop in the history of the United States. This will be of vital benefit to the northern states.

The biggest yield of flax. Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Kentucky will cash in.

A bumper crop of tobacco. Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Missouri and Connecticut are the principal producers.

All of these products will be sold at prices that insure a tremendous income to the farmer and makes him a creature of wealth.

Cotton and Corn—The United States crop forecast on these two essentials indicates an enormous yield. All southern states will profit on cotton. Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, the principal states of the corn belt, will reap great wealth from the cereal.

Fruits—The reports for the apple crop show that New York State alone, as an example, will produce over 1,200,000 barrels, the largest crop recorded. Other states interested are Washington, Oregon, Missouri and Michigan. On small fruits the South, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, New Jersey, Delaware and New York are particularly fortunate, and first-class conditions existing insure large supplies.

Beet Sugar—Colorado, Utah and Wisconsin report large acreage in first-class growing conditions.

Labor Conditions.

Inasmuch as the demand exceeds the supply, this will result in absolute elimination of unemployment. The highest wage scale in the history of the world will be paid to industrial and farm workers. The amicable relations existing between employer and employe insures a settled condition resulting in permanency of employment.

Railroad Prosperity.

The increase of freight rates that have just gone into effect means $700,000,000 additional income. The greater portion of this will be spent for rolling stock and other betterments, the manufacture of which gives employment to millions, at higher wages, and the entire United States will be favorably affected.

Cotton Mills and Products.

Depleted stocks, both here and abroad, must be restored. Mills in New England and southern states will be kept busy.

Shipbuilding.

The tremendous tonnage contracted for by the Shipping Board will make for banner business in not alone such communities as are affected by the steel industry allied to ship and engine building but those states that are the center of the lumber industry will be favorably affected through the construction of wooden ships. This applies to Washington, Oregon, Maine, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Arkansas and Louisiana, all of which are timber states.

In view of the fact that over three million tons of new shipping is promised this year the new ship yards located in the states of Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Texas, California, Oregon and Washington, together with the states bordering on the Great Lakes, will secure unprecedented prosperity because of the shipbuilding activity. The influx of labor to these shipbuilding points and the distribution of wages running into billions will be of tremendous moment to the thousand and one industries that are recipients of this bounty.

Such states as are producers of raw products as iron, coal, copper, lead and zinc will have their laps filled overflowing with wealth.

The sheep raising states will also participate in this wonderful prosperity. Wool commands the highest price known in the history of the world.

Munitions Manufacture—In order to relieve freight and terminal congestion the government has ordered all munition work scattered. This will send to the Central States tremendous contracts that heretofore have been given to manufacturers located near the coast. This is of particular interest to Indiana, Michigan, Illinois and Missouri.

And all in all with bank vaults crowded with gold and rates of interest low, the desire for entertainment by men, women and children must necessarily become intense and the moving picture theater is bound to look forward to a standing-room-only condition.

World Pictures sees the handwriting on the wall, and it is active in its preparation to meet the demand for interesting features. It is going to be ready. It behooves all sales forces to be at their posts. The starting bell is about to be rung.

Lasky Talks of West Coast Activities

Says Big Organization Plans for Biggest Summer's Work Since Formation of Company.

JESSE L. LASKY, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of productions, has just returned to New York from California, where he has been supervising the work of laying out the plans for the big summer activities at the West Coast studios. "Our studios in the West, as well as those in the East," said Mr. Lasky, "will witness the greatest production activities during the coming summer months since the inception of our organization. Our decks have been cleared and already some of the new stars have started work on their first Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

"Fred Stone is on deck in real earnest and has been climbing roofs, steeples, sliding down ropes and otherwise emulating a circus acrobat in his initial Paramount picture, 'Under the Top,' under the direction of Donald Crisp. Mr. Stone works with a will, likes it and has made a splendid impression by his democratic manner and pleasant personality.

"Lila Lee, our new 'find,' has just arrived and will start work immediately.

"Ethel Clayton will also start on her first picture as soon as Robert Vignola returns to the studio. Mr. Vignola was on his way East, in fact he had already reached Albany when he received his 'sailing orders' to return.

"George Melford has almost finished the Wallace Reid picture, 'The Source,' Cecil B. De Mille has practically finished cutting 'We Can't Have Everything.' It was shown recently in the projection room, and although not presented in finished form, was unanimously voted a positive success by those who saw it. It is full of laughs and big scenes and presents a novel story.

"The property, construction and scenic departments have been very busy of late with the various sets for the new stars, Fred Stone's story, in particular, being a circus story, calls for many novel effects that are uncommon to the film studio, such as tents, cages for wild beasts, the animal themselves, vast throngs of extras, performers for the circus and so on. Mr. Stone is a remarkably cool performer. Various other stars and companies are already in the midst of great activities for the summer and on the whole our studios will easily establish production records on the West coast for the coming months."

MANAGER NAT BARACH JOINS THE COLORS.

Another star has been added to the service flag of World Pictures. Nat Barach, manager of the Indianapolis exchange of World Pictures, left June 20 for Spartanburg to enter the ranks of Uncle Sam's boys to take up the fight to make the world safe for democracy.

Baxter of Denver's Isis Early on the Job

Stays on It, Too, Right Up to the Closing Hour, With Open Ears for Comments of Patrons.

By a Goldwyn Executive.

A MAN, woman or child cannot walk out through the lobby of the Isis theater, Denver, saying "I like this show" or "I don't like this show" without coming into instant contact with S. L. Baxter, the owner of the Isis.

For, from early morning until the house "goes dark" around midnight, Baxter is on the job, running his own business in person instead of by proxy. He has seen too many absentee owners of picture houses go to the wall through incompetent management to risk having anything happen from similar causes to his own profitable and splendidly managed Isis.

If the departing patron has said, "I don't like this show," Baxter goes after him with even greater celerity than if the expression was favorable, saying: "Would you mind telling me about the things you didn't like? I own this theater and am trying to present in it the things you—and two hundred thousand other "yous" in Denver—like. If I cannot have here at the Isis at least three—and maybe four out of five—weeks the things you like most, then I am going to lose your patronage after a while; and that is just what I do not want to do."

One is correct in the surmise that thus approached the patron invariably reveals the source of his dissatisfaction. It is correct, too, to assert that the patronage of Baxter's Isis theater comes very near picking its own programs for that house.

Five-Cent Admissions Now Only a Memory.

S. L. Baxter has a twinkle in his eye in surveying the era of advanced prices in the present day Denver as compared with the five-cent scale of prices that existed when he became an exhibitor in Colorado's chief city. So firmly was the five-cent scale established—not only for that period, but seemingly for the future as well—that when the houses went to ten cents some of the newspapers of Denver made vigorous outcry against trust influences in movies, against robbing the people of a democratic amusement at a democratic price of admission, and invited the grand jury to take action against the early kings of the local cinema.

Baxter is one of the pioneers among Western exhibitors; a man who sat in at the beginning, kept ahead of competition for many years and stands at the forefront in picture presentation in this modern era, in which showmanship has developed to the point where it is rated as being 50 per cent. responsible for the success or failure of a production.

"The things a veteran exhibitor must guard against most of all," says this alert exhibitor, "are getting out of touch with his patrons and getting obsolete in his ideas. Neither of these things will ever happen at the Isis, for I drive myself too hard. I know the newspaper business from long association and friendship with newspaper men of all types, and I have always admired and absorbed the newspaper point of view. I have sat so often in newspaper offices and seen the news arrive over the desks of the news and cable editors that it has always been a passion with me to watch imagination applied to a small typewritten news dispatch. Every piece of news that lands in type with headlines of varying sizes reflects the angle, the knowledge or the mental resources of the editor into whose hands the dispatches fell. The success of a newspaper is determined by the originality and power with which the editors or owners invest their news.

A Showman Must Create An Atmosphere.

"Exactly the same thing can be said of a motion picture showman. He must create an atmosphere. He must know angle. He must have vision and imagination. If he possesses these things and has a picture that is at least sixty per cent. in quality he can increase the percentage of power of the picture as high as ninety or even ninety-five per cent.

"But my greatest interest lies in knowing my patronage, not merely by sight as they pass in or out of the Isis, but by name and in such a manner that the patron and myself talk with each other. For years my programs at the Isis have been hand-picked by my audiences in conjunction with myself. Nothing is left to chance or accident. The same error of judgment in selection rarely ever happens a second time in the Isis, because there are too many of my patrons ready to say, 'Mr. Baxter, I don't like that feature and here are my reasons.' There are even more of the Isis patrons who say, 'Mr. Baxter, this is the kind of picture we want at the Isis.' There is a distinct Denver taste in pictures and we have catered to it."

Baxter a Liberal Advertiser.

Mr. Baxter is the Goldwyn first run in Denver and has had fine success with the Goldwyn stars and productions, thus duplicating the records made by Goldwyn exhibitors throughout his territory. He is a liberal advertiser in the daily newspapers of his city and receives excellent editorial co-operation from the publishers of Denver.

At the present time the Rocky Mountain News and Times seem to be giving the exhibitors of their city the most liberal and intelligent co-operation through the medium of well-developed motion picture departments. But the powerful Denver Post brings tremendous results for its amusement advertisers and rates as perhaps the best friend of amusements between Chicago and San Francisco. Messrs. Tammen and Bonfils are showmen themselves, the owners of a circus for many years, operators of varied amusement enterprises and the employers of the late F. W. White, one of the great dramatic writers of the country, who on each Sunday for years published the most distinctive theatrical article in the entire field of American journalism.

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" WIDELY USED TERM.

That the term, "Pershing's Crusaders," which is the name given the first United States official feature film, is rapidly becoming a phrase of national significance is evidenced by scores of press clippings being received daily at the publicity offices of the Committee on Public Information's division of films.

Not only do newspaper reports reveal the fact that "Pershing's Crusaders" has become a national byword, but also it has been found that the phrase has been and is being used repeatedly in scores of advertisements directed to friends and relatives of soldiers and to the fighting men themselves.

An official of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, through whose exchanges "Pershing's Crusaders" is being distributed, ascribes this highly interesting development to the tremendous popularity of the film "Pershing's Crusaders" and to the nation-wide publicity that the picture has received.

TWO MORE MONTREAL EXHIBITORS FINED.

Two more exhibitors of Montreal, Quebec, have been found guilty of permitting unaccompanied children to see moving pictures, as a result of the continuation of the campaign by the local police authorities to enforce the law which prohibits the admission of unaccompanied children into a theater. The two exhibitors, Harry Poulos and George Gladianos, were found guilty by Recorder Semple and were sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and costs each. A few days before ten local exhibitors received similar treatment for the same offence, and before that another group of local theater men were similarly accused and found guilty. There are not many more exhibitors in Montreal. The campaign has created a furore in local picture circles and has tended to discourage Montreal exhibitors in their efforts to continue in business despite war taxes and other heavy assessments.

INFORMATION COMMITTEE MAKES STATEMENT.

An impression prevails that the Government is not supplying any war film to be used in the news weeklies issued by the motion picture companies, due to the release of the Allies' Official War Review.

Charles S. Hart, director, states that the division of films is supplying material to the news weeklies regularly. The Allies' Official War Review is an entirely separate release, issued weekly by the division and distributed through Pathe.

SERGEANT GILL WOUNDED AT CHATEAU THIERRY.

Sergeant M. Gill, of the United States Marines, who played the part of the Bible reading sharpshooter in the trench scene of George Kleine's patriotic picture, "The Unbeliever," was among the severely wounded in one of General Pershing's casualty lists. It is assumed Sergeant Gill fell in one of the attacks at Chateau Thierry. From the mimic to the real warfare was but a short step in this soldier's life.

Reversing Old-Time School Proverbs

Present-day Educators Not as Enthusiastic as Their Forefathers in the Use of Proverbs.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

IN THE good old school days when writing was taught by means of "copy-books" and a two-fold lesson imparted by always using a proverb as the writing example, wisdom was instilled into the young mind while learning to write. It is not surprising that one who learned to write by copying "Procrastination is the thief of time" say a hundred times, finds it hard to forget the wisdom forced upon memory's eternal tablet. Equally difficult is to forget that other helpful piece of wisdom, "Strike the iron while it is hot," for this was another of those precious truths written upon the mind and the paper at the same time. After many years, how often have we been thankful for that foresight in the educators of those days, who used such a happy method of forcing home a truth while teaching a practical need; how many a time have these well-learned lessons come to the aid of the scholar in after years and proved helpful to a degree never anticipated by even the most sanguine teacher of those wise times. This same method of teaching is unfortunately now no longer common, indeed if it were the scholars would be horrified to find that their teachers were often practicing the very contrary to the teaching of the precept.

In a recent issue of this paper it was necessary to point out that the evil of procrastination was not only allowed to exist to the loss of the time stolen, but it was further deliberately applied to the theft of the educational advantages now so needed by the youth of the land. Although the article in question was written as a result of positive experience gained among teaching authorities, it was never for a moment supposed that a school journal would, through its editor, stand for such a reactionary policy, yet, strange to say, the writer has a letter before him in which the Editor of a School Journal informs us that he is an advocate of waiting until "after the war" policy before giving the scholars the immediate benefits of the unlimited powers of the moving pictures, although he believes that the time is not far distant when "every school will be equipped for teaching by aid of the moving pictures"; surely such contradictory views can only be held by one who has never learned the thievishness of Procrastination or the benefit of "striking the iron while it is hot."

The Essentiality of Moving Pictures.

The war has not been all misfortune; along with many other benefits following in its train, we can only be concerned here with the fact that we have learned that the moving picture has become an acknowledged essential. In the last issue of the Moving Picture World, Secretary McAdoo, George Creel, H. A. Garfield and Herbert Hoover have given their testimony to the essential nature of the moving pictures; there are at the present time no four men in the world whose opinion and word is of more importance or value, and why? All of these men believing that it is both wise and timely to "strike the iron while it is hot," put their belief into practice with astonishing results.

These men, each in his own way a national leader, found that the moving picture was the greatest teacher in the world. One found that for nation-wide publicity the picture gave him the best results, another seeking to advise the nation on matters of food conservation turned to the moving picture for both precept and example. Another and perhaps greatest of all, when seeking to raise such a vast amount of money wherewith to finance many nations, found the moving picture his first and greatest helper.

Tens of millions of people were taught the fundamentals of all that those things which these national leaders wished them to know, but school teachers, whose profession it is to teach and to use the best teaching agencies think differently, and are going to wait "until after the war," they don't believe in the truth taught by "striking the iron while it is hot," they prefer procrastination. What an absurd position! Suppose Secretary McAdoo had said, "Wait until after the war," where would he have gotten his millions of dollars? Where would the Red Cross drive have been but for the Moving Pictures? Suppose they had waited "until after the war"; it makes one indignant to be called upon to deal with such narrow views, and this indignation is the deeper when we have to think that people with educational interests entrusted to them are the leaders in procrastination, and will allow the iron to chill before they will strike even a very tardy blow to mould it into shape; there is evidently something beneath the surface which is hidden for very shame, in the hope that the time between now and "after the war" will give it occasion to pass away or else to appear in a less discreditable form. The great glory of the moving picture lies in the fact that when given the opportunity it has always justified itself, recent events have carried it still higher —it is now a government acknowledged essential. From this we are bound to fear that school teachers dread the fact that when given full scope in the school it may there become an essential also; why their dread we do not fully know, although we have some idea of it.

The Passing of Narrowness.

Another great lesson taught by the conflict and strife now raging is that many of those narrow ideas of but a few years ago are passing away. In politics, religion, in all ways of strong partisanship there has been such a coming together that many of the old dividing lines are in many places scarcely discernible; men have grown tolerant and broad, and in their growing have grown great; breadth is greatness, narrowness is always small, narrowness is never helpful; churches with narrow ministers never grow and are not beneficial, a rut is always a narrow gauge road, the greatest misfortune is that this growth in principle has not yet reached our public school system, not because of the hindrance of the public but because of the non-extensive vision of the leaders in school thought. If further proof were desired it can readily be found in those schools where more wide awake leaders have put the pictures to the test and have found them essential to the well-being of the young people; the enthusiasm of these men is unbounded and they are among the first to lament the lack of progress among their own class.

Contrasts Between the First and the Last.

The President of the United States at the outbreak of the war sent for a well-known leader in moving picture work and asked him to line up the powers of the moving picture to help in the war. The President of the Red Cross sent for a leading moving picture man and asked him to organize a Red Cross Moving Picture Bureau. The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States sought the help of the moving pictures to educate the people along those necessary lines which would lead them to such an understanding of the occasion that a great financial drive might be successful. At the present time the government is maintaining a moving picture bureau for the purpose of bringing from the war areas true and authentic pictures to be published under governmental direction for the perfect instruction of the people of the United States. These leaders of the nation are first to know, and to use their knowledge of the unlimited powers of the pictures, this their first knowledge has been vindicated not only by results but by their written testimony. Leaders of scholastic thought, however, think differently; they are last thinkers; for them "after the war" is time enough; the scholars might know too much and too soon; they must be guarded and protected lest they make too much progress; to learn too quickly may not be good for their nerves; they must go slowly, for school authorities are always slow and they must live up to their traditions. In all the camps and cantonments the moving picture is the first thing installed for teaching purposes, governmental instruction by moving pictures is commanded, everything is taught by means of the pictures; how thankful we ought to be that our cantonments are not in the hands of those who are going to wait "until after the war" before using the pictures for teaching purposes. It is with thoughts of this kind that we are compelled to come to the conclusion that some other name rather than procrastination is needed to better describe this crime against the youth of our schools, it is a compliment to call it ignorance because it more nearly approaches willful and criminal neglect. To those of us who are daily able to see the governmental and other pictures in this New York center of advance picture teaching, there always comes a feeling of sadness that there are thousands upon thousands who cannot enjoy the privileges which are ours; this feeling naturally inspires the efforts to do all in our power to have other multitudes share with us this great blessing. Who then can describe our feelings if when we approach those through whom this result can be best obtained they answer "not yet," "we are too busy with less important things which we prefer to do."

Regions Covered by Noted Photographer Include Wyoming, Montana, Idaho and California with One Great Shot in Redwood Country.

ROBERT C. BRUCE, whose beautiful scenics of the Great West are eagerly awaited by Rialto and Rivoli patrons in New York and by the patrons of many other first-run houses throughout the country, has just emerged from the California wilds, where he has been filming Yosemite Park, as well as the forests of giant redwoods and the Mount Shasta range in the northern part of the Golden State.

Mr. Bruce writes to the Educational Films Corporation that so far this season he has obtained about 12,000 feet of exceptionally good film and he feels exceedingly pleased with his progress. From now on—he is working in Oregon and Washington—he must "jump very fast," as the forest fires are starting earlier than usual and these cause an atmospheric haze that interferes with the best photography. Among the Bruce subjects which will be released late this summer are "The Tenderfoot," "The Logging Drive" and "The Tides of Yesterday." The last named is a poetic idyll on the order of "A World o' Dreams" or "The Trail to The Sky." It is founded on Longfellow's poem, "The Tide Rises, The Tide Falls" and is a picture symphony of the sea in daylight, twilight, darkness and sunrise.

"For three years," Mr. Bruce writes, "I have been trying to get a good logging picture—not the fake stuff but the actual smashing of a log jam and the drive of the giant logs down the roaring current. I believe I have at last achieved this in my new picture, 'The Logging Drive,' which will also give a vivid presentation of logging and lumbering among the redwoods."

Besides expeditions to the Teton Mountains, Wyoming; the Bitter Root Mountains, Montana; the Priest River and Shoshone Falls country in Idaho; the Shasta range and Lake Tahoe in California, Mr. Bruce and his party have completed an extensive scenic study of the Yellowstone National Park. The human and animal crew included a cowboy guide, two helpers, a raw recruit from the film colony of San Francisco, a great dane, the wire-haired terrier Buddy, and the usual burros and pack animals. The film friend from San Francisco obligingly posed for Mr. Bruce in the role of "The Tenderfoot," the title around which Bruce has grouped one of the reels. The theme is said to enable him to combine his well known humor and gay insouciance of spirit with the grandeur of the magnificent Yosemite subject.

Recently the supply of Bruces available for distribution by the Educational has been running rather low, so it will be good news to the myriad admirers of the Nature director's art that he is practically ready with another series.

"Making an American Cheese" (Universal).

In the 78th issue of the Screen Magazine will be found an interesting and well-illustrated story on the making of American cheese. The milk heated in vats to 86 degrees Fahrenheit is treated to the proper quantities of vegetable coloring matter and rennet extract, after which as the milk coagulates frequent tests are made for the thickness of the curd. With wire grids the curd is cut fine to drain out the whey. As the curd grows thicker it is milled into small strips for salting, after which it is packed into forms in which it is pressed for eighteen hours. Good cheese should be about one third butter fat we are told, and each batch is tested to prove this quality. The full process of manufacture takes 24 hours, but it is months before the cheese is cured ready for eating.

"Britain's Bulwarks No. 9" (Pathe).

This instructive subject pictures intimately a visit of King George and Queen Mary to the French front. They visit the hospital at Etaples, meet the Prince of Wales, Sir Douglas Haig and King Albert of Belgium. They also inspect aeroplanes, tanks, flame throwers and study other things included under the general heading "the black arts of war."

"From Nature's Curiosity Shop" (Universal).

An interesting collection of curious little animals mostly of the lizard family are shown in the 77th issue of the Screen Magazine. Among them is the Peruvian Tegu, very strong for his size, and also very fat and fond of chickens. The Gila monster, whose bite is very poisonous, is shown The Mexican Horned Toad we are told is also really a lizard, and has an ingrowing disposition. The Zonure, a spiky resident of the African deserts and first cousin to the American lizard is introduced in a slightly peeved condition. The last of this interesting group is the shingle-backed Australian lizard.

"Schematography" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting example of the advancement of American universities in the preparation of the millions of young men and women who each year enter their doors for the purpose of acquiring an education, is shown in the 126th issue of the Pictograph. This picture, made through the courtesy of Teachers College of Columbia University, shows how the physical welfare of the students is kept constantly in sight by a system of charts. On entering the college each student has a schematograph or outline photograph made which shows the exact contour of body and limbs. By comparing this with the outline of a normally developed person the differences are immediately apparent. These are corrected by exercises.

"British East Indies" (Post Film-Pathe).

A travel number picturing life in Trinidad in an instructive way. The native barbers perform some surprising feats and might give lessons to barbers in other parts of the "Basse Terre, Island of Guadaloupe" (Pathe).

A Pathe film recently shown at the Rivoli theater, New York City, was more than usually attractive as a travel number, and was entitled "Basse Terre, Island of Guadaloupe." This island is a member of the West Indies group and bathes its shores in the waters of the Caribbean Sea. Terre Basse is a quaint old town in which are to be found most picturesque spots, century old buildings and bridges, and native types plying their daily round of business. An old sugar cane mill run by water power into which the sugar cane is being industriously fed by natives is one of the interesting features of the picture.

"The First Flyer"

L. M. Glackens of Bray Studios Makes Unique Animated Study Showing Development of Principle of Flight.

THE latest of the L. M. Glackens animated drawings for the Bray Studios, Inc., appears in the 126th release of Pictograph, and is a unique study in animation showing the development of bird life from the reptilian state to feathered songsters of the present day. His illustration, which is intensely interesting, also traces the basic principle of the flying machine to a close study of the bird structure.

It is a well known fact that during the early period of the earth's history there were no birds. The earth was almost entirely submerged beneath a shallow sea of water in which reptiles of all kinds and sizes lived. As the waters subsided, these reptiles, by necessity assumed new habits and new forms and it was from certain of these that bird-life originated.

The first flyng reptiles were strange, scaly creatures that glided rather than flew. Gradually however, their wings became of greater importance until they reached a stage of development where they depended more on their power of flight than on their speed on the ground. Nature then gradually changed their structure to aid them in their new surroundings, by replacing their scales with feathers; their heavy solid bones with hollow bones and their long tails with broad feathery apendages.

Man's mastery of the air was made possible by close study of birds and Mr. Glackens shows how similar are the flying machines designed after birds. Starting with the ill-fortuned Langley airplane, the development of the heavier-than-air flying machine is traced to the wonder machines that are now used over the battle fields of France.

"A Baseball Review"

Marty McHale's Thrilling Series Presents Baseball Stars Extolling Virtues and Introducing Humorous Situations.

THE first installment of a series of pictures taken by Marty McHale, in which all the stars of the Big League will appear, was exhibited at the Rivoli during the week of June 16. The subtitles for these series were written by Arthur ("Bugs") Baer of The New York Evening World, and contain considerable humor. The baseball fan, and this means no doubt at least two-thirds of the nation, will, to use a slang phrase, "eat up" these delightfully familiar studies of their favorite experts of the ball and bat. The picture also takes a dip at patriotism; nor does it forget to remind us of the numbers of the Big League members who are now directing their famous curves against the Hun. Marty McHale in the making of this series has established a screen record of American athletes which may later prove invaluable.

Bray Contracts for New Series

W. L. Finley of the Oregon State Fish and Game Commission to Contribute to Pictograph—First Number Introduces Wild Babies.

THE Bray Studios, Inc., have contracted with W. L. Finley of the Oregon State Fish and Game Commission for his year's output of animal studies. Mr. Finley is now engaged in making a fresh series of pictures the first of which appears in the 126th issue of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph.

This particular number demonstrates how wild babies take care of themselves while their parents are absent hunting dinner for them. The picture includes grizzly and mountain lion cubs, fawns but a few hours old, and a whole family of tiny deer-mice.

Mr. Finley has spent a life-time among the creatures of the wild and has come to know their ways and habits as few men have. His work has taken him into every nook and corner of the great state of Oregon where wild life abounds, and he has been unusually successful in filming the life history of the children of the forest and mountain.

"Mount Lassen in Action"

An American Volcano in Eruption Constitutes Feature of Recent Release of Educational Films Corporation of America.

ON JUNE 16 one of America's most remarkable sights was presented in photographed form to the public. This picture owned by the Educational Films Corporation of America was exhibited at the Rialto theater, New York City, during that week, and it is a revelation to those unacquainted with the activities of the Sierra Nevada's most formidable member. Northern California is the fighting ground of Mount Lassen. The release of "Mount Lassen in Action" through the regular exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation of America will take place the second week of July.

"Mount Lassen In Action" is indeed a remarkable picture. It shows the eruptive activities of the home-made California volcano that discharged its death-dealing stream of molten lava upon a large area of the Northern part of the Golden State in 1915, causing both loss of life and vast injury to crops.

One of the most impressive things in the film is the solidified wall of lava two score feet high that stopped abruptly in front of a peach orchard. Later on, the tops are shown of fruit trees almost engulfed in the white hot flood which is now solid stone; and under the great lava bed itself are remains of human habitations and habitants, submerged crops, drowned orchards and petrified animals.

J. J. Hammer, a free lance photographer of Red Bluff, Cal., took the picture. There were weeks of watchful waiting on the part of the patient cameraman to catch old Lassen in action, many times his efforts being thwarted by the drifting clouds across the Vulcan face of the quaking monster. Finally, on a clear day, he "got" Mount Lassen, billowy vapors, black furnace emanations, eruptive energy and all.

In and around the mountain are such charming motion picture locations as Tartarus Lake, Devil's Kitchen, the Steaming Paintpot, the Cinder Cone, the Boiling Springs and other apparent vents and orifices of Hades. The old fellow inside spits, sneezes, snorts, hisses, growls and thunders. Every once in a while, too, he entirely forgets that he is in polite, civilized U. S. A. and disgorges the liquid wrath of the crater like Aetna or Kilauea.

A PICTURE WHICH MAY BE SHOWN ANYWHERE.

One of the commonest inquiries coming to the educational department of the Moving Picture World concerning any picture is "Can this picture be shown anywhere?" By "anywhere" the writer usually means a school or a church; the common and natural idea being that if a picture can be shown in an educational or religious institution it is all satisfactory.

There has recently appeared a good picture which puts this "anywhere" theory to a peculiar test. "Hit the Trail Holliday" can be shown anywhere. We doubt, however, if it will be so freely shown; the "anywhere" in this instance will not mean the school or the church but rather that places of a somewhat opposite character will have to hesitate about showing this film. It is doubtful if this picture will be allowed anywhere where liquor interests are in control; it will certainly not be shown at a brewer's convention, neither will it be shown where there is any dependence upon the young men of the land to furnish the next generation of drinkers—no, this picture will not be shown in the "anywhere." To our usual educational inquirers we will say that this picture may be shown in any church where "Billy" Sunday would be allowed to speak; it ought to be shown everywhere where it will be helpful to young men; yes, and even young women will be benefited when they see how a young woman was helpful in becoming the mainstay of her father in a crisis. "Hit the Trail Holliday" is one of the best pictures to "point a moral or adorn a tale." It is full of humor with pointed wisdom, its logic is irresistible, its convicting powers are sure, victory for higher and right living will prevail wherever shown, it is the best picture of its kind and the Educator advises all its readers to use it. A review of this timely picture appears on page 1756, June 22, 1918. W. H. J.

Rev. Paul Smith's seven-part anti-vice production "The Finger of Justice" for which the State rights are being sold by the Arrow Film Corporation is worthy of serious consideration by educators. This picture which was reviewed in our issue of July 6, is one which should be given wide exhibition. It is entertaining as well as serving excellent propaganda in the nation-wide anti-vice campaign for which the picture was originally intended. The incidents in connection with the San Francisco anti-vice campaign which the Rev. Paul Smith was instrumental in starting are said to be authentic. The Web, an evil resort around which the events of the picture are centered, is intended to symbolize the famous Barbary Coast. A series of propaganda pictures are now being planned by Mr. Smith and his associates.

An Official War Film, entitled "Following the Flag to France" was exhibited at the Lexington Theater, New York City, on the evening of June 24, under the auspices of the Liberty Film Committee. This film which is being released by the Committee on Public Information is composed of stirring scenes including the reception of General Pershing in France, and also of the American soldiers. Scenes along Fifth avenue during a parade of our boys on their way to France are also to be seen, as well as inspiring views of portions of the American navy.

Alaska to Have Fine Picture Theater

Captain Lathrop to Build 600-Seat House in Cordova, the Fifth in His Chain.

CORDOVA is to have the finest theater building in Alaska and one of the finest in the entire northwestern part of the continent. Captain A. E. Lathrop, who already owns a string of four theaters in Alaska and has a controlling interest in a great many others, has returned from Seattle with all the contracts for the building and equipping of a reinforced concrete building which will house a 600-seat motion picture theater, several stores, and a number of up-to-date apartments. On account of the need for steel in war industries the reinforced concrete is being used instead of the regulation steel construction. The plans for the building call for three stories in front and five at the rear. Everything about the theater is to be up to the minute, including lighting, projection equipment, furniture and musical equipment. A fine pipe organ will be installed. Entertaining film service is also assured, for Captain Lathrop controls the distribution in Alaska of Paramount, Metro, Triangle, Mutual, and Pathe productions, as well as owning the rights to several big specials, such as "Cleopatra," the Chaplin releases and several star series.

The actual buying of the pictures from these companies was the solution of the Alaska film problem which Captain Lathrop and W. H. Code, of the Code theater in Nome, worked out. It took too long for a film to go and come from the interior and northern towns of Alaska for the rental of them to be profitable to the Seattle exchanges; so it looked as if motion picture theaters, which would be a blessing to the community as the only means of entertainment and a good business enterprise for their owners, were not to be opened, until Captain Lathrop and Mr. Code got together and worked out this plan of running a string of theaters and a motion picture exchange for Alaska as well. After being shown at the Lathrop theaters and at Mr. Code's house in Nome they are booked to other exhibitors through the territory.

The motion picture business is only a hobby with Captain Lathrop. He has many other interests in Alaska, and it was only a few years ago, after having already made a big business success, that he bought his first theater. He did not at that time intend to go into the business in the wholesale way in which he is now interested, but he saw a good "buy" in that first house and, to quote his own words, "I found the business so fascinating that I didn't want to leave it after trying it. I soon saw that, owing to the difficulty in getting film to Alaska, there was no chance for the man with only one theater, so I began to build and buy others." The four houses that he owns are in the towns of Anchorage, Seward, Valdez and Cordova. Capt. Cordova is one of the most prominent citizens of Alaska, being a director of the leading bank of Anchorage and head of various war activities, including the Red Cross drives and the work of enrolling war workers for the territory.

Rothstein Opens Tulsa's Majestic

For Twenty-five Miles Roundabout He Posts 24-Sheets and Advertises in Dailies—Gets Crowd.

THE new Majestic theater, Tulsa, Okla., one of the handsomest playhouses in the Southwest, was formally opened week before last with Mabel Normand in her Goldwyn picture, "The Venus Model," as the first attraction. Due to the alert advertising and clever showmanship methods of B. F. Rothstein, energetic manager of the new theater, the initial presentation at the Majestic brought out almost every showgoer in Tulsa besides hundreds of people from the small towns adjoining.

Weeks in advance of the opening date, Manager Rothstein had a large force of bill posters at work plastering Tulsa and towns and villages within a radius of twenty-five miles with attractive twenty-four-sheets on "The Venus Model." And Mr. Rothstein was just as liberal with the two newspapers in Tulsa. For ten days preceding the Majestic opening, half page ads on the beauty of the new playhouse and the excellence of the initial attraction were given prominent positions in both papers. As a result the Majestic received liberal publicity on the Goldwyn play and its star.

Manager Rothstein also made the most of the exploitation possibilities of his picture. He engaged a beautiful girl to pose as "The Venus Model" on a float fitted up to represent a bathhouse at the beach. The float was stationed in the public square and was viewed by thousands for two days before and all during the four-day engagement at the Majestic. The lobby also was transformed into a scene of bathing beach splendor.

The New Majestic represents the last word in theater building. It has a seating capacity of 1,300. There is an orchestra of ten pieces and a $20,000 organ which was built for Manager Rothstein by experts brought from the Coast. Patrons of the Majestic are complimenting the manager on the beauty of the new house.

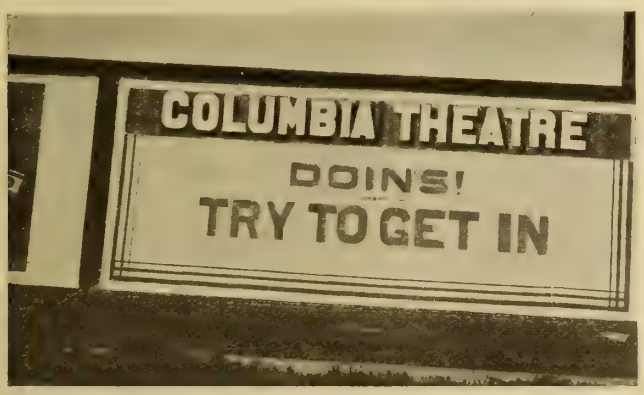
Reel Tax Nets $30,000 in Montreal

That Is the Sum Inland Revenue Department Expects to Collect Annually From Sixty-four Houses.

IN collecting the tax of 15 cents a reel for every day that a picture is presented in a theater in Montreal, Quebec, which levy has just been arranged by the Federal Government of Canada, the local office of the Inland Revenue Department is expected to collect more than $30,000 per year, according to estimates compiled by Montreal Government officials. In Montreal and vicinity at the present time there are sixty-four moving picture theaters in actual operation. There are others which have recently closed their doors.

At first there was a little difficulty with some of the exhibitors in explaining the operation of the new tax, but as soon as the matter was demonstrated these men readily submitted, it is declared. The exchange companies are required to provide statements of the reels in use and these lists are checked by department officials with information coming from the theaters and from other sources. In the case of a five-reel feature a run of three days is counted as fifteen reels, it is explained, and the Inland Revenue Department collects accordingly.

The new source of revenue is expected to produce about $600 a week in Montreal or more than $30,000 in a year.



Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Working All Angles.

ADVERTISING is not merely the announcement of films you have to show. It should be worked from all angles, and an effort should be made to give the house its full share of publicity. Too many managers trust to the house to speak for itself. And there are many little things which can be made into stronger advertisements than film announcements, if only you keep your eyes open. Ralph Ruffner, of the Columbia, Portland, Oregon, found that he could photograph himself in a panel mirror near the entrance. It must be some job to judge from the worried look upon his face, but he did it, as the illustration shows, and then he invited all the amateurs to come down and take a try. Many did, and, of course, each photographer took considerable time over the job, serving as a free ballyhoo for the house, and, equally, of course, every time the photograph is shown the explanation is added that it was taken in the mirror at the Columbia theater. It keeps the house name before the public, and makes for permanent advertising. There are a lot of things that can be done in the same way. Many houses have not only worked for the Liberty Loans, Red Cross, and enlistment, but they have loaned their lobbies for service, and have become identified with the movements. It all brings reputation to the house at little or no cost. Along the same lines Ruffner has changed his painted advertising boards. Instead of changing each week to anounce the current film he has repainted them to advertise the house, and now trusts to the newspapers and other work to get the titles over. It cuts cost, and at the same time we think the advertising value is as strong as before. Make them think of Columbia when they think of a theater and they will be apt to turn to the house when they want to see a picture. Even the form of the announcement may be an advertisement. The slogan shown in the board reproduced here is more apt to suggest originality of entertainment than one merely announcing motion pictures. Only lately a pious-minded exhibitor wrote in that he was not taking newspaper space to show the public how "cute" he is, as Ruffner did. He entirely overlooked the fact that newness of thought is in itself an advertisement of value. You buy tobacco in "that toppy red bag," or the one that "your nose knows" because it has been strongly presented to you. The tobacco companies are not wasting money to exploit the "cuteness" of their copy writers. They are taking space because originality of phrase strikes with double force. Until old-time exhibitors can rid themselves of the idea that clever exploitation is a thing to shun, they will continue to lose business they might have. We are not giving Ruffner more space than others because he is "cute," but because he has ideas of value to others who have the good sense to take the suggestions, and Ruffner knows that a catchy phrase is as much of an advertisement as the name of Mary Pickford or Charles Chaplin. He cleaned up with "Alimony" because he used the line "See it—or pay it," and it got into the conversation of the town for a few days. The film was good, but he made it known through clever presentation in a phrase that stuck. Work your advertising from all angles and not merely from the single viewpoint of announcing film titles in large letters.

Shoot Them In.

In sending in some advertising examples for the Dayton Theater Co., the correspondent remarks that he does not recall having seen anything from Dayton in this department. We're sorry, but it was up to Dayton to show they had something besides cash registers in the town. The Dayton uses a catchline, "The Theater Dominant," but it does not really impress very strongly because it does not get over. It sounds like saying something just to be saying something. It means something if you study it, but "dominant" is not a word in such common use that the average reader "gets" it at first glance. The advertisement is rather unusual in form, a double full-length column set with rule like a capital I with a bulge in the centre. The cross pieces and the bulge all carry the house name and catchline, the bulge cutting off the last half of the week from the opening four days. At first flash it does not look like good make-up, but it really is two good advertisements with the lines well displayed to give proper value to the points of moment. It will not work well much shorter than the full column, but it makes a good layout for a two-program advertisement. The reproduction merely suggests the shape, but it will be seen that the choice of black lines is well made. It is about the only well-laid advertisement in a number sent in for various houses. Most of them are far too full of type. The Strand is about the best of the other examples, but it is trying to advertise four titles in three sixes, set to about 6½ deep. The Orpheum is completely filled with talk of The Whip, apparently a loaned cut that has been used by others and more or less battered. The lines are not clear and must be studied out. The Columbia uses straight type composition, but uses entirely too much six-point. The New Alhambra and the New Globe, not to mention the Old Glory for a change, all take two columns 1¼ inches deep, hardly enough for a decent showing. The Alhambra sets even the names of the films and stars in eight-point and tries to get Mary Pickford, a Keystone comedy and the scale of prices all into four lines. It would have been better to have followed the Globe and at least have made some sort of a shout for the star. The average for the town is pretty poor and we do not altogether wonder that Dayton has not been represented before this.

A First Anniversay.

R. E. Sutton, of the Strand, Provo, Utah, got out a neat six-page railroad folder for his first anniversary, with one fold shorter than the others so that it might be sealed with the mailing stamp, one page being reserved for the address. The folder was on gray stock, printed in black, and presents a neat appearance. All persons over sixty were invited to a special matinee of "Mother o' Mine" one afternoon, which was a happy thought.

Growing.

Number 28 of the Revue, the house organ of the Empire theater, Tientsin, and the Pavilion, Peking, is twenty pages and cover and larger pages than the original form. It has grown into a really readable sheet with a good showing of local advertising and as much text as the average weekly. It is registered in the post office as a newspaper and seems to be entitled to such a registration. It is coming right along. More power to it. It is a credit to the picture business.

Why the Comparison?

In some flimsy emanation from the Goldwyn offices an official of that company is made to indorse the action of an exhibitor in billing Miss Risdon, the star of "The Manx-Man," as "The English Mary Pickford." Why? Miss Risdon is a capable player and should be permitted to stand upon her own feet and not be identified as the seeming imitator of another. It is no compliment to some originator. Let it be assumed that the player has a personality of his or her own sufficient to win success.

Save This for October.

It's too late for the third Liberty Loan, but make a note now for use on the next issue that P. E. Coe, of the Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, gave a two weeks' pass to the first hundred persons to prove possession of bonds of the third issue.

Still 100 Per Cent.

Gordon F. Fullerton sends in his campaign for "My Four Years in Germany" for the Coliseum, Seattle. It forms a nice study in efficient work. There are all sorts of displays and advertisements running from one column to a page, and yet the basis of the pictorial display is seven drawings. Five of these are black and whites shown in the first illustration. They were used as single column displays, as shown here, these being scattered through the paper. They are also used as the basis of a full page display advertisement, not shown here, and are enlarged to double column width for a two eighteens. They are also used to make up a set of two fours, as shown in the second cut. Always there is some striking speech taken from the story, and this is changed with each change of placement. The other two illustrations were these white silhouettes, used also as one-column cuts. Here, too, there is always a change of copy, for the white spaces are mortised to let in type and, when used as single columns, carry the title, while the house name runs at the top. The last example shows one of the blacks enlarged to form the basis of a twelve-inch cross page display. There is ample variety to the work, and that it pulled is shown by the fact that the film was held over for a second week, the first instance in the history of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses. And yet the illustration cost was merely the price of seven simple drawings and the cuts made from these in various sizes. There is none of the war atmosphere that marked some displays, yet there is something stronger than this. The illustrations catch the eye, and the extracts from the story get the attention and arouse the desire to see the play. Mr. Fullerton always does good work, but we have not seen a better planned campaign than this. It is efficient and compelling, and the simple illustrations probably pulled much easier than a more involved display might have done in this case. The last illustration shows the opening for "The Unbeliever," earlier shown. The house was darkened, and marine buglers in the lobby sounded the assembly. At the call the boys rose above the sandbag barricade, there was some firing, and then the orchestra played the Star Spangled Banner. Between shows a private who walked from Portland, Oregon, to New York to enlist made a recruiting speech. One hundred and twenty-three enlisted at the house, and the recruiting station also reported an increased registration. Saturday the house was turned over to the marines, who sold tickets, and the entire proceeds were given to the tobacco fund. To help along the sale two sham battles were staged by the marines in front of the theater preceding the matinee and evening performances. Throughout the week the marines were on duty at every show, and very materially helped to increase the patronage.

Old But Still Good.

F. W. Boll, of the Majestic, Stillwater, Minn., has been working the old junk idea to good results. The junk idea is worked on the lines of clean-up week, a prize being offered for the child bringing the largest string of tin cans to the theater, and an admission to everyone bringing in a specified number of cans. It cleans up the back lots and the old metal has a distinct value these days. Mr. Boll took the advertising and turned the cans over to the Red Cross. The cut shows the collection before it was removed, and Mr. Boll did not get an unusually large supply of cans at that.

Doing It Well.

The Film Forecast, the general organ for the Rowland and Clark theaters, Pittsburgh, got out a special cover design for the Red Cross drive, a really well-planned front. And then it got its advertising patrons to do their bit, and the advertisements fairly bristle with red crosses and Red Cross slogans. It was good work all through.

For the Propaganda.

The Cambria theater, Johnstown, Pa., uses a half page for the Gerard My Four Years in Germany. Possibly this is a stock cut, since it follows the twenty-four sheets, but it is a good layout, whether original or borrowed, and it stands out well in the paper. It gives a good attractor, one in keeping with the subject, tells its story briefly and well, and gets the big facts down so that may be seen at a glance. It will be noted that in the small town the film is selling at a fifty cents top. It is one of the best advertisements for this film we have seen yet.

Improved.

The Grand theater, Keokuk, Iowa, has changed from a one-page to a four-page program, pages 5½ by 9. It is a big improvement in every way on the one-page program mentioned in our issue for April 27th. The four pages give a better program layout, and the other three pages are taken up by the house for chat and announcement, save the lower third of the last page, which is printed up for the address with a post office permit, making it a self-mailer. It has only gone two numbers in its new form, but it looks like a veteran. For one thing, they supply enough copy so that the items do not have to be spaced out until it stops looking like a regular, and for another thing, the editor has something to say when he uses type. He knows how to talk, but nothing he says is better than this extract:

> —Folks, if you'll just learn to read our ads, trust us, believe in us, and take our tips, you'll be in position to get the most pleasure out of motion pictures. We tell the truth and we will not disappoint you.

That's the way to talk, if you are willing to back talk with deeds. Get the confidence of the public, cherish it, and you can get a big house without an excess use of superlatives. The Grand has made a change much for the better and gets into the list of regulars.

A Tip for Tarzan.

The cut shows a window display of the St. Paul Book and Stationery Co., for Tarzan of the Apes, engineered by Theo. L. Hays, manager of the New Garrick theater. There are several of the Tarzan books and the display can be made more varied than the usual window devoted to a single title. More than this, the books are still good sellers, and live book stores will welcome the use of stills with which to make a display. If you are in a small town and your dealer does not care to stock a windowful of books, he can probably get the paper covers to place on other books to round out the display.

Festivals.

The Victoria, Buffalo, announced a recent week as Festival Week. That listens well, and the attractions back up the sound, but it is about an average Victoria bill at that, and the festival is merely a peg to hang some new talk on. But it reminds that there are a lot of special weeks that can be used with a little thought. Think some up, make a special noise and a little lobby decoration and you'll get extra business without letting your patrons realize that the special is just advertising and not something extra good. It will seem extra good because it has been well advertised, and imagination will do the rest if you have a reasonably good program. You cannot make bad films seem good with advertising, but assuredly you can make good film seem better by praising it up a little—which does not mean superlatives.

Stamps For a Title.

The Hill theater, Newark, changes from a mailing card to a throwaway to get over an offer of a reward with a black type display of these lines:

R — E — W — A — R — D
On Monday, May 27, and Tuesday, May 28, we will show a picture of a famous
M U R D E R
Mystery
At the "HILL" Theatre.
This picture has no "name" or "title," and has just been imported from Russia. To the person suggesting the most appropriate "name" or "title" we will give a full card of
T H R I F T S T A M P S
EACH EVENING

It adds that it is "all picture—no words." We would like to see a picture with such a scarcity of sub-titles. The scheme can be worked with any picture provided that the sub-titles are not also lettered with the main title in the corner, and you can work up a surprising lot of interest in the alleged contest. For another evening they announce the personal appearance of Edna Goodrich in connection with her picture, "American Maid." You have to hustle for business when you tire your patrons with ten-reel shows as most of the Newark theaters do.

Has a Photoplay Page.

Trench and Camp, the Y. M. C. A. paper published by the Atlanta Constitution for Camp Gordon, has a photoplay page. One feature is a schedule of the films shown in the various Y. M. C. A. huts at the camp. It gives readers the current attractions and a little filler along with a couple of pictures of the stars.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Poor Stories.

ABOUT the hardest work we have to do is to read the stories of the current releases in synopsis as sent out by the press agents of the various companies. It is irritating to handle story after story that depends upon the acceptance of an impossibility for its foundation. If the deserted wife did not kill herself, the story could not have happened, though from all angles the bride was not of the suicidal sort. If the innocent man had not run away when unjustly accused of murder, the story could not have happened. Most of these stories are studio made and would not be passed by the editor or director did they come in from a free lance, yet editors and producers continue to remark that they have to look to their staffs because they cannot depend upon authors. We must have better stories before we can have better business, and staff hacks cannot write the proper sort of stories under the conditions in which they work. Real authors must be encouraged to write for the screen, and must be helped to an appreciation of the screen needs, as contrasted with straight fiction needs. At present they are told to write the idea and the staff will fix it up, then they see themselves blamed for some monstrosity on the screen and decide that they will write no more. The film game is no place at the present time for a practiced writer who kicks because some minor printer's error changes the sense of one paragraph of his story, for he will find that the director changes the entire sense of his story. And yet we need the work of practiced writers as we never have before, and each writer who is coaxed in now will be twice as hard to get when a change in production methods brings more accurate reproductions of a script. Bannister Merwin is working under ideal conditions in London. He writes his story and explains to his director how he wishes it made. The director superintends the rough rehearsals and then Mr. Merwin steps in and gives the final touches that ensure his ideas being carried out. This is what we must come to, eventually, in this country. The author must be able to write practicable stories, scene by scene, and should, if possible, be permitted to supervise the final rehearsals. Then we shall have more of the story and less sameness in method.

Knowing the Market.

This seems to be the week for repeating that no one can tell you much about the markets. You must learn them for yourself. We are getting market tips all the time, but the only trouble is that no two agree, and in the same day we are told that a company is and is not buying, just as they happen to impress the individual. And the company itself cannot say that it is or is not buying. Most of them dare not say that they are and do not like to say that they are not because they maye lose some good material that way. The only thing to do is to offer stuff until you are certain that you cannot suit a market, and then the question opens anew whenever you see that there has been a change in editors. Keep posted on the changes in staff, style of production, general direction and everything else concerning the companies, and above all learn to distinguish the news from the press agent bunk. Usually the newly appointed Director General or whatever he styles himself, who announces that under his management the company is going to pay "the highest prices" for worthy scripts doesn't know a continuity from a synopsis and cares less which is which. He is talking for effect. On the other hand the four-line announcement that John Smith now has charge of the script department of a company may mean that the company is in the market at fair prices. The important point is not whether the company is buying or not, but whether it will buy from you. You may not write well enough or you might not write their style of story. It does not matter which if no sales is your personal answer.

Putting on Weight.

Learn to "feel the heft" of your picture. Know how much it weighs. If you line up in front of a penny-in-the-slot weighing machine you'll probably find a table of weights, showing what persons of certain stature should weigh. It is not always an exact guide, but people of that height who weigh about the indicated number of pounds are apt to be the healthiest. If they weigh more it is apt to be surplus fat and a handicap, and if they weigh less they are probably weak. It is the same way with a story. It may be too thin or too heavy. It may not have enough detail or it may carry too much, but if it carries just about what a five-reel story should, then it is proper weight and apt to make a far better production than it would were it too thick or too thin. It may seem difficult at first to tell just what will make a good five-reeeler, and it may seem that you need six reels or cannot do better than four, but with practice you can make your stories worth just about five reels just as the syndicate writer can grind stuff to his syndicate's wants. You learn to add a little or to take a little out and in time the habit becomes automatic and you have to give it no particular thought. It is the same with a synopsis as it is with a continuity. You can think just about five reels of idea and then if the reconstructor goes wrong it is no fault of yours, but if you sent in a three-reel idea and the padding shows through you assuredly are to blame if you sell it for a five-reeler.

Writing in Psychology.

Several have sought to contest Cecil De Mille's opinion that the story of the future will contain more psychology and less vivid action. The objections are almost wholly based upon the argument that psychology is mental, and mental states cannot be shown in action. In "The Whispering Chorus" Mr. De Mille supplied much of his own answer. Psychology is mental, but the reflexes of a mental state may be shown in action. It is not so much psycho analysis as intelligence that Mr. De Millie pleads for, at best. The thing he really wants, it would seem, is not a deep analysis of motives so much as a common sense reason for what is done. He wishes action guided by intelligence rather than the whims of the director. In "The Whispering Chorus" he uses the man's conscience as the motive rather than a sudden good impulse. He knows that a sudden impulse is apt to be retracted, but the long continued self-accusation brings with it a permanent mental change. It is by no means the complex matter it seems at first to be. It is easier to write than the inspirational story once you have mastered the trick, but you must study and master the idea and learn how to explain through action, but little aided by leader, why this or that impulse is followed.

Plausibility.

In spite of all that has been said, we still get far too many plots that are dependent upon their acceptance for success. If you can accept as fact the incidents related the plot is a good one, but generally you cannot accord such acceptance. During the past few months many designs have been offered for a new fifteen cent coin, but we cannot imagine anyone paying ten cents for such an issue on the grounds that it might later be adopted by the government. And yet to try and sell fifteen cent pieces now is no worse than offering editors a plot that is good if they can believe it. And as pointed out long ago, it is not sufficient that the thing told of has happened. It must be such a happening as can be accepted by everyone. Last summer one of the tents of the Maine volunteers at Augusta was struck by lightning. One man was killed and another merely had his boots stripped off by the fluid. That was plausible, because it is known to most persons that lightning performs such freaks. But this was the second time the same man had undergone precisely the same experience. The fact was well established in his own circle, but it would be difficult to get persons unacquainted with the fact to accept as plausible a story wherein a recurrence of the accident was the essential point in the plot—as for instance the restoration of the man's sanity lost in the terror of the first accident. The thing has happened, but it will not be accepted as having happened, and therefore it is just as wildly improbable as the suggestion of a man being blown to the moon and back again. Do not be content with the knowledge that your plots has been based upon fact. A convincing invention is far better than an unaccepted truth. Offer stories that will be accepted without question instead of trusting to strange truths for your novelty.

Sympathy.

A recent comedy trusted largely to the actions of a mild lunatic for its humor. His introduction permitted the use of some laughable leaders, but the general effect was one of pity for the unfortunate. It is a mistake to suppose that lunatics, inebriates and similar unfortunates are a source of mirth. They may seem funny at the moment, but the after effect is almost certain to be bad. At best it is brutal humor, the lowest form of comedy, and should be used sparingly. The misfortunes of a pompous, overbearing old man are humorous because he assumes to himself an unwarranted importance and it pleases us to see his pseudo dignity crushed, but he has brought his troubles upon himself. The lunatic suffers from an affliction that inspires pity and his condition cannot be used for comedy as a rule, though there are some exceptions to this, as the polite lunatic in "The Belle of New York," if you remember that far back.

Missing.

What's become of those near-authors who used to write in for a good collaborator to do all of the hard work and take a third of the receipts? We have not heard from one of these in a long time, and surely they cannot all be dead.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

I stopped in Pittsburgh on my last trip with the purpose in view of visiting the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company's plant in East Pittsburgh, which employs a matter of 25,000 or 30,000 people. At the depot, Ralph Freeman, Business Agent, and A. G. Williams, Financial Secretary, Pittsburgh Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local Union 171, extended the hand of welcome; also L. C. Van Orsdale of Local Union 306, New York City, who has been in Pittsburgh for the past eighteen months. No arrangements had been made to address the Pittsburgh men at the time of my visit, so we enjoyed a pleasant chat, and other things for which Pittsburgh is famous, after which it was the hay for ours.

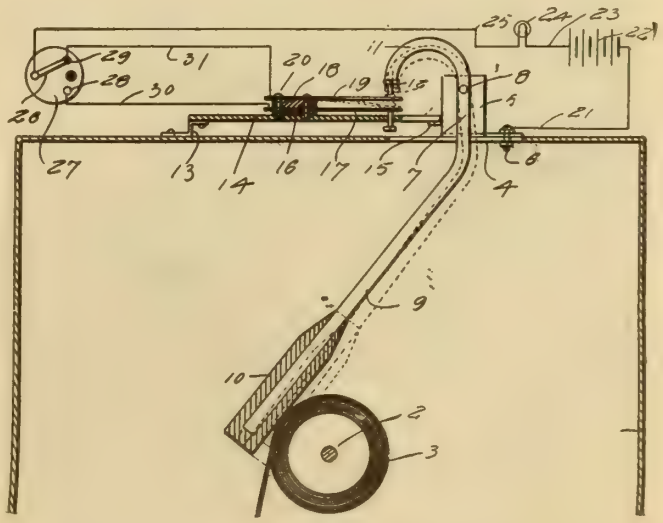
The Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company's Works is located in East Pittsburgh, twelve miles from the city. It is an enormous institution. I have visited most of the large institutions of this kind in the country, but none have a greater interest than the East Pittsburgh Works, which boasts the largest manufacturing plant under one roof in the entire world. I was particularly struck with the great number of women working in this plant. The Votes-for-Women contingent runs into the thousands. They are employed for the most part in armature winding, coil insulating and clerical positions; also they are largely used in the small assembly department. In fact, there are so many points of interest in this huge plant that if I went into detailed description, a whole issue of the paper would be easily consumed. At the plant I met H. M. Wible, in charge of the Rectifier Sales, and A. L. Atherton, Engineer on Rectifiers, C. R. Powell, Industrial Sales, J. C. McQuiston, Manager Department of Publicity, as well as A. L. Amelung, Assistant Manager in charge of Advertising. These gentlemen almost gave me a case of calloused feet, showing me around the plant. In going, for instance, from the Rectifier Department to the Motor Generator Set Department, one almost needs to take along a grip and some extra clothing, his hat and an umbrella; this, of course, being due to distance. Distance, my boy, is entitled to respect when one is in the home of the Westinghouse.

The company is now ready to place on the market a new type mercury arc rectifier for motion picture work. This rectifier has a number of characteristics which will interest both exhibitor and operator. It is very compact, occupying small floor space; also it is only 3 feet in height over all. It is to be made in 30, 40 and 50 ampere capacity. The bulbs of this rectifier are of special design, so made that for a given capacity they possess heat radiating properties considerable in excess of the regular bulb of that capacity. This has the effect of prolonging the life of the bulb. In other words it avoids the necessity for the purchase of an excess size bulb, which has been the general practice in the past. The bulb tilting arrangement presents one radical difference from former procedure. The bulb normally, when not in use, rests in a tilted position, as shown in illustration, with the mercury bridged from the main mercury pool to the mercury pool in the starting anode. When the current is turned on, the bulb is tilted to upright position, thus breaking the mercury bridge and starting the arc. This possesses no particular advantage from the operating standpoint, but makes the construction cheaper. It is, therefore, a distinct advantage from the exhibitor's viewpoint. The rectifier has the necessary arrangement for accommodating various line voltages and the necessary switches to change from direct to alternating current at the arc.

I have suggested to the Engineering Department that the bulb be painted black, and that matter is under consideration. The painting of the bulb black will have the advantage of eliminating the highly objectionable light from the bulb where the instrument is installed in the operating room, and its elimination will be accomplished in the best possible way.

And now here is something that will interest the exhibitor. This machine, which according to the claims of the company, has all the characteristics of former rectifiers in equally good form, will sell at a list price of $150 for the 30 ampere rectifier and $250 for the 50 ampere size, which is a horizontal reduction of approximately 50 per cent., in addition to which the new machine has a higher electrical efficiency than the old one. I have not myself witnessed tests on this machine, but Mr. Atherton, Designing Engineer of the rectifier, claims an electrical efficiency of approximately 72 per cent.

The fact that the machine is put out by the Westinghouse Company is sufficient guarantee as to its mechanical excellence. At the time of my visit, there were no machines completed in their permanent form. It is my intention to, as soon as the machines are finally completed, give complete data on both the new Westinghouse Mercury Arc Rectifier and Westinghouse Motor Generator Set.



The Westinghouse Motor Generator Set for motion picture work is of the horizontal type, very solidly constructed, with heavy rotor-armature shaft. It occupies a floor space of about 5' x 24". The height of the machine itself is approximately 24". The machine is equipped with a switchboard carrying all necessary controls. Particulars with regard to method of change-over, etc., together with illustrations, will be given at the time of my next visit to Pittsburgh. I might add, however, that the Westinghouse Motor Generator has had a very thorough try-out during the past three or four years, and has met with favor upon the part of the users.

Looks Promising.

This department is in receipt of a communication from the "Indiana Trade News Service" which describes what seems to be a promising invention. The I. T. N. S. says in part:

> Raymond C. Schull, projectionist at the Grand theater, Kokomo, Indiana, has patented (presumably he is the inventor.—Ed.) a signal attachment for projectors. * * * With Schull's device attached to a projector the operator will receive a signal that the reel is about to end. The device, which is adjustable, works after this fashion: When the last seventy-five feet of film is reached a buzzer sounds a signal, warning the projectionist that a tiny electric lamp will soon begin flashing. In a few seconds the flashes begin, and the projectionist knows the point where the idle projector should be started is near. A few seconds of flashing and the light glows steadily, this being the signal to start the next projector. Schull has his device on both projectors at the Grand, and says they work perfectly. He says they may be easily incorporated in new projectors, also may be attached to old machines at small cost.

The device works as follows: 10 in the patent office drawing is a felt pad which is presumed to drag on the film roll, and that much of it I cannot agree with at all. 9 is an arm, presumably of metal, terminating at its upper end in a curve, 11. 14 is a piece of insulating material upon which is mounted another block of insulating material, 18. 19 and 17 are metal strips to which wires from switch contacts 28 and 29 are connected. 22 is a battery and 24 a buzzer, bell, or small lamp. Switch arm 26 is left normally on contact 29, and it will be readily seen that when arm 9 drops far enough to form contact with strip 19 (there is an adjustment screen, 21, on end of arm) an electric circuit will be established, and the buzzer will perform or the lamp light, though just where the buzzer and flashing lamp both come in I do not quite see, or even the flashing lamp, unless Schull figures on all reel hubs being out of center enough to cause contact to be broken. This is presumed to occur at the right distance from the end of the film to start the lamp of the idle projector, at the same time moving switch arm 26 to contact 28, which, as you will see, breaks the circuit and extinguishes the lamp or puts the spell of silence upon the buzzer until strip 19 is bent enough by the lowering arm to touch strip 17, whereupon the light or buzzer performs again, and that is the time to start the second projector.

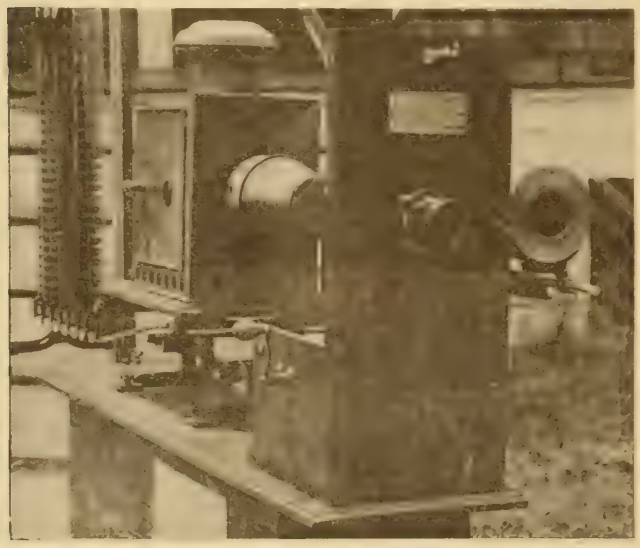
The thing seems to be entirely practical, but I seriously object to anything dragging on the film. It might injure any film, but would be pretty certain to scratch a green first-run. The two-signal idea is one we have advocated in this department, and it seems to be put into practical form here. Pin 8 should be very close to the top of block 5, so that the housing may fit close to rod 9, since thus the fireproof magazine will still be just as fireproof as it ever was. Given a ball-bearing wheel made like a toothless sprocket to run on the film edges instead of pad 10 this department would be interested in examining the mechanical construction of this device. If that part is satisfactory we would recommend it to the projectionists for consideration.

Reducing Motor Speed.

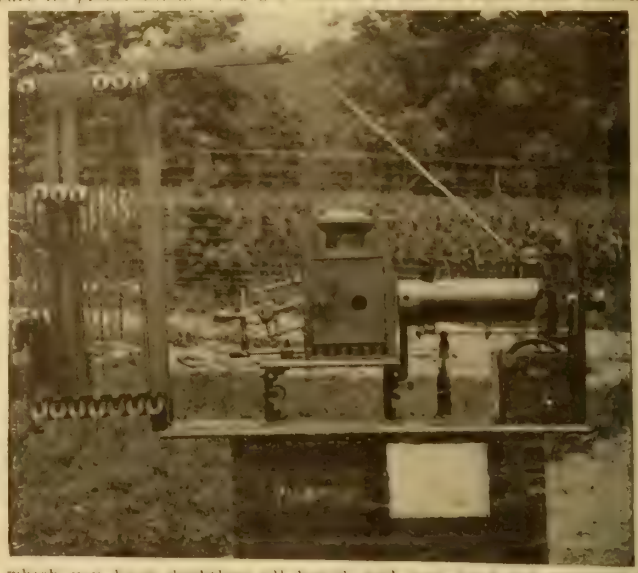
Joseph Grasso, New York City, New York, presents the following:



> Will you kindly help me out? Am running Power's 6-A, pulling it with a small, very high speed motor (2750 R. P. M.) formerly used for a pianola. Current, A. C., 60 cycle. Have very small pulley on motor shaft, but projector runs too fast. Belt runs direct from motor pulley to pulley on projector mechanism. Is there any way in which I can reduce the motor speed by using a lamp in series, as is done with D. C. motors? If so, please advise, giving sketch of wiring.

Now here is a good brother who asks wiring sketch and does not tell me size, type, or make of motor. There are several types of A. C. motors; also there are single, two and three-phase motors. I could not offer intelligent advice as to how to reduce the speed of the motor without at least knowing what kind of an animal it is. But I don't think I would advise reducing its speed. It probably is very small, and if you reduced its speed materially it might not develop sufficient power to do the work. I would suggest that you get two more pulleys of different sizes and put them on a short shaft, with suitable bearings to carry it, belting from the motor to the larger pulley and from the smaller shaft pulley to the projector. You will have to calculate the necessary sizes of the jack-shaft (that is what we would call the short shaft) pulleys. You can call up almost any belting house, and they will give it to you. You will have no speed regulation, of course. I would suggest that, if there is a name-plate on the motor, you write the manufacturer, giving every bit of data contained on the plate, and asking how its speed can best be controlled; also you might make a speed controller as per Fig. 119, Page 279 of the Handbook.

A Genuine Relic.



A. H. Cobb, Jr., manager Hartsville Amusement Company, Hartsville, S. C., sends in photographs of a genuine curio, and with the following letter:

> I noticed some time ago in the projecton department a photograph of one of the first Edison machines made. With the idea in view that further photographs may be of interest, I hand you herewith two of the complete machine, which will show method of threading. The film was all in 50-foot lengths, its ends joined together so that it formed a continuous band, just like the belts used for driving machinery. The machine shown was sold in 1896. I have the original bill of sale from the factory in Orange, New Jersey. It certainly is interesting to compare this projector with late models of modern machines; also to compare the films. The action in the old fifty-footers was so slow and methodical. It is really amusing to run some of them. I have about 1,500 feet of them, assorted subjects, and have run them several times for amusement. It certainly would be a remarkable exhibition to place the old model beside the new. Trust the photos will be of interest to your readers, and in closing wish to tender my kindest personal regards.

You bet they will "be of interest." I did not know there was still one of the old spool bank projectors in existence, much less film in runable condition. Some steps should be taken to preserve this relic of the past for all time to come. Will our readers suggest what they think should be done with this projector, always providing Friend Cobb can be induced to part with it and its films under conditjons which will insure its preservation. You are looking at the old spool bank machine of which you have doubtless all heard, and now have the privilege to see. We thank neighbor Cobb cordially on behalf of thousands of readers for the favor of the photos.

An Improved Reel.

M. F. Walker, Cadiz, Ohio, has submitted to the department for examination and possible approval an improved or "tell-tale" reel for which he has patents pending. He describes it as "positive and exceedingly simple." It may be made in either the ordinary small-hub reel, or as a five-inch hub reel, the latter form being, however, best for the purpose. Friend Walker says he has used the device for almost a year, and that in all that time it has not once failed of its purpose. Cost of the tell-tale reel will not, he says, exceed the cost of present high-grade reels; also there is no possibility of injury to the films. Walker expects to have the reels on the market within a short time.

The reel, which I have seen in both the ordinary and five-inch hub forms, is just like any other reel, except that there is an addition, as follows. In the five-inch hub reel it consists of a bell mounted inside the hub, where it interferes with nothing; also there is a striker connected with a steel wire in which is a coil so arranged that pulling the striker back puts a tension on the coil, causing it to bring the striker down on the bell with considerable force when the striker is released. On the inside of the side of the reel and suitably hinged thereto is a metal lip, which folds up tightly against the reel side when not in use. The operation is as follows: Suppose it is decided that the change-over signal should be given to the projectionist ten feet, or any other desired distance from the end of the film, then whoever is rewinding the film rewinds that number of feet of film (easily judged after slight practice), whereupon he stops the rewinder, pulls down the metal lip, and proceeds with the rewinding. The pulling down of the lip locks the bell striker back under tension. Now when the film is projected and the point is reached where the lip is reached the film automatically raises the lip, which action releases the striker and the bell sounds. The foregoing is about as plain as I can make it. The thing sounds a little complicated, but really is quite simple. The small-hub reel is handled the same way, except that instead of a bell the metal lip is held in such way that when released it snaps up against the side of the reel quite hard, thus sounding the alarm.

After careful examination I can see no reason why the device should not be practical. With such an alarm there would be no need or possible excuse for film-punching; also the projectionist would have a positive signal upon which he could depend. Moreover the tell-tale reel could be so made that two signals could be given, one at say 100 feet from the end of the reel as a signal to light up the idle lamp, and the other at the exact time of change over. The device is cheap to manufacture. Against it is the slight bother of setting the trigger when rewinding and the difficulty of introducing a new reel to the trade. I would also suggest that the make of the tell-tale adjustable as to distance would help popularize it, though it might add too much to the cost. It is not a thing the projectionist can very well get and install himself. It must or at least should be an integral part of the reel itself; that is, if it is to meet with any great success.

Best Results He Has Obtained.

W. L. Henderson, Dean, Iowa, orders question booklets, and remarks:

> Wish to say that the Speer Alterno carbons produce for me the best results that I have ever been able to obtain with alternating current.

Let the good work go on! It is just such encouraging reports as this that spur our manufacturers on to excel. I am a great believer in raising hell with a man when he don't toe the mark, but when he does I believe in giving words of commendation. It helps, gentlemen. It helps.

As Others See Us.

The following is from the Canadian Film Digest, an excellent little paper published in Toronto, Ontario, devoted to the motion picture industry. Surely it can be said that here is an unbiased opinion of the work we have been trying to do, for one trade paper is not apt to praise the work of one of the editors of another trade paper unless it has real merit. The quotation is from the April 13 issue. It is too long to reprint in its entirety. I have therefore omitted some sections.

RICHARDSON VISITS TORONTO—DELIVERS POWERFUL MESSAGE.

Noted Projection Expert Hits Straight from the Shoulder in Talk to Operators.

"He came; he saw; he conquered." This, in brief, sums up the visit to Toronto of F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of the Moving Picture World, of New York, and unquestionably the greatest authority on projection upon the American continent.

Mr. Richardson delivered a powerful and inspiring address to Local Union No. 173 of the Toronto Moving Picture Operators Wednesday night at Young's Cafe in this city, and, although he talked until the wee sma' hours of the morning, his hearers were loath to have him discontinue. His address, delivered with the characteristic earnestness and punch that has won him a continent-wide reputation, was a rousing appeal to operator, exchange man, and exhibitor.

Probably never in the history of the film business in the city of Toronto, or the entire province of Ontario for that matter, was there such a gathering as assembled at 11:45 o'clock Wednesday night to hear Richardson. All branches of the film trade were represented. They knew that this recognized expert on projection had a message for them—one that was worth walking miles to hear—one that was worth losing sleep over in order to hear.

They were not disappointed. Richardson surely delivered the goods. He put over his message in a manner that will not be forgotten for a long time by those who were fortunate enough to hear him.

The man Richardson has a habit of telling the truth—and the truth hurts sometimes. He hits squarely from the shoulder and tells some mighty unpleasant facts about the "world's fifth industry." All branches of the business and their attendant evils came in for the sledge hammer blows of criticism from Richardson. Withal he is constructive rather than destructive, and therein lies his great power.

* * * For nine long and weary years F. H. Richardson has been fighting the manifold evils that infest the film business. Today his efforts are bearing fruit throughout Canada and the United States. Wherever projection is discussed the name of Richardson and the work he has done and is doing is discussed. The projection end of this business owes to him a large debt of gratitude for bettering conditions.

Upon arising to speak, Mr. Richardson was given a rousing reception, and after the noisy welcome had subdued he launched into his subject in a manner that held the rapt attention of everyone. * * * Mr. Richardson laid bare some mighty important truths concerning what operators should know, and pleaded with them to study and fit themselves to earn the respect of their fellows and all other experts in various other lines of human activity with which they came in contact.

The Exchange Man, Too.

The exchange man was not overlooked. The speaker jumped on him rough-shod, and told him a few things good for his soul. He showed that much of the trouble originating from faulty film could be directly traced to the lair of Mr. Exchange Man. The operator gets blamed for much of the exchange man's own carelessness. He urged closer and more intimate co-operation between these two branches of the trade.

Then the Exhibitor.

The exhibitor, the man who has often been termed "the backbone of this great industry," certainly got his backbone rubbed and massaged with closed knuckles by the capable Richardson. He did not hesitate to tell wherein the exhibitors of both Canada and the United States were at fault. * * * In closing Mr. Richardson paid a high compliment to Toronto moving picture theaters, and the condition in which he found their projection and other equipment. He had enjoyed his brief visit to the utmost, and hoped to again come to Toronto in the very near future.

I am proud of this particular indorsement of my work because, as I have said, even the most skeptical cannot but admit it to be unbiased. I also desire to thank the Digest for its unselfish act and generous praise of my humble efforts.

What Is Best Screen?

E. Hitchcock, Painesville, Ohio, writes:

> Have a theater 47 feet wide, which begins to narrow down 60 feet from the screen, and decreases in width, evenly on both sides, until it is only 15 feet wide at the screen. Front row of seats is 25 feet from the screen. Can you advise as to what screen would be best under this condition? Am using a calcimine surface at present, but think a different screen would improve results. Use 50 amperes D. C. at 125 foot throw.

That depends on what you mean by "improve." Your calcimine screen will, in my opinion, give you as artistic a projection as you will be able to get, but it will NOT give you as bright or brilliant a picture as you can get; also brilliancy is had at considerable expense, as compared to a semi-reflective surface. Under the conditions named I would suggest a rather "bright" surface and Amberlux ray filters. By this I mean that a non-color (don't let 'em talk you into gold or other tints in your screen) metallic surface screen of some approved type, and an Amberlux ray filter, which latter you can get from William D. Warner, 709 Wyandotte Building, Columbus, Ohio, at a cost of about $3.50 each. Any reputable screen manufacturer can advise you as to just what screen surface will best suit your condition, but you should insist on a written guarantee as to length of time the surface will remain in good condition. By this installation you will get increased brilliancy, or get the same brilliancy at considerably less expenditure of electric power. You can secure address of screen manufacturers from our advertising columns. If I were you I would write them all, setting forth exact conditions screen is to work under. Frank Rembusch, Shelbyville, Indiana, also specializes on supplying screens for cases of this kind.

A Large Improvement.

The good which comes from or is expected to come from the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has its foundation very largely in the various papers read at the meetings of the society, and the discussion of those papers after they have been read. The discussion is, as a matter of fact, the main thing, since the paper usually expresses and can express only the ideas and opinions of the man who wrote it. But when it has been read before the society it then is open for discussion by the members in attendance, and through this discussion we are usually able to sift the wheat from the chaff and arrive at pretty nearly the correct conclusion.

That is to say we would arrive at pretty nearly the correct conclusion if the paper could be fully and intelligently discussed. This has, however, been very difficult, if not impossible, in the past by reason of the fact that none of the membership knew in advance what any particular paper would contain, hence it was quite impossible to examine into the matter and bring to bear all the available knowledge on the subject under discussion; also, unless the reader of the paper be interrupted, it was impracticable to remember many very important points, especially if the paper happen to be a long one, and when time came for discussion the members were unable to recall all those things they might wish to enlarge upon, commend, or object to. This has sadly hampered the work of the society in the past, but it is now to be removed. In future all papers to be read at any meeting of the society must be in the hands of the committee on papers in time to have them printed and placed in the hands of all members prior to the meeting. We will thus be able to discuss the various papers fully and intelligently. Given this condition it will be indeed strange if a body of men such as attend these meetings cannot get at the kernel of any nut presented, and I make bold to predict that largely by reason of this change the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is going to fulfill its mission and become a power for good in the industry.

Six Reels to a Trim.

W. H. Shephard, Davenport, Washington, says:

> With regard to the article, "A Warning," March 25 issue, while I don't like to make the brother out a prevaricator, still, I, myself, projected six reels with one trim of carbons, and would be doing it yet had not friend manager allowed me to persuade him into purchasing another Power's. In fact I have run as many as eight (8) reels with one set of carbons. Am going to take pictures of theater, self, and friend wife and children. Might consent to send you one when finished. Depends on how nicely you ask for it.

Mrs. Shephard, I'm addressing you. When aforementioned photographs are finished kindly order friend husband to mail me one forthwith. Now, Mr. Man, wadda y' gotta say, huh? And I'll snitch on you if you don't obey orders, too! As to the six-reels-to-a-carbon-set, why that would be largely governed by size of carbons and amperage. If you can run six reels (8,000 feet) of film at normal speed with one trim I would say you are using pretty large carbons for your amperage. Even allowing 70 feet to the minute, 8,000 feet would last almost two hours, and I have never seen two projection carbons burn that length of time if working up to or near normal capacity. Of course, if you, for instance, use 30 amperes and ¾ inch carbons then you doubtless could do it, but it would be at the cost of some considerable efficiency, I think, since the mass of comparatively cool carbon near the crater must inevitably diminish its brilliancy. Just how far one may go in the matter of excess in carbon capacity without encountering light loss I do not know, but intend to find out if it is possible.

The Proper Presentation of Pictures Musically. Playing the Pictorial.

"Seated one day at the organ, he was weary and ill at ease,
And his fingers wandered idly over the NOISY keys."
Apologies to "The Lost Chord."

HE was playing the pictorial, not with it but at it. The changing scenes showing the news of the day had little interest for him, and he banged away on marches and waltzes, some fitting by accident, while others burlesqued the picture. No thought had been given his program for this part of the performance. How could his employer expect it when he had used up his ingenuity in fitting the feature. The pictorial was only a filler anyway, while people expected something from the feature. So he continued his crazy banging, and the patrons became "weary and ill at ease" also. Shortly after this wonderful display of talent he lost his position, and is today wondering how the theater can get along without him. We beg to state that from the latest bulletins we are informed that the theater is still doing business at the old stand, while this musical luminary roves at large "seeking whom he may devour."

This method of fitting the topical review is obsolete. There was a time when the orchestra leader selected a couple of marches and three waltzes which he made do for the pictorial. When the May Festival was shown he started a bright waltz intermezzo, and when a thirty second scene showing the funeral of one of our noted members of Congress was flashed upon the screen he continued the number right through it because it was so short and the scene following portrayed the interior of a famous artist's studio. The incongruity of it was passed over lightly in those days because of the ignorance prevailing regarding musical settings.

Through the consistent and constant efforts of those musical directors who are striving to uplift the picture music we have arrived at a stage where every picture must receive a suitable accompaniment. Patrons have become familiar with the art of picture fitting through attending those theaters where large orchestras are maintained and high priced conductors interpret the pictures. No slipshod methods will be tolerated any longer by those that pay admission to see and HEAR.

Fundamentally there are no set rules for fitting the animated magazine, and for that very reason no definite class of music can be selected beforehand. It is as necessary to pre-view a pictorial as it is compulsory to prepare the feature. In fact, as no cue sheets are distributed for the former, it really becomes more necessary to see what scenes must be fitted. It is not always wise to run the pictorial in the shape that it is received from the maker. Frequently by changing the positions of certain scenes a better musical setting is procurable. This means that the orchestral leader and the house manager should confer on the matter, and often the operator can be of valuable assistance in giving suggestions.

In order to suggest the possibilities in this science it is necessary to work from a possible hypothesis. Suppose that we have a Screen Telegram showing the following subjects in the order named: 1. DU PONT POWDER MILLS. 2. RED CROSS PARADE. 3. BAN JOHNSON AT THE BASEBALL PARK. 4. GENERAL PERSHING REVIEWING THE FRENCH SOLDIERS. 5. COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT YALE. 6. THE ARRIVAL OF PRESIDENT WILSON. 7. THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE. 8. COLORED PARSON BAPTIZING HIS BAPTIST FLOCK.

You will readily see that these scenes must be shifted, as it would be folly to finish the review with the sprinkling water act. The scenes should work up to a climax of hearty applause, and to get this effect you must close with one of the patriotic scenes, or that of President Wilson. At the same time it would not be good showmanship to group all the "hand-getters" together. There should be a breathing space between each to allow for greater effectiveness. Our idea would be to arrange the scenes in the following manner: 1, 3, 4, 5, 8, 2, 6, and 7.

This grouping will give you ample variety of tonal color and change of tempo. The first item showing how gunpowder is made and delivered to the army is largely educational and neutral in atmosphere. You can use a light moderato with a pleasing melody and of considerable length. This gains the interest of the spectators at once. No. 3 gives you the opportunity of playing that old favorite, "Take Me Out to the Ball-Game." It will probably be short, and the chorus once through will fill the time allowance.

Now in No. 4 you have no choice but to play "March Lorraine." This is the official French march always played when the troops are on review. Don't make a mistake by playing an American patriotic number for General Pershing because even though you may desire to be courteous, you must first be accurate in the portrayal of the atmosphere.

To vary the music a little you might play for No. 5 a light waltz if the action will permit it. You cannot go wrong if you use the "Boola-Boola Song," which is typical of the Yale University. If they are only handing out diplomas play it pp only as a suggestion. There is no doubt that a scene of this sort would be short, and you could readily finish on the phrase.

No. 8 has many possibilities in the line of interpretation. If you can afford to do so it might bring a laugh to burlesque this portion by playing, "It Takes a Long, Tall, Dark Skinned Gal to Make a Preacher Lay His Bible Down." A strong darky spiritual would certainly be appropriate, while some plaintive Southern coon song would not be amiss. Do not play "Mighty Lak a Rose."

After this little bit of quiet humor the audience is in form for No. 2, and when they hear the strains of "Onward Christian Soldiers" they are bound to break forth in rounds of applause. Do not play this number at a quick step, but with the natural dignity which befits it. You now have the fullest attention when our President is shown.

For No. 6 choose another march of grandiose quality, or some patriotic air that would fit the situation. It will naturally be very short, so that you can quickly change into that most popular of all songs for the present, "Over There," when our army is shown marching in France. This is a fitting finish to a fine pictorial. The interest has not been allowed to lag, nor have you over-shot the climaxes. Be sure that when the marching soldiers appear that the music is kept in perfect time with their step. This is an art in itself.

Start all your pieces softly, and continue playing p while the subtitle is on the screen, then break into the required volume of sound immediately upon the action. If further subtitles appear in the same scene again quiet down until they fade out. For neutral scenes like No. 1 keep the orchestra down, cutting out the brass altogether. Do not play at any time ff before reaching your climax. Grade your volume according to the action, and when the big moment comes you have the power to emphasize it.

Never use clap-trap effects in the pictorial. It is news that is being shown, not melodrama. Do not forget that the patrons have probably read all about what they see, and they have associated them with things of dignity. Do not jar their sense of news dignity by the clanging of cow-bells.

The entire review must be played with snap whether it be played softly or loudly. To use draggy music is to kill it. The execution of each number should be clean cut and definite, the finishes on a cadence, and the attacks on the beat.

It is said that genius is the art of taking pains. Every theater can have a genius if the leader so desires it. A genius in the orchestral pit means a full house, a full house means a successful business and satisfied boss, and good business means a raise in salary. So it pays to be a genius.

Music At the Rialto.

During the week beginning June 16 the Rialto gave one of those snappy musical performances for which it has become justly noted. The overture formerly known as "Orpheus in der Unterwelt"—before the Hun showed his most despicable falsity—but now programmed as "Orpheus in the Lower World," was exceptionally well played by the Symphony orchestra; Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld at the baton. Mr. Reisenfeld has the happy faculty of so marking his contrasts that one is frequently amazed by his audacity, yet he never fails to obtain the subtle phrasing for which he calls. The overture is taken from the opera which is based upon the old Grecian myth, in which it was claimed that Orpheum attempted to bring back to life, Eurydice, his dead wife.

Though the work is not a difficult one to perform, yet there are shadings and delicate gradations of tonal beauty that if overlooked would deprive the overture of its popularity. The music is light, but must be well marked in its varied change of tempo. The hearty and spontaneous applause was a true tribute to the excellence of its performance.

We must disagree with the gentleman who selected the music for the educational called "Mt. Lassen in Action." His selection was altogether too bombastic and too highly flavored with Orientalism to correctly convey the atmosphere of grandeur and power as depicted in the scenic. There was one spot during the showing of the actual eruption where it might have been used properly, and in view of the fact that it was necessary to da capo twice to play the picture through we feel that the substitution of a quieter and more pastorale number in the opening would have brought greater satisfaction.

Miss Annie Rosner sang "Becau Zi Love You, Dear" (at least that is how it sounded), by Charles Hawley. This little lady has a mighty good voice, but is handicapped by stage mannerisms and facial expressions that mean nothing but detract from the song. Her enunciation is sacrificed for purity of tone, and her interpretation is offered up on the same altar. In a song as well known as "Because I Love You, Dear," it is unwise to change it, especially to alter a note to gain a spectacular finale. Composers usually know what they want when they write the song.

Emanuel Lizt, a basso, whom we heard some time ago, has certainly improved his style and stage presence. In the "Vulcan's Song," from the opera, "Philemon and Baucis," he showed himself thoroughly at home. His top tones were a bit off, as one always expects in a basso, but the richness of his lower register more than made up for it. His enunciation is also much improved, the words being more clean cut without losing the natural resonance.

This number was costumed, and from the side panels one could see smoke rising over the mountain tops, while a red light glowed and waned as the song was sung. This created the atmosphere usually associated with the fiery forge.

The feature, "Missing," was admirably fitted and well directed by our old friend Joseph Klein. Little touches like "In the Gloaming" and "Bonnie Sweet Bessie" enhanced the heart interest immeasurably. We were pleased to note that during the wedding scene the orchestra did NOT play the usual Wedding March.

The Rialto Animated Magazine did not come last on the program, but we take the liberty of finishing our review with a few comments on this offering inasmuch as it was the outstanding bright spot in the bill. Without going into detail and showing why you must take our word for it. The changes of music were most suitable and beautifully timed. There was no overlapping of scenes, while the numbers were those that bore a meaning analogous to the scenes shown. Mr. Finston wielded the baton for this item and put lots of ginger into his work. The magazine is always worked out in sequential order, and the music follows the same route. There is considerable art in selecting suitable music for the pictorial, and the Rialto stands high as an exponent of that art.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

ALL WOMAN (Goldwyn—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Romance"—Rubens, "Nodding Tulip"—Trinhays, or "Shadowland"—Gilbert.

This feature will need some rather heavy stuff to bring out the dramatic values. A few "rube" numbers will go well to start the picture gradually working up to dramatic tensions. You will need a few hurrys, dramatic agitatos, and a storm furioso. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Goldwyn exchange.

BLUE-EYED MARY (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme unnecessary.

The opening is dramatic. Start with a slow andante, then a misterioso, followed by a slow maestoso number. Then you can use Herbert's waltz from "The Debutante," as there appears a direct cue. The music will need to be consistantly heavy throughout. Note the hurry, misterioso, and agitato in the fourth reel followed in the fifth by dramatic stuff. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

CONQUERED HEARTS (Ivan Film Co.)—See synopsis in an issue.

CLAWS OF THE HUN (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest "Legend"—Friml, "Serenade"—Widor, or "Romance"—Mericanto.

This is a patriotic film which must be fitted with strong, snappy music indicative of the big love for country. The first reel will need only light serenade stuff. At the T. Carl Von Helm, a fearsome and harsh number should be used emblematic of our hate. Note the direct cue for "Over There," and close the feature with the same selection. Watch for the auto crash effect in the fourth reel and the shots in the last. You will also need some pathetic music during the scenes with the mother and son. Romberg's "Mother" would fit admirably. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

HEART OF A GIRL, THE (World Film—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante Semplice. Suggest "Peacefulness"—Borch, "Choral"—Corelli, or "Eventide"—Schytte.

The character of this feature is a dramatic depiction of political life in Washington. There is nothing particularly difficult in fitting this picture. The usual number of hurrys, agitatos, and misteriosos to which is added some pathetic music, some dramatic tensions, and a few light numbers for contrast is all that you will need. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World exchange.

HOUSE OF GOLD, THE (Metro—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest "May Dreams"—Borch, "Berceuse"—Schytte, or "Robin's Farewell"—Arthur.

This is a society drama of great intensity. Dramatic music is needed with a few misteriosos and agitatos. You will need an Hawaiian dance number, an Arabian dance, popular one-step, and a heavy pathetic selection. Note the wedding scene, and play with piano only according to action. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

SANDY (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato and Scotch. Suggest "Charlie Is My Darling" or "Robin Adair."

This story takes place in the South, and deals with the old time chivalry of Kentucky. Naturally being in that blue grass country we have a fine horse race and considerable excitement. The first half of the picture will only stand a light setting, with a fast vivace for the race in the third reel. In the last reel we have an agitato and a shot fired. Do not use any Scotch music beside the theme, and stick to the Southern numbers to give contrast to your setting. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

SOAP GIRL, THE (Vitagraph—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Dance of the Moths"—Weidt, "Idilio"—Lack, or "The Merry Lark"—Bendix.

Light music only is needed for this modern comedy-drama. Waltzes, serenades, and intermezzos will fit nicely. A couple of light operatic selections with judicious cutting would probably be appreciated, and you would have the chance to give your patrons some variety in musical settings by availing yourself of this opportunity. Note the piano to action effect in the first reel. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

STATION CONTENT (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "In a Garden"—Sudds, "A Love Song"—Bartlett, or "Mignonette"—Friml.

This is a melodrama with intense scenes of daring sprinkled throughout. You will need some pathetic stuff, many gaops and hurrys, and a number suitable for a big storm scene. Railroad effect abound, as the entire story centers around railroad life. You will also need some popular two-steps to take care of the theatrical phase of the story. No cue sheets are available.

PEG OF THE PIRATES (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegro. Suggest "Tale of Two Hearts"—Roberts, "Tete-a-Tete"—De Koven, or "Vanity"—Jackson.

Open with "Down South," or a medley of Southern airs. In the second reel you will need an agitato to begin with followed by some very heavy dramatic music. The third reel is almost completely agitato, with the closing number a burlesque. During the fourth and fifth reels you will need some drum signals according to action and a big battle agitato. Finish the picture with "Wedding March Militare." Cue sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

WOMAN OF REDEMPTION, A (World Film—Five Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest "Premier D'Aour"—Benoist, "Remembrance"—Telma, or "Serenade"—Czerwonsky.

The atmosphere of this picture is distinctly pastoral, taking the scenes of the Maine woods. The character is an emotional drama requiring rather heavy music. You will need a one-step, dramatic tension, furioso, misterioso, and heavy hurry. A little touch of French Canadian music would not be out of place, and would lend variety. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World exchange.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. Do you believe in changing the traditional tempo of a number to suit the scenes?

A. Generally speaking, no; but if the scene is interrupted by a "flash back" of a few seconds the music might be retarded or hastened to fit the flash, returning to the original tempo to complete the scene.

Q. Who wrote "The Wanderer's" Song?

A. Tschaikowsky. This is one of the best of his few writings for voice.

Q. Will you kindly tell me what is meant by a "Morris Dance"? Do they dance it in this country? I saw the other day that one of Percy Grainger's compositions was called a "Morris Dance."

A. The original Morris Dance was a sort of pageant with dancing possibly derived from the Morisco, a Moorish dance formerly popular in Spain and France. But it may owe its origin to the Matacins, a French dance of men in armour of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. In accounts of the Morisco no mention is made of a sword dance, which is a distinguishing feature of the Matacins, and survived in the English Morris Dance (in a somewhat different form) so late as the nineteenth century. The English Morris Dance is said to have been introduced from Spain by John of Gaunt in the reign of Edward III, but this is extremely doubtful, as there are scarcely any traces of it before Henry VII, when it first began to be popular. It usually formed part of the May games, although it was not confined to any particular part of the year. The dresses were ornamented with bells. There is a country dance which goes by the name of Morris Dance which is frequently danced in the north of England. It is danced by Sir Roger de Coverley, any number of couples taking part. Each couple holds a ribbon between them under which the couples pass. The dance is known all through England, the different shires each having their own modifications. It is not danced in this country.

Q. I "fake" on the drums. Two or three times recently I have lost my jobs because I couldn't read. Where can I find a good teacher on drums in New York?

A. In these columns we are unable to give you any names and addresses, but if you will write us again giving us some more data regarding how much you wish to pay and what hours are convenient we shall be glad to put you in touch with an excellent teacher who is professionally engaged in picture playing.

Q. In playing an overture before my picture performance what length time would you suggest as being long enough and not too long to tire the average audience?

A. If you are playing a two-hour show and your orchestra isn't of large proportions we would suggest that you limit your overture to about eight minutes, never exceeding ten.

Piano "Preludes."

Many of us, in spite of our musicianship, have wondered why the great pianistic artists always strike a few solid chords before commencing their solos. We used to think they were "feeling out" the instrument or doing a "grand stand" play, but there seems to be a real reason for it.

Did you ever listen to a church clock striking far off? The first stroke came very faintly, but the succeeding ones were distinct and clear. The first stroke was in a dead atmosphere, and started it to vibrating so that succeeding strokes were clearly heard.

The same idea holds with a piano in a large hall. It is necessary to get the vibrations started, and for this purpose strong, forceful chords are needed, not a light, delicate prelude.

This explanation may provoke the long debatable facts regarding sound. Many scientists are inclined to believe that sound waves are conducted through materials instead of through air, but until proof has shown us differently we must still cling to the latter solution.

Abstracts by E. K. Research Laboratory.

U. S. Patents.

1262255. E. Rector.

A Motion Picture Camera driven by a spring motor and adjustable to take one picture or a group of four pictures, as well as a kinematic series. When a set of four pictures are taken the diaphragm is changed to give four stops in succession, so that one of the series will have the correct exposure.

1261796. C. W. Ebeling.

Mechanism particularly adapted for use in the synchronous reproduction of sound and pictures. It relates particularly to the mechanism for starting the rotation of a second sound record so that it will be at its maximum or desired speed and so that there will be no pause between the cessation of sound from one record and the beginning of the next.

1262105. J. D. Scott and E. C. Van Altena. Assigned to Scott & Van Altena, Inc.

A Motion Picture Apparatus which uses lantern slides in place of film, each slide carrying four pictures. The whole collection of slides are carried upon a rotary table, which brings them successively to the exhibiting position, where they are rotated step by step.

1262671. A. S. Howell, Assigned to Bell & Howell Co.

An Automatic Mechanism for stopping the operation of film perforators and similar apparatus when the spool of film is exhausted.

1260590. R. P. Stineman.

A Motion Picture Contact Printing Machine in which the positive and negative films are conducted past the gate over a curved drum which insures proper contact.

1261865. W. J. Stange and L. M. Bannan. Assigned One-Third to Rockwell L. Stone.

A Motion Picture Printing Apparatus in which the intensity of the light is controlled by interposing screen units of known density between the source and the negative. The screen units are automatically moved into and out of position by means of pneumatically actuated mechanism which co-operates with perforations punched at intervals in the film in accordance with the density thereof.

1260595. F. B. Thompson.

A Film Treating Apparatus of the continuous type in which the film passes from the fluid treating tanks over chamois rollers, which remove the surface moisture, and through a weighted loop which maintains the proper tension. It is from thence carried to the drying chamber.

1261797. C. W. Ebeling.

A Governor Control Device for insuring uniform operation of hand operated motion picture projectors and cameras. If the operator turns the handle above the speed determined by the Governor the excess movement is not transmitted.

1261890. C. E. Akeley, Assigned to Akeley Camera, Inc.

A Spring Handle for Motion Picture Cameras and Projectors which prevents jars or lateral movements from affecting the camera or projector.

1262284. G. J. Teague, Assigned to Herbert S. Beckman.

An Attachment for Motion Picture Cameras. It is a spring motor mechanism for driving the camera at an adjusted speed controlled by a centrifugal governor actuating a friction brake.

1259500. H. R. Evans.

A Splicing Machine for Motion Picture Films. After the ends of the film are clamped into position the operator has merely to press two handles rearward, whereupon the film ends are cut, scraped, cemented, overlapped, and finally clamped until dry.

Cinematograph Apparatus. In a Geneva mechanism for cinematograph apparatus, the ratio of the time of movement of the star wheel to the time it is stationary is decreased by mounting the driving pin on a block which is constrained to slide in a slot in the driving disk, as the disk is uniformly rotated.

113148. S. D. Williams.

Cinematograph Apparatus. A band or the like is wound onto and off a reel for a cinematograph film simultaneously with the film so as to preserve a space over the picture portion thereof. The band consists of longitudinal strips connected by cross bars, the cross bars being passed through incisions in the strips and then bent twice at right angles at each end, which forms distance pieces which bear on the margins of the film and prevent the two layers of film coming in contact. Alternatively, two separate corrugated strips, each bearing on one margin of the film, may be employed.

Cinematograph Apparatus. Cinematograph printing apparatus in which the film is moved continuously or intermittently, comprises feed and stop mechanism.

Driving Camera by Flexible Shaft.

R. I. H., Wisconsin, writes:

> In natural history cinematography and in other work with the motion picture camera where the more or less careful setting up of a tripod means the loss of some of the most interesting opportunities for splendid bits of wild life and other scenes, or where it is out of the question to even set up a tripod at all, as in the case of using the camera in a treetop, what other successful means may be employed?
> What results may confidently be expected with the camera held in the hand and the operating power transmitted to the instrument through a flexible shaft driven either by a crank turned by an assistant, or better still, by some form of reliable and portable motor strapped to the body of the cameraman?
> Does the vibration of the running instrument detract from the quality of the negative when operated in the above manner, and, if it does, is there a method that can be employed to offset the effect of vibration?
> I have an idea that the employment of an ordinary automobile speedometer flexible shaft in connection with a good, strong talking machine spring motor would do the work if properly assembled and the speed regulator tuned to meet photography conditions.

Driving a motion camera by means of a flexible shaft attached to the one turn crank shaft is the best method of cranking a camera at any time to eliminate vibration. The flexible shaft takes up practically all tendency of the camera to side weave, sometimes plainly visible in pictures made in the ordinary way from a tripod not absolutely rigid.

It is practically impossible by any method to make pictures without a slight weave when the camera is held in the hand alone. Where there is a rigid object against which the camera may be rested, such as a rock, post or tree trunk, the results are as good as those obtained by the use of a tripod.

I saw a specially constructed camera in which a motor taken from an automobile siren horn was installed. A storage battery small enough to go in a large coat pocket or easily carried suspended from a carrying strap held enough juice to run six or eight hundred feet of film through the camera.

In operation the camera was held braced against the breast with both hands, and, while the owner was able to get scenes that he could not possibly have gotten in any other way, there was a wavering of the picture on the screen due to the slight movement of the body. It is easily seen, then, that no matter what sort of a device is used to drive a motion camera it must have some sort of a rigid support to obtain a rock steady picture on the screen.

The method of driving the flexible shaft is immaterial—a spring motor of sufficient strength would be better on a trip than a battery and motor, as a battery has to be frequently recharged.

It is much easier to hold a camera steady on a rock or box when driven by a flexible shaft than when cranked in the usual way. In a pinch the writer has often taken close-ups of objects on the ground by placing the camera on the ground, sometimes tilting it by placing a brick, stone or piece of wood under one end, and while an assistant steadied the camera, cranked it the usual way.

It is not uncommon in studio work to run a camera by means of a flexible shaft from a second tripod to which the turning crank and gear is attached.

Novel Interview with Dorothy Gish

New Paramount Star Eager to Tell Amusing Bits of Reminiscence About Her Fellow Players.

By Edward Weitzel.

INTERVIEWING Dorothy Gish is productive of interesting information about all sorts of persons—except herself. The creator of the elfish little street singer in "Hearts of the World" has had many entertaining experiences during her screen career, of course, but the moment she is asked about one of them it reminds her of a similar occurrence in the life of some fellow-player, and you are given a highly animated and graphic account of how clever Mary Pickford is at making a speech, or what a fine artist Nazimova shows herself to be by her performance of the French model in "Revelation."

The younger of the Gish girls has been making personal appearances at the theaters in Chicago, New York, Boston and Philadelphia, where the Griffith masterpiece is being shown. A few remarks accompanied each appearance.

Dorothy Gish.

"Have you enjoyed the experience?" she was asked, as she sat perched on a stool in a photographic studio, clad in a dainty summer frock and a picture hat, one day last week.

"Not a bit!" she replied. "I was too anxious about my speech; but Mary Pickford is wonderful. You should have heard her during the Liberty Loan Campaign. Mary can do anything. You remember how she walked into the theater during a rehearsal, when she was a little girl and told David Belasco she'd come for an engagement? And she got it, too!"

"Your sister and you had an interview with Belasco when you were little tots, I understand."

"Yes; but Lillian got an engagement and I didn't. My! how frightened we both were! Mr. Belasco was very kind, but we were so scared that we kept trying to get behind each other. We had a hearty laugh over it, when I met him the other day."

"Do you ever find it embarrassing to be so well known to thousands of people?"

"I'm not troubled that way very often—but Charlie Chaplin must find it dreadful at times. He was at the theater the night the Russian Ballet opened in Los Angeles and the company recognized him immediately. He almost stopped the show; all of the dancers played right at him. After the first act the manager came to Mr. Chaplin and told him the company had refused to go on with the performance until he went back stage and met them. He went and the curtain didn't go up for half an hour. When he did return he was smiling in the funniest way. They showed their admiration for him in every possible manner and he was not permitted to leave until everybody, men and women, had embraced him and kissed him on both cheeks."

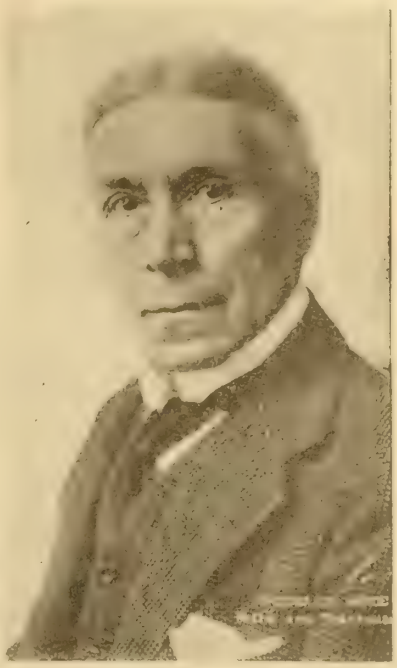
"That was very kind of them, wasn't it?"

"Y-e-s," doubtfully. "But I shouldn't have liked it, I'm sure!" decidedly. "It's the same with everyone. My Jap chauffeur was driving the machine for me one afternoon at home, when I noticed his eyes start to pop out of his head. 'What is it?' I asked. 'See, Mis' Gish, please—Charlie Chaplin!' The best known actor who ever lived was just turning the corner."

"What about your plans as a Paramount star, Miss Gish?"

"I'm delighted with the arrangement, naturally, but I've been so occupied with getting ready to commence work I haven't had time to realize fully all it means to me. Mother and I leave for California tonight."

"You must have been very fond of your part in 'Hearts of the World'?"



"I loved it! And I was quite well satisfied with myself until I saw Nazimova in 'Revelation.' Her performance of that girl of the French studios is simply perfect. The way she does everything——"

Dorothy Gish is so bright and natural and gracious, it is a great pleasure to listen to her. As a subject for an interview, however, she is altogether too fond of talking about other people.

Frederick Warde Engaged by World Pictures

FREDERICK B. WARDE has been engaged by World Pictures to play the role of Judge Ellis, in support of Kitty Gordon, in "The Unveiling Hand."

Mr. Warde was born in Warrington, Oxfordshire, on February 23, 1851, and made his first appearance on the stage at the Lyceum Theater in Sunderland in 1867, as the second murderer in "Macbeth." He came to America in 1874 and made his first appearance at Booth's Theater, New York, on August 10 of that year, when he played the part of Marston Pike in "Belle Lamar."

Frederick Warde.

Mr. Warde has been seen in numerous productions since then and has been featured with the late John McCullough in "Richard III.," "The Gladiator," "Virginius," "Othello," "King Lear," "Brutus," "The Taming of the Shrew" and the "Lady of Lyons." He has also appeared with the late Charles Fechter in 1878 in "Monte Cristo," with the late Alice Lingard, and as Cromwell in "King Henry VIII.," with the late Charlotte Cushman.

He has appeared in the role of Macduff in "Macbeth" and remained at the Booth Theater for three years. In May, 1877, he appeared at Daly's as Lentullus in "Vesta" and subsequently at the Broadway Theater in the same year in "Brunhilde," "Chesney Wold," "Mary Stuart" and "Cleopatra," with the late Madame Janauschek.

For many years he toured with his own company, and from 1893 to 1903 was in partnership with Louis James, playing all the standard and legitimate productions. At the conclusion of his partnership with James he went on a tour with Kathryn Kidder, playing Matho in "Salambo." Since then he has appeared on the lecture platform and in Henry W. Savage's production, "Everywoman."

DEATH OF HARRY ELWELL.

Harry Elwell, one of the best liked and most efficient workers at the Famous Players-Lasky west coast studios, where he held the position of head of the property department, passed away Sunday, June 9, after a protracted illness. He had recovered sufficiently to return to the studio when he was again compelled to give up the effort to carry on his duties, and after a brave fight for life succumbed to the illness. He leaves a wife and is sincerely mourned by those of his co-workers at the studio who came in contact with him during the two years of his service with the organization.

ZECCA VISITING PACIFIC COAST.

Ferdinand Zecca, manager of productions of Pathe Exchange, Inc., left New York for the West Coast June 22. He will visit the studios making pictures released by Pathe while in California. He was accompanied by L. E. Franconi, manager of the film editing department of Pathe. He will be absent about six weeks. This is Mr. Zecca's first trip to the Coast, he having recently came to New York from France.

Famous Players Plans Arouse Interest

Executives of the Company Receive Many Messages of Congratulation Following Last Week's Announcement.

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation plans for the coming year, commencing September 1, announced in the trade papers last week in the largest amount of advertising space ever taken in each one of the mediums used by one company, created wide interest throughout the trade.

Many wires and telegrams poured in the New York headquarters of the company expressing much appreciation of what is everywhere agreed to be the greatest undertaking by one organization since the inception of the industry. Congratulations have been heaped upon the executives of the company, and from every state a representative showing of recognition from exhibitors and exchange men over the importance of the announcement and its effect upon the entire industry has been received.

The dedication of the organization and its activities toward helping to keep up the morale of the nation at a time when such stimulus is most desirable has attracted the attention of persons outside of the film industry as also has the fact that the producers of Paramount and Artcraft pictures will present a greater output during the next twelve months than any one concern has ever approached, namely, 208 feature productions and 156 short subjects.

Shortly after the initial announcement made its appearance telegrams and letters began to pour in from exchanges. Messages direct from exhibitors and of a similar nature also were received.

The possibility of obtaining more Paramount and Artcraft pictures, as outlined in the new schedule, also met with enthusiasm, especially in communities where the present maximum supply is less than the demand.

Of particular interest was the announcement of the Success Series, which will give exhibitors the opportunity in presenting some of the masterpieces of the screen in modern dressing. The approval of exhibitors in reissuing these subjects was established before the producers decided to go to the expense and pains of placing on the market the former screen triumphs with modern technical innovations. Many exhibitors who have never run these pictures expressed enthusiasm at the opportunity brought about by the establishment of the Success Series. Others have stated their intention of re-booking them.

JEAN PAIGE SIGNS VITAGRAPH CONTRACT.

Jean Paige, who was graduated from the O. Henry short reel subjects into Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features recently, has been placed under contract by Albert E. Smith, according to a statement authorized by the Vitagraph president. Miss Paige is one of the youngest of Vitagraph's stars. Little more than eighteen months ago Miss Paige secured an introduction to the Vitagraph president and Mr. Smith started her in O. Henry pictures. It was not long before she gained recognition as one of Vitagraph's most talented players in these charming little screen gems.

Then it was that Mr. Smith gave her a part in Blue Ribbon features, her first being "The Desired Woman," in which she played in the support of Mr. Morey in "The Golden Goal," and with Alice Joyce in "Find the Woman." Her next picture will be "Tangled Lives," in which she plays a prominent role with Harry Morey and Betty Blythe. It is scheduled for release on July 1.

Fox Leases Victoria of St. Louis

Fine Two-Thousand Seat House Will Be the Home of His First-Run Productions.

WILLIAM FOX has further extended his amusement enterprises by assuming sole control of the beautiful Victoria theater of St. Loui on a ten-year lease and will change the name to the William Fox Liberty Theater.

The news was received in the trade with surprise, as it was said that Fox would extend his chain of theaters to other big cities of the United States. This is the twenty-seventh theater under Mr. Fox's management, all in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Massachusetts.

Announcement was made at the Fox offices in New York that a high-class picture policy with an orchestra of thirty-five pieces would be inaugurated at the Liberty on Sunday night, September 1, with John Zanft in charge of preliminary arrangements.

The Liberty has 2,000 seats, is situated at Delmar and Grand avenues, in the heart of the theater section of St. Louis, and is near the New Grand Central Theater, managed by William Sievers.

Fox productions will be shown first-run exclusively at the Liberty. The opening production has not been selected, but it will be a Fox Standard picture. Annette Kellermann in "Queen of the Sea" is a later attraction.

"For some months past my productions have not received a proper and regular first-run showing in St. Louis," said Mr. Fox. "I therefore decided to operate my own theater in St. Louis. This is a departure from my rule, as I do not intend to extend my chain of theaters, except to such big cities where my pictures are not presented regularly and in a manner that I deem warranted by merit and production quality.

"There are several other big cities of America in which Fox Film Corporation pictures have not been regularly presented and I may announce a few additions to my chain of theaters during the summer."

The Victoria was erected at a cost of $190,000, and it is said to be one of the most completely equipped fire-proof theaters in St. Louis.

A new stage set, with the screen arranged between Roman columns built under the direction of the Fox scenic staff, is said to be one of the most costly motion picture theater equipments constructed.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

BETTER than anything else we know of to get this week's effort under way is the perfectly pink, neatly mimeographed, correctly spelled and punctuated Secrets in the Life of Madge Kennedy as it comes to us fresh and fancy from the Educational Department of Goldwyn. Here goes:

Food Will Win the War.

Madge Kennedy's favorite dessert is nesselrode pudding. She also likes candied violets.

The Goldwyn star is not an athletic girl, though she loves to tramp through the woods classifying various wildflowers.

She is a clever botanist.

Not being allowed to keep a dog in her Riverside Drive apartment she can only see her favorite companion when she spends the week-end at her country place on Long Island.

The companion is silent.

Enter the Bolsheviki.

He is a Russian wolfhound which she calls Vladimir. He was presented to her by a Serbian lieutenant who brought the animal from Odessa. This was before the city on the Black Sea was captured by the Germans.

Madge Kennedy has no favorite perfume. She likes to open her big rose jar and enjoy the delicate aroma. She puts a flower from every bouquet she receives in it.

She has done this ever since she was graduated from school.

The jar holds a quart.

She likes to embroider, and is making multi-colored squares for an old-fashioned crazy quilt. It will contain a piece from every costume she has worn.

Her favorite leading man (at present) is Tom Moore.

Why Print Trade Papers?

She corresponds with Mary Garden and tells the singer what is happening in the world of motion pictures.

Once she missed writing her weekly letter and Mary Garden cabled from Paris to know what was wrong.

Madge Kennedy is said by all her associates to have a perfect disposition. Nothing ever ruffles her.

When her chauffeur is late with the car, Madge Kennedy spends the time chatting with Goldwyn friends. Another star would fume.

Plays Her Own Chords.

Besides being a pianiste of considerable ability, Madge Kennedy is a singer of ballads, though she does not aspire to sing in public.

She likes to read in French, though she admits she is a poor student of that interesting language.

Miss Kennedy is a true patriot, and has done good work in various ways to further the work of winning the war just as in "The Service Star."

Next week we shall tell all about how Miss Kennedy acts for the mimeograph.

During a wait while on location at Lake Ronkonkomo last week, Betty Blythe sat in the cool breezes on the shore with a beautiful blond wig in her lap. Pretty Alice Plays the Two-a-Day.

Alice Terry put in a busy week the past seven days. An O. Henry picture in which she played the leading role was exhibited at the Rivoli theater. All her friends insisted that she go with them to see the picture.

During the week Alice saw the film twelve times, just two shows short of being a two-a-day attraction, and the little blond lady swears by all that's holy that she liked the picture better every time she saw it.

Must have been something like wine, the older it gets the more delightful and higher priced it is supposed to become.

From the Good Old Times.

Motion picture rights to "The Silver King" have been purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and from the New York Sun we learn that the famous play was produced in London in 1882, in America in 1883 at Wallack's theater, New York, "and has been acted repeatedly for many years here and abroad."

Repeatedly is right. Here are some unreliable statistics, the figures representing the number of times the company mentioned has presented "The Silver King":

Carl Haswin	9822
Corse Payton	6431
Harry Shannon	862
Senter Payton	904
Vaughan-Glaser Co.	93
Mabel Paige	45
Clint G. Ford	568
Ullie Ackerstrom	369
Isaac Payton	247
Billy Bittner	672
Frankie Carpenter	247

George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's West Coast studios, maintains that the scenario of "As the Sun Went Down," which he wrote for Edith Storey, is unique in at least one respect.

"It is the only scenario I have ever heard of," says Mr. Baker, "that was written with and without an appendix."

This is literally true, as Mr. Baker was stricken with appendicitis before he could complete the manuscript and wrote the final scenes less than a week after his appendix had been removed.

DeMille's Sport Shirt Eclipsed.

Howard Hickman, who is making his debut as a motion picture director by handling Bessie Barriscale's latest Paralta Play at the Brunton studios, has "arrived" in the profession—there is no doubt about that.

For the other day he blossomed out in a silk shirt with radiant stripes, platinum gem-crusted cuff buttons, tie with soft collar and fancy collar link, and, of course, the regular brand of white trousers.

In taking this step Mr. Hickman identified himself with the "silk-shirt" school of directors, as typified by other prominent professionals. He came near joining the school of riding trousers, puttees wearing directors, but the weather turned his decision toward the more summery school.

Now he has committed himself irrevocably.

Peace Warriors in Reserve.

What is going to happen in the motion picture studios when the President's "work or fight" order becomes effective? What will be the situation when all eligible males between 21 and 31, including stars, leading men and such, have to pitch in actively to help Uncle Sam crush the Hun? These questions were put up to the heads of the various departments at Metro's West Coast studios by the chief mimeographer. The following symposium was the result:

Production Department.—The order will bring the old man into his own at last. He would make an ideal camera operator. He'd never crank too fast, and, besides, the exercise would be good for his rheumatism. But he would have to be smooth-shaven, for with halation, static and cracking it's hard enough now to turn out good film without taking further chances on hairs on the lens.

Finance Department.—A splendid opportunity for the fellows whom Osler would chloroform. Speaking of finances, we can take our middle-aged bookkeepers and make actors out of them. Then we can call in octogenarians to keep the books. They are supposed to have old-fashioned ideas, and we wouldn't have to pay them "motion picture salaries."

Scenario Department.—The chances are the edict won't make any difference. Many of the stories sent in seem to have been written by persons in their infancy or persons in their dotage. Some already have been drafted from the ranks of great successes, although submitted as strictly original and subject to draft. Others are merely in their anecdotage.

Casting Department.—The old soldiers' home at Sawtelle isn't so far from Hollywood. In case of emergency we can probably conscript a bunch of them. They're ready to prove they're not liable to the draft, having fought in the Civil War and voted long ago. Anyhow, a veteran with a little grease-paint, a toupee and minus his brush ought to screen as well as juveniles who don't work, won't fight, and can't act.

Technical Department.—If the worst comes we may be able to call on the women's land army to dig all the trenches for battle scenes. Lady scene shifters won't be so bad if they make up their minds not to make up their faces. It would be awkward and dangerous, however, if one of them stopped to powder her nose while moving a floating wing.

Property Department.—The work or fight order doesn't bother us. We already have a prize cat, "Mrs. Metro," who, with her three kittens, "Iris," "Close-up," and "Long Shot," can be used for all scenes in which animals figure. This will enable us to get along without the usual lion tamer and elephant interpreter.

John Cunningham Flinn.

By Pete Schmid.

Taraaaa Zing! Boom-De-Aye!

Following such a pretentious introduction, which we have all so enthusiastically received, we now proceed to place upon the well known pan the astonishingly able and athletically proportioned Director of Advertising and Publicity of the great organization, whose product, we repeat, is the ultimate in motion pictures.

[Note—Before going further need we say that Pete Schmid has in mind Paramount-Artcraft movie dramas, comedies and educationals? Pete has said organization and product in mind for the perfectly good reason that he is paid in coin of the realm to use his mind exclusively for that purpose. Cheerfully we let him rave!—The Rambler.]

Seeing as how John Cunningham, who spells and insists upon having others spell his Flinn with a i, is our immediate and respected boss (Pete has resumed, let us interject), it has been pointed out to us that beyond the shadow of a doubt, it would prove most advisable to slip, slur or slide over the dark incidents of his adventuresome career and accent his many, many, many, many, many good qualities which have so deeply imbedded themselves in the famous and much lauded Rock of Ages.

[Note—Just why Pete selected "Rock of Ages" instead of "Blest Be the Tie That Binds" as the favorite hymn for this occasion is beyond comprehension. However: "Onward Christian Soldier"!—The Rambler.]

All of which (resuming Peteschmidly) is true in some manner, shape or form, but which has nothing to do with the function of Paramount-Artcraft Pep, conducted without fear or favor, as the Old Exhibitor would say. The fact that Mr. Flinn was born in Evanston, Ill., arouses no sympathy from us whatsoever. That he has lived down this—may we say—handicap is, however, an admirable accomplishment. (Pause for aplause.) This fact we, even in our most supercritical mood, would and must concede. Evanston, then, is a thing of the past, and we will refer to it as little as possible in future.

Leaving Evanston as rapidly as possible by horse car and stage coach, but chiefly on foot, we arrive at Kansas City, several years later, where we find an athletic looking youth, in blue flannel shirt and running pants, counting up the evening's receipts of a more or less amateur basketball game. Yes, you've guessed right—it's none other than John, or "Jack" Flinn, as he was then known.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

An active member, treasurer and ballyhoo for the redoubtable Crescent Athletic Club, Mr. Flinn found much to do. It was at this period of his career that his first press agent propensities came to the surface. In a series of famous articles under the heading of "Tricks of Basketball Players," Mr. Flinn disclosed many fine points of the game. Strange to relate, the newspaperman who swallowed this series and ran it in the Kansas City Star at nothing per line was none other than our own (Note—Meaning Paramount-Artcraft's) Jerome Beatty, who, in a sense, is editor of this (Note—Meaning Pep) publication.

As chief conductor of the affairs of the aforementioned Crescent Club, Mr. Flinn directed a tour which was to take the athletic ones to Honolulu. On reaching San Francisco, however, Mr. Flinn decided that even his highly trained and physically fit associates would find it a long swim back, so with the many (?) gate receipts in hand (one hand), bethought himself of the least expensive route home. Just at this time, the A. A. U. stepped in and raised a question as to the professionalism displayed by the Crescent aggregation, but they were soon convinced of the fact that the members were receiving no fees for their efforts.

On finally arriving back at E——, Mr. Flinn continud his athletic endeavors for a while and rather suddenly concluded that his future career would associate him with the field of journalism. Migrating to Chicago, he received his first training in this line with one of the prominent dailies, name unknown. Then New York called, and John Cunningham Flinn pressed his Sunday-go-to-meeting suit, packed away his running trunks, gym shoes and blue flannel shirt, and grabbed the w. k. rattler for the big village.

In New York, Mr. Flinn associated himself with The Herald, where for nine long years he toiled as a metropolitan newspaperman alongside of such personages in the journalistic world as Charles Kenmore Ulrich, Thomas Geraghty, et al. In consulting Mr. Ulrich regarding the person here discussed, we are told that the latter was "always industrious, well liked, and possessed the greatly sought after nose for news."

"He always had money, and loaned it to us guys, who were usually broke," said Mr. Ulrich. On further investigation, we find the cause for this was that while the others played poker, Mr. Flinn studied the dictionary for big words.

Later, as Dramatic Critique of The Herald, he was able to obtain many passes for Broadway shows, whereupon his friendships increased a hundred per cent. Strange to say, those friends still stick, even though they no longer get the free ducats. After nine years on the Herald, Mr. Flinn proved himself such an expert golf player that he won the newspapermen's championship cup. Arriving home with the cup, he immediately took out a large burglar insurance and proceeded to make that insurance a good investment by filling his domicile in Yonkers with cups won with the (golf) club.

When Jesse L. Lasky beckoned to Mr. Flinn, John bade his many good friends along Herald Square good-by, and then began his real career as a P. A. Little need be said here of his achievements along this line, for you are all familiar with it. How he put over "Joan the Woman," that million-dollar adv. campaign, and other big ideas, is a matter of film history. His chief weakness, from personal observation, is his speech-making propensities. Some gink said that great writers never make great speakers, but if that bird was right, John C. Flinn is the exception.

[Note—Here follows some praise of Mr. Flinn which we concur in to the fullest extent—except Yonkers. We have, ultimately, remaining before us the task of getting this past one certain party who edits the justly celebrated Moving Picture World, and to accomplish our purpose we must repudiate the Peteschmid slam at the best source of jokes vaudeville ever discovered. Yonkers is all right, provided you know what they are. In which we give an example of the use to which Yonkers may be put. Until he returned to England one Charles Hawtrey was never able to fathom the one curiosity of his dip into American vaudeville—to wit: What are Yonkers?—The Rambler.]

His flow of the King's English, or the Queens, for that matter, comes as fluently from his lips as from his pen. J. C. F. has shown 'em a thing or two in film exploitation, and for the benefit of those who don't know it, we want to say that he's one of the boys. Living in Yonkers, you've already suspected that he is married; yes, by two children, boy and girl. Just why he, of all persons, should select Yonkers as a place in which to live, vote and register for the draft, we are unable to state. Perhaps it is to further insure the safety of those golf cups, for who would make the trip to Yonkers, even for robbery, say we. Anyway, it wouldn't go well with a porch climber should he run into J. C. F., for the boy's there with the physical as well as the mental punch. Yea Bo! Exit.

Old Friends Are Star and Author of Fox Screen Story

WHEN, the other day at the offices of the Fox Film Corporation, William Fox gave a private screening of his forthcoming production, "Riders of the Purple Sage," he brough to conclusion a real-life story which is as fascinating and as fine as many of the fictions shown in the films. Woven in every scene of "Riders of the Purple Sage" is the record of the friendship of William Farnum, star of the production, and Zane Grey, the author.

Farnum and Grey have been the closest of friends for many years. This friendship began in the West, where, both lovers of the outdoor, they found a bond of common interest in their passion for hunting and fishing. In the years that have followed, this friendship has grown strong and enduring through the test of close companioship and in the perils and hardships of out-of-door camps.

Together, the two men have hunted big game in the Rockies; together they have fished the streams and lakes from the Columbia River to Southern California; they have lived with each other under the most trying circumstances—in camp, on the trail, roughing it generally. They have tested each other in the greatest of all trials—close companionship—and their friendship has grown into something as strong and as lasting as their own mountains.

It was on one of these long hunting trips—an expedition into the wildest part of Utah—that Zane Grey first conceived the idea of writing "Riders of the Purple Sage," his romance of the early Mormon days in Utah territory. Gradually, while he and Farnum hunted and fished, the character of Lassiter, the avenger of Mormon wrongs, took shape in his brain, and nights around the camp fire he sketched out to Farnum the outlines of his story. He told his friend of his aims in writing the book, he pictured the characters, he asked Farnum for suggestions and advice. Eventually as he wrote the first chapters of a rough draft, he read parts of it to his companion.

At length the novel was completed and published, and the first one to congratulate Grey on its success was Farnum, who was then filming a production at Hollywood.

Some time afterward William Fox bought the motion picture rights to the book, and word was sent to Hollywood for Farnum to do the production.

General Plans Campaign For Author's "Her Moment"

ARRANGEMENTS are now being completed by General Film to release shortly after July 15 the Anna Luther feature production of "Her Moment," filmed on the west coast by the Author's Photoplays, Inc. The work of editing and cutting the film is in its final stages and the first of the prints will soon be on their way to General Film exchanges. General is planning a strenuous sales campaign in support of this six-reel feature, which is declared to be a most unusual and clean problem play. The entire exchange system of the company is being mobilized for the unusual exploitation campaign which General Film officials believe the high quality of the feature demands.

The outstanding feature of the photoplay, picturized from an unusually strong heart interest story by Samuel H. London, is declared to be the acting of Anna Luther, who does the best work of her career in the many highly dramatic scenes in the story. There is said to be no effort at preachment in the presentation of the story. "Her Moment," and the straightforward manner in which it has been handled is expected to make it widely popular with all classes of patrons.

Rawlinson Leading Man For Geraldine Farrar

GOLDWYN'S emphasis upon production quality is made clear by an inspection of the all-star cast engaged to support Geraldine Farrar in her first Goldwyn picture, now in the course of making at the company's Fort Lee studios.

Miss Farrar's leading man is Herbert Rawlinson, for several years a star in his own right and possessing a definite following.

Another person who has been starred separately is Violet Heming, who has an important role in Miss Farrar's production. Miss Heming is known in most of America's larger cities through her stage successes and recently she has been seen on the screen in "The Judgment House" and "The Danger Trail."

Still other well known names to be found in Miss Farrar's cast are Hassard Short, famous in the support of many stars of stage and screen; Percy Marmont and Maude Turner Gordon.

Reginald Barker, Miss Farrar's director, is making splendid headway with her first Goldwyn production, which has been under way without interruption or delay of any sort for two weeks. There has been considerable speculation in picture circles over this first Farrar story because of the atmosphere of secrecy and mystery that Goldwyn has thrown around the work of Miss Farrar.

On the stage of the big Fort Lee studios the Farrar company works carefully screened against intrusion or interruption. No outsiders have been permitted to come near the company while at work and members of the cast have been asked to maintain secrecy even about their own roles until the moment of the production's release in the early Fall.

Meanwhile all of the preliminary work has been completed for Miss Farrar's second production. The supporting players have been selected, the scenic sets are in readiness and the feminine players have received their gown charts. This reduces delays between pictures to a minimum.

"Kaieteur" Gives Views of Big Falls.

MOST fascinating of travel pictures is "Kaieteur," which carries the spectator on an exciting journey through British Guiana to the falls of Kaieteur, which are five times as high as Niagara Falls and practically unknown to civilization. "Kaieteur" constitutes the second of the Mutual-Outing-Chester travel classics, and it will be released on July 7.

The picture is a revelation of world spaces still undeveloped and inhabited by savage tribes. It takes the spectator by canoe express along tumultuous rivers and over portages into the very heart of the wildest country.

"Kaieteur" was produced by C. L. Chester.

Sheldon Discusses Value to Exhibitors of Short Stuff

A SENSATIONALLY sensible idea is being put in operation in a very showmanlike manner by S. L. Rothapfel at the Rivoli theater in his use of short pictures," remarks James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual, in a discussion of the Outing-Chester adventure pictures shortly to be released through Mutual exchanges.

"The notion of making up a show for a first class house and for a first class audience out of short but keenly interesting pictures as a bit of novelty is so simple and logical that it is revolutionary.

"Its particular signficance is a recognition of the fact that a picture does not have to be from five to eight reels long to contain feature quality and feature box office value.

"The effect may be to make a great many exhibitors give more thought and attention to the short pictures which go on their screen. I hope incidentally that it may lead some of them to think about our Outing-Chester adventure pictures.

"We desire to point out to the trade, with purposes that are not entirely selfish, that by their runs at the Strand theater on Broadway in New York and the high value set upon them by Harold Edel, managing director of that famous theater, the Outing-Chester releases can be made quite as important a drawing card to the theater as the feature end of the bill.

"Mr. Rothapfel's experiment with a short picture program at the Rivoli does not at all mean that the feature picture is in for a period of depreciation. It means that all of the pictures on the screen are a real part of the entertainment and that the short lengths must not be considered 'just fillers.'

"In a publicity article in connection with the Rothapfel idea appearing in the New York Times is observed this statement: 'If someone invented a machine that would register the reactions of spectators thousands of persons would be surprised to learn from it that their interest was really more consistently alert for animated pictorials, scenic films, spectacular action, and short comic and dramatic sketches.'

"The Outing-Chester pictures contain the values and qualities discussed to a most marked degree. They are really little one thousand-foot camera reports on adventuring expeditions to all manner of surprising places and peoples in the Fiji Islands, the by-ways of the West Indies, the wilds of Canada, and the untracked jungles of South America.

"They contain," concluded Mr. Sheldon, "thrills such as never a serial author invented, characters that only nature could make up, and action that just had to happen. They tell the strange truth, and nobody will ever be able to walk out of a house when they are on the screen.

"We have supplied our branches with ample prints for advance showings to exhibitors. We want to show the goods first, and talk contracts afterward. That is what we think of them."

General Film to Issue Tucker's "Hypocrites"

THE distribution of George Loane Tucker's celebrated screen version of the Henry Arthur Jones' play, "Hypocrites," is to be taken over at once by General Film Company. In this six-reel production is starred Elizabeth Risdon, the English actress of "Mother" and "The Manxman" fame, and more recently the star of "Seven Days' Leave," the military melodrama which created a stir on Broadway.

"Hypocrites" deals with a moral problem, but so cleverly and in such good taste as to eliminate everything objectionable and still retain the "punch." The outstanding feature of the film adaptation of the famous play is the acting of Miss Risdon. The play deals a smashing blow at so-called righteous people who erect glass houses for themselves to live in while finding fault with the lives of others. The story is dramatic, and from the introduction begins the unraveling of one of the most sympathetic and engrossing of dramas.

Distinctive Tucker touches are in evidence in the capable cast surrounding Elizabeth Risdon, in the attractive English countryside settings and the beautiful photographic work. "Hypocrites" is an intimate story of life in a quaint English village, revolving around the attempts of the village "Squire" to lay down strict moral rules for the guidance of the community, despite the fact that the spectre of scandal hovers about within his own family circle.

In anticipation of a wide demand for the Tucker feature General Film Company is planning an intensive sales campaign to include its thirty exchanges in the United States and Canada. A complete line of exhibitors' helps, including paper and other material, will be supplied by General Film Company. Announcement of the release date will be made shortly.

Hayakawa Selling Plans Are Completed by Mutual

SELLING plans for the series of Sessue Hayakawa specials, produced by the Haworth Pictures Corporation and to be distributed through exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation, have been completed at a series of conferences between Haworth representatives and officials of the Mutual held in the office of James M. Sheldon, president of the latter, in Chicago.

September 1 has been selected as the date when the first of the Hayakawa specials will be available for pre-release. The succeeding pictures, eight in all, will be available at Mutual exchanges.

The exhibitor will be provided with a most complete array of advertising. Some novel and original experiments have been made in the preparation of the paper to fulfill the theater's demand for "something new." Two set of one sheets and two sets of three sheets will be furnished. Sixes, sixteens and twenty-four sheets will be supplied in addition to a vast quantity of other material necessary to the exploitation of productions of high quality.

"His Birthright" and "The Temple of Dusk" are to be the first of the Hayakawa specials, both of which will be completed well before the date of release. The Hayakawa productions are being directed alternately by William Worthington and James Young.

"Early indications are that the bookings of the Hayakawa specials will be extremely heavy," said James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual, in discussing the preliminary sales campaign. "Our branch offices are already reporting an unusual number of inquiries from exhibitors as to the details of the selling plan. The box office value of Sessue Hayakawa is firmly established. Exhibitor after exhibitor has told me that the Japanese artist ranks with the first stars of the screen in his popularity with the picture going public.

Vitagraph Announces Serial Program for Coming Year

VITAGRAPH has definitely fixed its future serial policy, and exhibitors of the United States and Canada now are guaranteed four serials a year, with an episode for each week in the year. William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, will head one company, while Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway will head the other. Beginning with "A Fight For Millions," featuring William Duncan with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, which is scheduled for release on July 15, these two companies will alternate, so that an exhibitor may count on a Duncan-Johnson-Ryan serial, then a Moreno-Holloway serial, then a Duncan serial again, and so on.

The serial schedule which has been mapped out by Vitagraph is as follows: July 15, 1918, William Duncan with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan; October 21, Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway; January 27, 1919, William Duncan with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan; May 5, Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway.

Thus Vitagraph not only is standing by its previously announced policy of "a serial episode for each week in the year," but also is affording exhibitors the opportunity to book their serial attractions for fifty-two weeks on a single contract.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, in announcing the new serial policy of the company, stated that Antonio Moreno already was on his way to the Pacific Coast studio of the company, and that he and Miss Holloway would start work at once on their first serial under the direction of Paul Hurst.

The return of Mr. Moreno to Vitagraph's standard will be greeted with enthusiasm by exhibitors and fans who followed him as a Blue Ribbon star and will be like a home-coming to the star.

In Carol Holloway Mr. Moreno will have a worthy co-star because she is known as a girl of unlimited pluck and daring.

William Duncan and his company are nearing completion of "A Fight For Millions" and another is ready for him and Miss Johnson and Joe Ryan, so that within a few weeks Vitagraph will have two new serials under way.

Roscce's Nurse Story Comes July 8.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle's next Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "Good Night, Nurse," has been scheduled for release on July 8. This film is said to promise lots of fun for those who see it and lots of money for those who book it. "Fatty" has offended once too often, so the next morning his wife takes him to a sanitarium for the cure. The weird sights that greet his eyes on entering the dread place are too much for "Fatty," but wifey keeps him elected, and after he sees the beautiful nurses he is content.

Just to get the proper atmosphere for "Good Night, Nurse," the comics went to Arrowhead, Hot Springs, the most famous of southern California health resorts.

Supporting "Fatty" in this comedy are the elastic marvels, Buster Keaton and Al St. John, and winsome Alice Lake supplies the beauty and feminine joy.

"A Wife's Conscience" Is a Problem of Human Life

A WIFE'S CONSCIENCE probably will be the title of Bessie Barriscale's Paralta production now being filmed at the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles. At the base of the story and its whole reason for being is a problem of human life which makes thrills and suspense, causes the characters much travail, and puts Miss Barriscale, as Dorothy Kingsley, into a situation of risk from which it seems that there is no way out—and yet keep the sympathy of the audience.

Then it is that the twist of the ending reverses the entire perspective from which the audience views the play. Up to a certain point as the intricacy of the plot and the suspense both mount higher and higher the sympathy for the leading character gets less and less in proportion. There is, of course, another sympathy which any woman who witnesses the play cannot help but give Dorothy Kingsley, the wife and mother, who because of a little daughter about whom there is a mystery, is harried by conscience and fear.

In this production Bessie Barriscale is directed by Howard Hickman. It was written by William Parker.

Smiles and Tears Alternate in Mae Marsh Production

IN Mae Marsh's newest Goldwyn Picture, "The Glorious Adventure," by Edith Barnard Delano, the star enjoys sume delightful moments. She wavers between smiles and tears—none can do this more effectively than Mae Marsh—and it is predicted her audiences will do the same as a matter of course.

The production is replete with original touches in costuming and in the settings, and the story itself is decidedly out of the ordinary. While it is in every sense a modern production, Mae Marsh is given the opportunity to wear costumes of a bygone day, the period before the Civil War being represented in some of the dresses worn. None of the action, however, is removed from the present day. This is a unique feature in itself.

Carey, the girl impersonated by Mae Marsh, is reared by her aunt in the way the old lady lived before the war. Thus, while they both knew that the calendar says 1918, they cling to the dresses and customs of ante-bellum days. This brings about many amusing incongruities and in the end Carey's glorious adventure is given added zest when she starts out on a long journey clad in shawl and crinoline.

Gerard Film Has Many Special Performances

AMBASSADOR GERARD'S screen version of "My Four Years in Germany," has been shown at more special performances than any other big feature of the day, according to the records on file at First National Headquarters. The latest and in some respects the most interesting special performance of the film was that given on June 12, before the inmates of the Minnesota State Prison at Stillwater, which elicited the following letter of appreciation from the warden:

"Through the courtesy of E. R. Pearson, general manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit of the Northwest, and Maurice Abrams, manager of the picture Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," the inmates of the Minnesota State Prison were permitted to see this wonderful production. On behalf of the administration and all the inmates, I wish to thank these gentlemen for this great kindness.

"These men and women, who for the time being are deprived of their liberty, are not wanting in patriotism. They have demonstrated in many ways that the patriotic spirit is ever alive in their souls, and, while they may have erred, yet their love of country and loyalty to the flag cannot be questioned. This is best exemplified by their subsciptions and donations to the three Liberty Loans, War Stamps, Red Cross and Knights of Columbus, amounting in all to $50,222, over $50 per capita.

"I am sure that we will all be better American citizens after having seen this great picture. Again thanking you for your extreme courtesy in this matter, I remain, yours very respectfully,

"C. S. REED,
"Warden Minnesota State Prison."

Irwin Starts Campaign on "A Fight for Millions"

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Vitagraph, distributing organization, announces that everything is in readiness for the nation-wide advertising campaign which is to herald to the public the coming of "A Fight for Millions," the newest Vitagraph serial, in which William Duncan is featured with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan as his chief supports.

Although the serial, which was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, is not released until July 15, Mr. Irwin has laid out a campaign which gives the exhibitors virtually thirty days for their advance publicity work in preparation for the opening of the serial. The first move in this campaign was the early shipment of prints so that exhibitors could see the majority of the episodes screened before the release date. First prints were shipped to all of the Vitagraph exchanges more than two weeks ago, and others have followed them in rapid sequence, so that by next week more than two-thirds of the serial will be visible for the showmen of the country.

"Her Husband's Honor" Title of Goodrich Play

HER Husband's Honor" has been selected as the title for the first of Edna Goodrich's new series of features for Mutual. It was produced under the working title "The Gadabout" from Maibelle Heikes Justice's story.

"Her Husband's Honor" has been set for release August 5. The picture was produced under the direction of Burton King. Miss Goodrich will shortly start work on the second of her new series.

"Her Husband's Honor" was chosen as a vehicle for Miss Goodrich after a long search for a play which would exactly suit the talents of the players.

The story is built around the efforts of a young wife to save her husband from disgrace and prison as the result of an impending business crash for which he was not responsible but in which he is a victim. The plot involves the efforts of a delegation of Japanese government representatives to secure certain plans and specifications from an American contractor.

Jewel Carmen Begins "Above the Law."

Immediately after completing the picturization of Gouverneur Morris' story, "You Can't Get Away With It," under the title of "The Fallen Angel," Jewel Carmen has begun on "Above The Law," a production based on the magazine story of the same name by Max Brand. Miss Carmen is working under the direction of Robert Thornby. This is Mr. Thornby's second production for the William Fox forces.

Beautiful Background in Metro's "A King in Khaki"

BEAUTIFUL scenic backgrounds, which by reason of past performances are a looked-for feature of Harold Lockwood vehicles, are again in striking evidence in "A King in Khaki," a romantic drama based on Henry Kitchell Webster's novel in which Lockwood makes his next appearance under the Metro banner.

The story of the picture, which is now in course of production under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer, is laid on a semi-tropical island, which is described as a great plantation rising over a picturesque rock-ribbed coast with its deep coves and caves, once the home of pirates because of its impenetrable recesses. The word picture painted by the novelist in describing the scenic beauties of the spot has been carried to the screen from the most picturesque locations on the Californian Coast, along which the Lockwood Company has been working for the last four weeks.

Many of the scenes obtained were photographed in the vicinity of the historic Monterey Harbor.

Blackton Selecting Cast For "Getting Together"

J. STUART BLACKTON is rapidly completing plans for the filming of "Getting Together," the recruiting play which he has been commissioned to screen under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission.

He is now negotiating with a well-known feminine star whose appearance in the role of Mrs. Palmer, the unhappy wife who finds her real self in war service "over there," promises to be a surprise to the film world. The name of Blanche Bates, now playing that role on the stage, is mentioned on Broadway, as also is that of her co-star, Holbrook Blinn.

While Mr. Blackton is not yet ready to announce the cast, inasmuch as negotiations are pending with several players suggested for the leading supporting roles, he is losing no opportunity to draft the services of stars who will be especially suited to interpret the various characters and different nationalities revealed in the recruiting play's melting pot.

Commodore Blackton expects to begin actual production work shortly. Since he is to produce "Getting Together" under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission and with the co-operation of the War Department his trench scenes will be staged in a training camp where actual effects can be produced. A representative for the Recruiting Mission informed Mr. Blackton last week that he expected to be able to place at his disposal a tank even larger than the "Britannia," which was first underlined to go "over the top" for the film scenes.

Anthony Kelly and Mr. Blackton have worked out what promises to be a spectacular film version of the play, and Mr. Kelly is now writing the scenario.

This story is to be much elaborated for the screen, and will combine all the meanings of the phrase which furnishes its title, providing good propaganda for the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission and other recruiting interests, as well as unusual screen entertainment. Mr. Blackton will complete the production within the next two months.

Binney Comedies to Be Made in North.

Harold J. Binney, president and director general of the Florida Film Corporation, announces that the next four pictures to be made under the Josh Binney brand will be made in New York City. Mr. Binney and a number of his people arrived in the city June 30 and expect to remain here until about the middle of October. He announces that the subjects to be filmed here are going to contain some entirely new and novel effects. The scenarios have all been passed upon favorably, he says, and each one of them gives every advantage to Funny Fatty Filbert and Laura De Cardi to further demonstrate that they are premier comedy creators. The first of the four pictures to be made here will have Coney Island for a background and some exceedingly funny situations are built around this atmosphere. Upon completion of the four pictures to be made in New York Mr. Binney and his company will return to Jacksonville, where they make their headquarters in the Kluthò Studios.

Alma Rubens on Triangle's July List.

"Woman of Mystery" has been substituted as the second release of the Triangle program for the week of July 21, replacing "Alias Mary Brown" with Pauline Starke, which according to the schedule was announced for that date and which has been temporarily postponed.

Alma Rubens will be featured in a cast of unusual length, in "Woman of Mystery," which was produced under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton from the story and scenario by E. Magnus Ingleton. The play is described as a drama of mystery with an environment of the occult.

Scene from "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor" (Mutual).

Mary Miles Minter Leads Mutual's July 8 Program

MARY MILES MINTER in "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," a screen adaptation of the story of the same name by Josephine Daskam Bacon, is Mutual's feature for the week of July 8. The director, Henry King, has succeeded in translating to the screen the atmosphere of mystery and romance carried by the story. The role of Rhoda Eldridge is one that is said to appeal to the winsome little player, while the unusual plot affords the director opportunity to present some striking situations.

Rhoda, on the death of her father, with whom she has lived in the Latin Quarter of Paris, finds herself destitute. She gains passage to America, her father's native land. Led by a mysterious sequence of events she plays the part of a mythical housekeeper for a woman of wealth and keeps her house in order during her employer's absence. Discovered in the house by the son of her mistress, she is taken for an impostor and put in a reformatory. The culmination of the mystery brings about a happy climax when she is restored to the family of her father.

Supporting Miss Minter are Alan Forrest, as lead; George Periolat, Helen Howard and Emma Kluge.

Billy Rhodes appears in a Strand comedy, "Her Disengagement Ring," released July 9. This is a story of the eternal triangle. Two rivals for Billie's hand believe firmly in the old maxim, "All's fair in love or war," and carry it out to the bitter end.

The third release of the Outing-Chester scenic classics, "Mountaineering Memory," is scheduled for July 14. This scenic shows the cameraman's graphic picturization of a trip through the Canadian Mountains, accessible from Banff, Alberta, and shows Mount Assiniboine close up. "Old Whiskers," the guardian of the range, stands on a crag 6,000 feet above the sea level.

Screen Telegram Nos. 38 and 39 are released July 10 and 14.

The disastrous wreck at Gary, Ind., when an empty troop train crashed into the Wallace-Hagenbeck Circus sleepers, killing sixty-eight and injuring a hundred and forty-two, is shown in the current release of the Screen Telegram.

"Cleopatra" Released August 5.

In response to numerous inquiries from exhibitors the Fox Film Corporation has announced that August 5 has been set as the general release date for "Cleopatra," the Theda Bara super-production, which has done record business in the cities where it has been shown. "Cleopatra" will be a special release and will be sold as a separate production from all other Fox attractions.

The run of the picture at the Lyric theater, New York City, still stands as one of the records of that house. "Cleopatra" also made a record at the Victoria theater, Philadelphia, and at the Colonial in Chicago, extended runs being the order at both those houses.

Incidentally there are no Theda Bara productions scheduled for release between June 16 and August 5. It is stated pictures which Miss Bara has been working on this summer are being saved for the fall campaign.

"Her Screen Idol" Is Sennett's Next.

Louise Fazenda, Ford Sterling, and Jack Cooper are featured in the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy set for release July 1. "Her Screen Idol" is the title, and the comedy is described as a delightfully good-natured satire on the matinee idol of the screen, with a wild west setting. His little vanities and poses, his thirst for adulation, and his almost childish awe of his own importance are all brought out in a way to make everybody laugh. Indeed, it is said that the satire is so merry and so sly and withal so kindly that even the matinee heroes themselves will not be able to control a snicker of appreciation. Roxana McGowan, Gene Rogers, and Marvel Rea are the other principals in the funfest.

"The Unbeliever" Making a Hit.

Not since the days of "Quo Vadis" in its height has George Kleine met with the success that is greeting his production of "The Unbeliever." Women like the picture. It gives them an idea of war without any grewsome detail. The elements of patriotism, romance, and religion are most ingeniously blended, and are appealing. The hit the picture has made is proved by the large number of return dates demanded.

Scene from "Everywoman's Husband" (Triangle).

Peggy Pearce Featured on Triangle's July 7 Program

A WESTERN play, "A Good Loser," is the first release on the Triangle schedule for the week of July 7, offering Peggy Pearce, the former Keystone comedy player, who heads the cast supported by Lee Hill. Joe King will support Gloria Swanson in "Everywoman's Husband," a psychological drama of society, scheduled for the second release of the week.

"A Good Loser" is a story of friendship and sacrifice. The sweetheart of the hero is married to his chum, but he is loyal to the woman who forgot him and with devoted friendship for his pal he sacrifices his life that they may know happiness.

Peggy Pearce will make her first appearance as a featured player in the part of Evelyn Hastings. The production was directed by Dick Donaldson and photographed by G. C. Peterson. John W. Short wrote the story.

"Everywoman's Husband," the second release of the week, tells of the struggle between youth and age, the dominating influence of the mother that nearly wrecks the domestic happiness of her married daughter. But the heroine loves her husband and finally becomes master of the situation when the true conditions of her father's existence are revealed.

Gloria Swanson, favored by the critics for her interpretation of Phyllis Dunbar in "Her Decision," will portray the young society matron, Edith Emerson, with Joe King as the husband. Lillian Langdon is Mrs. Rhodes and George Pearce is Jonathan Rhodes. Jack Livingston and Lillian West also are in the cast.

John B. Clymer and C. H. Logue wrote this story, which was scenarioized by Charles J. Wilson. The production was directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton with Thomas Buckingham at the camera.

"Her Price" a Story of the Opera.

Revealing the temptations which are said to beset the feet of girls who would climb the ladder of fame, Virginia Pearson, in "Her Price," which is announced from the William Fox offices as the latest special feature release, portrays the role of an opera singer who barters her beauty for a career only to find that the price she paid is too much. The picture is described as being one of the strongest in which Miss Pearson has appeared in a long time and is full of tense situations and a powerful human appeal.

Playing opposite Miss Pearson in "Her Price" is Victor Sutherland, who has appeared in several big screen successes. Others in a noteworthy cast are Edward F. Rosen, Henri Leone, Charles H. Martin, Paul Stanton and Mrs. Allan Walker. "Her Price" was written by George Scarborough and directed by Edmund Lawrence.

Seventh "Snakeville is Released.

"A Hot Time in Snakeville," an uproarious comedy hit, is released this week by General Film Company. This is the seventh subject in the second series of ten Essanay re-issues which have proved even more popular than the first series of ten, General Film reports.

Young America's Star A Long Time on Stage

CHARLES FROHMAN EVERETT, nephew of the late Charles Frohman, who takes the leading part in the George K. Spoor feature "Young America," has had long experience both on the speaking stage and in pictures, although only fifteen years old.

He began his stage career on Broadway at the age of eight with William Brady in "Things that Count," in which he took a prominent boy part. Later he played with Winthrop Ames in "Child of Earth."

Charles Frohman Everett.

In pictures he took the leading masculine role in "Snowwhite."

He was with a motion picture company taking scenes in Texas for several months. It was there he found his dog, Jasper, which plays with him in "Young America."

His biggest hit was in the Cohan and Harris stage production of "Young America," in which he played the leading role for two seasons. The play, written by Fred Ballard, now is being made into a picture at the Essenay studios under the direction of Arthur Berthelet.

Fall Production Drive On at Vitagraph Studios

THE fall production drive is on at the Vitagraph studios, both east and west, and within a few days virtually every one of the Blue Ribbon feature companies will be engaged on productions for the Autumn programs. Advices from the office of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, are to the effect that eleven companies are now actively at work on production for the regular Vitagraph program, seven of these being feature companies, two serial companies and two comedy companies.

Harry Morey, with Betty Blythe as his leading woman, was the first of the Blue Ribbon feature companies to start on post-summer production, working under direction of Paul Scardon. Alice Joyce completed "To the Highest Bidder," under direction of Tom Terriss, a few days ago, and soon will begin work on another five-reel production, the title of which is to be announced next week.

Corinne Griffith, it is announced, is nearing completion of "Love Watches," the Billie Burke stage success in which she will soon be presented and will start at once on "The Clutch of Circumstance," from the book by Leighton Graves Osmun. Gladys Leslie, who is working under direction of Frederic Thomson in "Wild Primrose," with Richard Barthelmess as her leading man, and an all-star cast, including Eulalie Jensen, Claude Gillingwater, Bigelow Cooper, Charles Kent and others, is scheduled to start work within a few days on "The Rebel."

Out in the West, at the Vitagraph Hollywood studio, Earle Williams, with Grace Darmond as his leading woman, is reported to be making rapid progress with "The Man from Brodney's," a five-reel play made from the popular novel by George Barr McCutcheon of the same name. Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman, working under direction of David Smith, are about finished work on "A Gentleman's Agreement," by Wallace Irwin, and the director now has in hand several new scripts for future production.

Fox Completes Seven Pictures During Week

SEVEN productions were completed during the week by William Fox companies. Four were begun and two others are nearing completion.

"The Message of the Lilies," a super-production, has finished photographing at Hollywood, Cal., under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. Jewel Carmen, under the direction of Robert Thornby, has completed "The Fallen Angel," a picturization of Gouverneur Morris' story, "You Can't Get Away With It," and has begun on "Above The Law." Tom Mix, also at Hollywood, has finished "Fame and Fortune," which is based on Charles Alden Seltzer's magazine story, "Slow Burgess," and has begun on a new production.

At Hollywood, also, is William Farnum, who is at work on "The Rainbow Trail," a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," the books of both of which Zane Grey wrote.

In the east Virginia Pearson, following the completion of "Her Price," has begun the filming of "The Liar" at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn. Peggy Hyland has begun "Bonnie Annie Laurie" at New Dorp, Staten Island, and George Walsh has finished "Yankee Doodle Dandy." Two other big productions have been completed by R. A. Walsh and Richard Stanton.

Defense Society to Show "Joan of Plattsburg"

SIGNIFICANT indorsement of Goldwyn's patriotic comedy-drama, "Joan of Plattsburg," as a worth-while contribution to screen literature in which the great war is used as a background has come from the American Defense Society through the Women's National Committee of that organization. It has been listed with the select group of patriotic films which are to be shown throughout the United States in the next few months under the auspices of the committee.

Porter Emerson Browne, the author, has characterized it as "propaganda with a sugar coating." As such it teaches its lesson—that the bulwark of a nation's strength is the faith and courage of its womanhood. "Joan of Plattsburg" will be shown throughout the country under the auspices of the various local chapters of the American Defense Society.

In this connection it is worth noting that since its release, less than two months ago, this film story of the adventures of a little American orphan Joan of Arc has been the feature of more patriotic entertainments than usually fall to the lot of a film drama. It has been shown at army posts, in hospitals, at Y. M. C. A. and Red Cross hutments and will shortly be seen behind the battle lines in France.

Anna Held, the famous French actress, who was believed to be dying of a rare disease of the bones, saw the picture on the wall of her bedroom in the Hotel Savoy, New York City, where it was projected by means of a portable machine. At that time Miss Held's physician said she had but a few days to live. Since then, however, she has shown such steady improvement that she is now able to walk a few steps and to sit up several hours a day. Complete recovery now is predicted for her.

Pearl White Ready for New Serial.

Pearl White, Pathe's famous serial star, is expected to return from her vacation just after the Fourth of July and will immediately begin work on her new serial. The working title is "The Lightning Raider," and it will follow in release sequence the Pathe-Astra serial "Hands Up" some time next fall.

In "The Lightning Raider" Miss White assumes a part rather unusual to her former roles, but the scenario is reported to be full of remarkable opportunities both for stunts and for legitimate acting. The serial will be staged in the Astra studios in Jersey City as usual, although it is understood that some of the exteriors will require long journeys by Miss White and her supporting cast.

Scene from "The Savage Woman" (Select).

Select Pictures Will Release Three Subjects in July

BESIDES Alice Brady's latest Select picture, "The Whirlpool," which was being released on the last day of June, and therefore virtually becomes a July production, Select Pictures Corporation will have available for exhibitors during the month of July three new attractions by three Select stars. These pictures are "The Safety Curtain," Norma Talmadge's latest vehicle; "A Pair of Silk Stocking," in which Lewis J. Selznick presents Constance Talmadge; Clara Kimball Young's production of "The Savage Woman," made by Miss Young in California with her own company.

"The Safety Curtain," which will be seen in New York during the week of July 8 at all the Marcus Loew houses, is undoubtedly another hit to be chalked up to the credit of Norma Talmadge. The story is taken from the widely read novel of the same name by Ethel M. Dell. It is of a little English girl who, earning her livelihood as a phenomenally clever dancer in the English music halls, later becomes the bride of an English officer and takes part in stirring scenes which have a military flavor. Eugene O'Brien is leading man, Anders Randolph plays the strong man, and Gladden James adds another villain to his list of roles in the part of Sylvester. S. A. Franklin directed the production.

Cyril Harcourt's highly successful play, "A Pair of Silk Stockings," has been filmed by Constance Talmadge for her latest Select picture. This comedy-drama, as may be recalled, enjoyed a long run in New York at Winthrop Ames' Little theater, after it had stayed for two seasons at a prominent London playhouse. In the large cast are Harrison Ford, Wanda Hawley, Vera Doria, Thomas Persse and Florence Carpenter.

All reports received from Hollywood have indicated that Clara Kimball Young has made one of the best pictures of her career in "The Savage Woman." In fact, expectations on this picture run so high that there have been current rumors that "The Savage Woman" would be released as a special production at advanced prices. This is not true.

"The Savage Woman" is an adaptation by Kathryn Stuart of Francois Curel's novel of the same name. The central character is that of a woman who has grown to maturity literally in the wilds. Milton Sills is again seen as Miss Young's leading man. Robert G. Vignola is directing "The Savage Woman."

Lloyd Seeks Big Themes For Farnum to Present

ALTHOUGH he is extremely busy directing "The Rainbow Trail," the William Fox production which William Farnum is now producing at Hollywood, Frank Lloyd, Mr. Farnum's director, is poring through the classics of literature to find a new play for the famous Fox star.

Mr. Lloyd believes that motion picture followers want such pictures as "Les Miserables," which he directed. Usually a motion picture director speaks of his latest success and forgets the picture he made in the past, but Mr. Lloyd always mentions "A Tale of Two Cities" in the same breath with "Les Miserables," both of which he considers his greatest productions.

The ordinary sex picture has little appeal for Mr. Lloyd. He declares he does not care to make pictures just for the sake of turning one out every so often. On the contrary, he wants to put on the screen plays that are educational, that have a big theme, that will last, and plays that people will enjoy seeing the fifth time as well as the first.

"The Rainbow Trail," which he is now engaged in producing, is the sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," which Farnum just completed. Both pictures are taken from novels of the same name by Zane Grey.

Scene from "Shark Monroe" (Artcraft).

In "Shark Monroe" Hart Plays the Role of a Sea Rover

THE strongly human stories in which William S. Hart appears always calls for a strong supporting cast. His latest Artcraft picture, "Shark Monroe," is no exception, for its characters are flesh-and-blood people, and skilled actors are needed to portray them.

Chief among these characters is "Shark" Monroe, sea rover of the north, who is hated and feared up and down the coast of Alaska. Film fans have come to know and admire Hart's characterizations of the men of the west, and now they will have a chance to see him in a somewhat different role. The Shark is a vividly etched character in the story by C. Gardner Sullivan, and Hart, with his understanding of human nature and his acting skill, builds it up to an even greater extent.

As Hart portrays the softening and humanizing of a strong, cruel man, so George McDaniel plays the part of a weak lad addicted to drink, who finds himself in the north country and becomes a real man. The girl who is the cause of the change in both men, Marjorie Hilton, is played by Katherine MacDonald. Bertholde Sprotte plays "Onion" McNab, an old Scotch first mate, and Joe Singleton is "Big" Baxter, characterized by the author as "a buzzard of the north."

In addition to playing the leading role, Hart also directs the picture. Some extraordinary camera work is done by Joe August in photographing a storm at sea, where the waves run high and break over the little sealing schooner commanded by Shark Monroe.

Kerrigan Releasing Through Hodkinson.

"J. Warren Kerrigan will not go to another company, as stated in some trade papers recently." This is the emphatic statement issued by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. It was further stated that Mr. Kerrigan is under contract and will continue to release his pictures through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Mr. Kerrigan's latest production "One Dollar Bid," is now available for booking and he is hard at work on a "Burglar for a Night," a production in which Kerrigan depicts the adventures of the son of a rich New Yorker, who, entangled in the plot of two crooks, completely vanquishes his enemies. The cast is headed by Lois Wilson.

Pathe Serial "Hands Up" To Be Released August 18

PATHE announces that the first episode of the new serial, "Hands Up," will be released August 18. It will comprise fifteen episodes of two reels each, save the opening chapter, which is in three reels. This chapter arrived in New York a few days ago and Vice-president Paul Brunet expressed the warmest satisfaction with this episode, which was made by Astra in the California studios.

The serial's star, Ruth Roland, has in her support George Chesebro as leading man and a large company of screen favorites.

James W. Horne is the director. Gilson Willets is the author. The Inca tribe of Indians, long ago supposed to be extinct, figures in "Hands Up," and the remarkable sets employed in the first episode are indicative of the elaborate plans that have been made for this serial. There is a mystery character called the Phantom Rider. This character assumes no grotesque makeup, but his appearance on the screen is so arranged that his identity remains a secret until the final episode.

Emmy Wehlen to Star in Metro's "His Bonded Wife"

HIS BONDED WIFE," a five-act screen romance by Lois and Arthur Zellner, has been chosen by Maxwell Karger, Metro's manager of productions, as the next starring vehicle for Emmy Wehlen. Miss Wehlen recently completed "The House of Gold," by Katharine Kavanaugh. Charles J. Brabin will direct the production, assisted by Alfred Raboch. June Mathis has made the screen version, and work on the picture will be begun shortly. Mr. Brabin is now choosing prominent players to support the star in this clever and attractive feature.

Miss Wehlen will play the part of a fashionable girl upon whom society has palled. She decides to go away somewhere and just be herself. Accordingly, she sets out for a beach resort where persons not overburdened with wealth are accustomed to find amusement and relaxation. She finds both, and also a young man who means a great deal to her future. There are events of an unusual nature in this story which provides a genuinely unique "twist," and an opportunity for scenes of a nature seldom seen in a screen drama. Miss Wehlen also will have a chance to introduce some Paris modes that have not as yet been seen on this side of the Atlantic.

Miss Wehlen recently has done much patriotic work. She has been using her voice for the happiness and comfort of wounded soldiers and sailors, and she also sang at the Astor theater for the United States Tank Corps benefit.

Canada Likes "Zeppelin L-21."

General Film's two-reel war feature "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" has established itself as one of the most popular war pictures of the day in Canada, according to reports received from the Canadian General Film exchanges. The film, which was featured for a week at the Imperial theater in Montreal to tremendous crowds, has created a big sensation in that Canadian city and is one of the most widely booked war features now on the Canadian market. Canadian government officials who have viewed "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21," are said to be greatly pleased with it and it is expected that wide use of the film will be made throughout Canada because of the faithfulness with which it portrays the Zeppelin raids over London.

Cheap Pictures May Be Good Says Standard's Manager

RECENTLY interviewed regarding the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation and its policy, General Sales Manager William Stoermer said: "This company is not a new one. It is five years old, and it has paid dividends on the business policy about which we want to talk to you now. The sobering effects of war have brought the over-exploited motion picture industry down to earth.

"Motion pictures have continuously made, booked, and exhibited for a long time, and is thus not a new game. It is a branch of photography, which is eighty years old.

"Stars may come and stars may go, but the picture goes on forever. To make money it is not vital for exhibitors to run high-priced stars. They can make money on comparatively cheap pictures that are well acted and photographed, that are based on good stories, and that will please patrons because of these qualities.

"High priced stars are of recent introduction into the motion picture—as recent as 1909. Before that a great deal of money was made by exhibitors out of just such a type of picture as that which the American Standard is now offering—one and two-reel comedies and dramas and an occasional feature. With these one may make up either a short length program or a feature program at will. Short subjects, i. e., one and two reels, are coming back to favor.

"There has been overproduction of pictures, with the consequent result that the bigger and more expensive features have not sold. War has taught the lesson that to make a picture which shall please and interest the public it is not essential to make it a long picture or an expensive picture.

"It is our business to please and entertain the public that pays for admission to theaters. The short length subjects that the American Standard is offering are chosen because they are inexpensive, good, and popular. The American Standard features are good and interesting. For instance, there is 'The Wolf Girl,' a two-reel drama of the wildwoods, with Beatrice Allen. This is only a two-reeler, but it is full of thrills, excitement, and human interest. "The Blackmailers' comes in the same class. So do the Tom Bret comedies. These are all new, good, and inexpensive.

"These pictures fit in with the American Standard s policy of good pictures at low prices so that the exhibitor can make money and please the public."

Tom Mix Acts Secret Service Role.

Tom Mix, the William Fox star, has begun work at Hollywood on a Western production, the temporary title for which is "The Man Afraid." The scenario was written by Lynn Reynolds, and the production is being filmed under Mr. Reynolds' direction.

In the cast, besides Mr. Mix, are Kathleen Connors, Dick LaReno, Charles Le Moyne, Jack W. Dill, Val Paul and Maude Emory.

"The Man Afraid" aims to reveal the methods of German propagandists, acting through disloyal labor agitators, in hampering war work of the United States. In the picture Tom Mix plays the part of a Secret Service man.

Lytell Working on "Boston Blackie."

Entering on its second week of production at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, Bert Lytell's newest starring vehicle, "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," is making excellent progress. The star is immensely pleased with the role of "Boston Blackie," the fascinating gentleman burglar made famous in the magazine stories by Jack Boyle.

Frank Keenan in "More Trouble' Heads Pathe July 14

ON PATHE'S program to be released the week starting Sunday, July 14, the big feature is "More Trouble," in which Frank Keenan is starred. The picture was produced by the Anderson-Brunton Company and is in five parts. While ordinarily falling into the comedy-drama classification, "More Trouble" has been more aptly termed a tragic farce. This is the remarkably clever screen play which when it had its premiere at the Rivoli theater in New York was hailed by the daily newspaper critics and trade paper reviews as one of the best bets.

Episode 19 of "The House of Hate," with Pearl White and Antonio Moreno, is listed on this program. The title is "The Hooded Terror Unmasked," and, as is indicated, it is an episode filled with thrilling situations where the identity of the Hooded Terror is revealed by the clever manner in which this arch villain is trapped by Pearl. It is the next to the last chapter.

In "Fire the Cook," a Toto comedy, there are some swift-moving situations in which the former Hippodrome comedy star appears to his best advantage. There are beautiful girls to add attractiveness to this one-reeler.

Part 10 of "Britain's Bulwarks" is called "With the Policemen of the Allies on the North Sea." Here is shown King George's visit to the British Grand Fleet, the main stay against an enemy invasion. There are some fine closeups of the monarch and his official party.

The third unit of the Official War Review is released on this program. This is the government film released by authority of the Committee on Public Information.

"Our Volcanic Neighbors" is the title of the picture of the Post Travel Series, and is specially timely and interesting just now by reason of the disastrous earthquakes that have rocked the West Indies this summer.

Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 58 and 59 complete the bill.

Pickford's "Sandy" Released July 1.

Jack Pickford, the young start of Paramount pictures who is now a member of Uncle Sam's navy, makes his last screen appearance until after the war, in "Sandy," the Paramount release for July 1. The story of "Sandy" is from the pen of Alice Hegan Rice. It is a tale of Kentucky, with its Blue Grass belles, thoroughbred horses and gentlemen of the old school of Southern chivalry. It is full of heart interest, which centers about a young Scotch lad, a stowaway, who is dragged from his place of concealment aboard a liner and is befriended by a Kentucky girl whose kindly sympathy and solicitude awaken an abiding love for her in his heart. Louise Huff is again seen in the leading feminine role, and the other principals of the cast are James Neill, Edythe Chapman, C. H. Geldart, Julia Faye, Louise Hutchinson and Raymond Hatton. George Melford directed the production.

Rhea Mitchell to Play Opposite Bert Lytell

RHEA MITCHELL, who plays opposite Bert Lytell, the Metro star in "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," was ingenue in the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco four years ago, when Lytell was leading man of that organization.

"It does seem like old times," remarked Miss Mitchell, when she had put on her make-up ready for her first day's work at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood. "This is the first opportunity I have had to play opposite Mr. Lytell as a leading woman, so you see motion pictures have given me a chance denied in the spoken drama."

Since playing in stock both Lytell and Miss Mitchell have risen rapidly in their chosen profession. Lytell won a place as a featured player on Broadway, his last appearance prior to becoming a Metro star having been in the successful comedy, "Mary's Ankle." Miss Mitchell has been a star in a number of big motion picture productions.

In "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," A. S. Le Vino's screen adaptation of Jack Boyle's short story, Miss Mitchell is cast as Mary, business partner of "Boston Blackie," gentleman and master thief.

Metro Will Issue Five All Stars and a Special in July

METRO will issue five All-Star Series pictures and a special Screen Classics, Inc. production during the month of July. The seven-act de luxe patriotic feature is "To Hell with the Kaiser," which has been directed by George Irving from the scenario by June Mathis, with Lawrence Grant as the hated monarch and Olive Tell as the American girl, Alice Monroe. They are supported by John Sunderland, himself an aviator, as the American birdman; Winslow Dodge, and other distinguished players. The five regular July releases will be in the order named—"Opportunity," starring Viola Dana; Bert Lytell, in "No Man's Land"; May Allison, in "A Successful Adventure," and an Edith Storey feature, either "The Demon" or "As the Sun Went Down," and "A Pair of Cupids," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

The July 1 release, "Opportunity," with Viola Dana in the stellar role of Mary Willard, is an adaptation by John H. Collins of Edgar Franklyn's story in the All-Story Weekly, directed by Mr. Collins. Miss Dana appears as a "tomboy girl" who is determined to see a prize-fight. She sees it, too, though she has to wear some of her brother's clothes in order to attend the contest. In so doing, she stumbles into "a peck of trouble." The star is supported by Hale Hamilton as leading man, Sally Crute, Edward Abeles, Frank Currier, Elsie MacLeod, Joseph Burke and Frank Lyon.

July 8 has been chosen as the release date of "No Man's Land," with Bert Lytell as star. "No Man's Land" will be Mr. Lytell's second appearance in Metro's All-Star Series productions. It is brimful of excitement and adventure. It has been adapted by Mr. Lytell and A. S. Le Vino from the novel by Louis Joseph Vance, and has been directed by William S. Davis. Anna Q. Nilsson is the star's leading woman in "No Man's Land," and prominent in his support are Eugene Pallette, Charles Arling, Mollie McConnell and Edward Alexander.

"A Successful Adventure," starring May Allison, will be Metro's third release of the month. June Mathis wrote "A Successful Adventure," and it has been directed by Harry L. Franklin, assisted by P. Thad. Volkman. This five-act feature presents Miss Allison in the role of a daughter of the South who undertakes to heal a feud of long standing between her father and her uncle. Harry Hilliard is Miss Allison's leading man.

The release of July 22 will be an Edith Storey feature, but whether "The Demon" or "As the Sun Went Down" has not as yet been decided.

The final July release will be "A Pair of Cupids," co-starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. It is from the pen of Luther A. Reed, and was produced under the working title of "Both Members." Charles J. Brabin has directed it.

Ella Hall to Support Stone in Screen Debut

ELLA HALL, known to the film public most favorably for her past work, has been engaged to support Fred Stone in his first Artcraft picture, "Under the Top."

Ella Hall was born in New York and educated there. She made her first appearance on the stage with "A Grand Army Man" and then went to the films appearing with Biograph, Reliance and Universal. Among her best pictures were "Jewel," "The Bugler of Algiers," "Little Miss Fix-It," "Green Magic," "We are French," "The Spotted Lily," etc.

Miss Hall is an ingenue type, gifted with much talent, pretty, accomplished, and well suited to the role intrusted to her.

George Melford to Direct Lila Lee for Paramount

GEORGE MELFORD, one of the most experienced and successful of the Famous Players-Lasky directors, has been assigned to direct Lila Lee, the new Famous Players-Lasky star, in her first Paramount picture, "The Cruise of the Make-Believe," from the story by Tom Gallon. One of his early successes was "The Cheat." So perfectly did he bring out the subtle artistry of the Japanese star that when Mr. Lasky was casting about for a permanent director for Hayakawa the memory of the work of Mr. Melford in that production was one of the controlling factors in his selection. On all the recent Hayakawa pictures, notably in "The City of Dim Faces," scheduled for release in July, the individuality of Mr. Melford has been clearly stamped. It is not surprising, therefore, that he should be paid the compliment of being assigned the delicate task of guiding Miss Lee in her first work before the camera.

"Cuddles," as Miss Lee is known to vaudeville patrons, is now comfortably settled with her guardian, Mrs. Gus Edwards, in a cozy bungalow in Hollywood. She has started her first picture.

Nobility of Womankind Is Theme of Miss Glaum's Play

THE policy of Paralta Plays, Inc., in connection with Louise Glaum's productions as one of their stars, has been to give her strong emotional roles which are not, however, like the parts in which she found fame as a vampire; for her new features were to give her sympathy, and permit her powers of emotional acting full sway. This has been carried out in the first and second plays which the star filmed under the Paralta banner.

She had just finished the filming of a third Paralta Play, "Wedlock," in which the foregoing idea has been carried out to an even greater extent. In this production Miss Glaum has a role which will ensure her great emotional and sympathetic opportunities. In it she is to be not a vampire at all, but a very noble woman; a woman meant by the author, Dennison Clift, to typify the nobility of womankind. Above all there is sympathy, and a strength begot of sympathy.

She appears as a strong woman of strong, clean character and ideals, in a relatively low walk of life. It is her fortune—or misfortune—to fall in love with and be loved by a young man of proud old family and wealth whose strength of character, whatever he may have really possessed, is held latent by the weakening influence of his false and pampered environment. They are married, unknown to the man's parents, who announce his engagement to another girl of social position.

New York Showing For Douglas Color Pictures

THE new Douglas Color picture, "Cupid Angling," was featured in the bill at the Imperial theater of San Francisco the week of June 16. This latest production of Leon Douglas, who also was prominent in the development of the Victor Phonograph, will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Ruth Roland is the featured star.

"Cupid Angling" consists of several thousand feet of film laden with all the natural colors of California's scenic marvels and with the healthy romance of an old-fashioned love story, which in its settings serves well as a vehicle to convey the power of the Douglas color motion picture invention to reproduce in its exact and natural color anything which may come within the range of the camera. The scenic glories of Mount Tamalpais, Lake Lagunitas, the Yosemite, the Yellowstone, and the poppy strewn fields of Marin immortalize their color and their moods in the Douglas color film.

The showing of "Cupid Angling" at the Imperial is the start of the long circuit of booking that will be handled through the General Film exchanges for the Hodkinson Corporation. Mr. Hodkinson will also shortly arrange a New York showing of the latest color picture in New York, which will probably be open to the trade and the public, at an early date.

Wilfred Lytell Doubles for Screen.

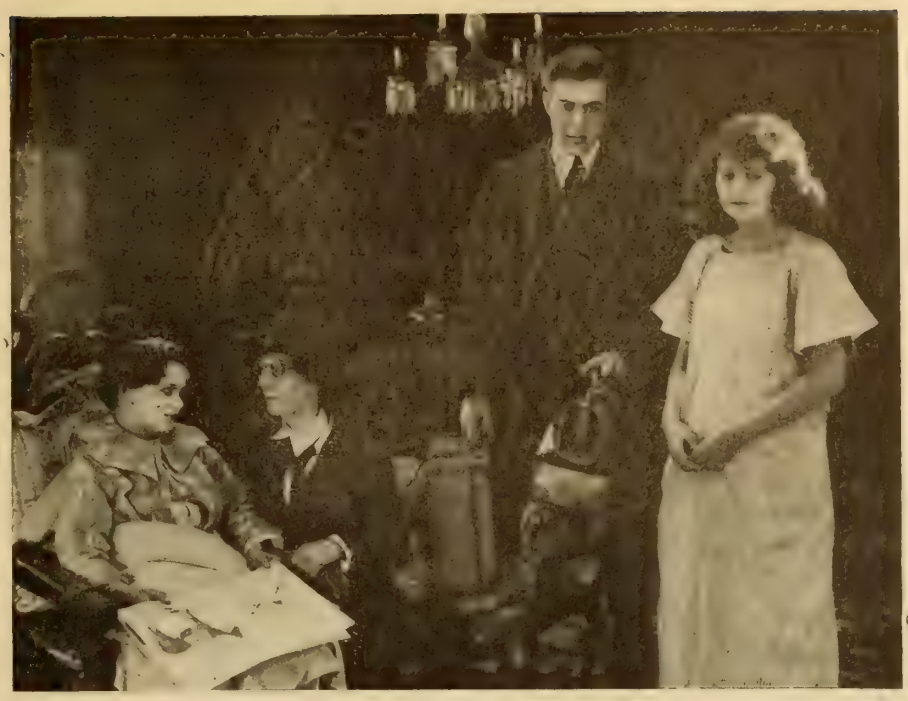
Wilfred Lytell, as well as his brother, Bert, is now enrolled under the Metro banner. Wilfred Lytell is the younger brother of the Metro star. Young Wilfred calmly announces that he has been on the stage ten or eleven years, but, judging by his appearance, he must have made his debut, not to mention several later engagements, as an infant. It is an interesting fact that while a member of Miss Barrymore's company at Metro's Sixty-first Street studio, Mr. Lytell is also playing an important role with "Business Before Pleasure" at the Eltinge theater. In fact, special arrangements were made for him by Ralph Ince, the director of Miss Barrymore's company in "Our Mrs. McChesney," to enable him to fill both engagements.

"Pirate's Gold" Is Story of a Sea Roving Race

A REAL thrilling and blood warming tale, entitled "Pirate's Gold," has been purchased by World Pictures from the famous author, Forest Halsey, for Montagu Love. In the course of a hunting trip in one of the South Atlantic states last winter, Mr. Halsey came in contact with a peculiar race of people who live in the swamps. These people, as the author expresses it, "have a lurking suggestion of Spanish forbears," and their English was also spoken with a foreign accent. He had as his guide one of the natives, and one night around the camp fire questioned him concerning this queer tribe and drew from him the matter from which the story was written.

The guide explained that his ancestors were sea rovers, beach combers, pirates and slave traders that many years ago settled on this part of the coast. In the early part of the last century these outcasts fled further inland to escape a white man's "necktie party." The guide went on to say that during all these years they have never mingled with the other inhabitants of the coast, but lived alone and secluded. They maintain their self-imposed isolation by intermarriage. Their existence is made possible by hunting and fishing. The women in the spring earn a little money by berry-picking. They have a language of their own, and their customs are those of other years.

They are a picturesque lot and so impressed Mr. Halsey that he wrote the story from the weird tales he was told. The scenario is a thriller and is modern in treatment. Oscar Apfel, who is to direct the picture, left New York early last week for the South to locate the scenes and engage natives themselves, who will lend a unique background to a picture that promises originality.



General Official Talks on Value of Two-Reelers

BROADWAY, the home of de luxe pictures, was treated to a distinct innovation in picture showmanship during the week of June 23, when S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rivoli theater, departed from customary channels to present a novelty program consisting of short subjects, of which General Film O. Henry story, "Sisters of the Golden Circle" was the featured photoplay. And if the enthusiasm and interest shown by the large crowds in attendance each day can be taken as a criterion, Broadway liked the experiment well enough to make it a highly paying innovation.

"The splendid reception given the two-reel O. Henry story at the Rivoli is sufficient evidence of the merit of the good two-reeler as a program maker," said a General Film official in discussing the unique program. "Until Mr. Rothapfel gave this plan a trial Broadway would have laughed at the idea of giving a two-reel subject the place of prominence on a first run program. Wiseacres have contended for many months that the day of the short length feature is returning and that before long two-reel photoplays will again enjoy the prominent position they held in the days before the five, six and seven reel features came into vogue. If the success of the Rivoli program is any criterion, that day is not far distant."

"Britain's Bulwarks" Ends in July.

The final chapter of the official series, "Britain's Bulwarks," will be released by Pathe late in July, and as is fitting, this chapter is by all odds the most important and interesting one. It is titled "The Canadians at Vimy Ridge," and shows in detail what this valiant army from the Canadian provinces achieved to check the onward rush of the Germans in their desperate drive to seize Paris.

Sherry Service Makes Its Debut with Keeney Picture

WITH the presentation of its first picture, "A Romance of the Underworld," which was released Sunday (June 30) the William L. Sherry Service makes its debut before the public as a distributing agency. The picture is a product of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation and stars Catherine Calvert, "The Lady Beautiful of the Screen." Especial interest attaches to this photoplay by reason of the fact that Miss Calvert was featured in the drama of the same name, written by the late Paul Armstrong. She was the wife of the playwright. The picture was directed by James Kirkwood.

Mr. Sherry's next release will be "The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, starring Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company. The story originally appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and afterward was published in book form, more than 250,000 copies already having been sold. The photoplay is described as a most artistic production. It tells a romantic and delightful story, full of heart interest and replete with thrills. Among the picturesque features is a skiing contest on the famous St. Moritz.

During the last week Mr. Sherry ha extended his distributing service to At lanta and Seattle. In the former cit he has opened an exchange at 61 Walto street, with A. S. Dickinson as manage and in the latter has established office at 2022 Third avenue, L. A. Todd being i charge. Mr. Dickinson was formerly wit Metro, as manager of its special featur department at Atlanta, and has acquire much popularity with exhibitors in tha section.

Daniel J. Savage, general sales man ager for the William L. Sherry Servic has just returned from a trip through th south and far west. He reports that th outlook is bright for special production

"The exhibitors I saw were highly de lighted to know that Mr. Sherry has gon into business for himself," says Mr. Sav age, "and look forward with keen interes to his future releases. They say the are willing to pay for good pictures an pay what they are worth. From wha I have gleaned on my extended trip pros pects are distinctly brightening for th film business in general."

July 21 Marks Close of Pathe's "House of Hate"

PATHE announces the release of the concluding episode, No. 20 of "The House of Hate," on the regular program for the week of July 21. This episode is called "Following Old Glory," and provides a remarkably satisfactory finale of this most successful of all Pathe serials. The romance in which the two characters played by Pearl White and Antonio Moreno have been concerned arrives at a happy conclusion. Stern justice overtakes the Hooded Terror and his confederates, and there is a battlefield scene staged in which Pearl White and Antonio Moreno have a wonderful opportunity to inject a strong patriotic flavor in this concluding episode, an opportunity of which they take the fullest advantage.

Pathe executives stated that "The House of Hate" has not only been the most satisfying serial ever released by that house from a technical standpoint, but it has been the greatest money-maker.

Hayakawa's Last Paramount Is Story of San Francisc

SESSUE HAYAKAWA'S last Paramoun picture is 'The City of Dim Faces, by Frances Marion. And from a accounts it is going to be his best. Mis Marion, out of the fullness of an intimat knowledge of the Chinatown of San Fran cisco, fully conversant with the alle peoples of whom it was written—has suc ceeded, it is said, in constructing a tal of photographic accuracy dealing wit the strange customs and the strange happenings in that city of dim face which has long been accounted one of th wonders of the western world.

Underground there are devious way and rabbit warrens, tortuous passage and queer secluded shrines—Joss house It is a corner of Cathay transplanted t California—and therein is told the stor in which Hayakawa stars as a half-cast Chinese.

In the cast are Doris Pawn, Mari Sais, James Cruze, Winter Hall, an others. George Melford directed, and i is asserted that the queer scenes and th people have been wonderfully presente

"The Deciding Kiss" Begins Universal's July 22 List

EDITH ROBERTS, Universal's ingenue, makes her bid for stellar honors in the five-reel Bluebird production entitled "The Deciding Kiss," which heads the list of Universal releases for the week of July 22. A romance of the kind which has been eclipsed of late by war thrillers—a story full of sweet sentiment and heart appeal—is "The Deciding Kiss." It concerns the love affair in which an orphan and the woman who has adopted her are rivals. The supporting cast are Winifred Greenwood, Hal Cooley and Edwin Cobb.

A thrilling two-reel drama, in which Helen Gibson, of railroad serial fame, returns to this type of story, is the short drama which Universal offers on the program for the week. It is "The Pay Roll Express," and the action affords Miss Gibson an opportunity to perform some of the extra-hazardous stunts which have made her famous. The story of "The Pay Roll Express" turns upon the thefts which have occurred on one of the road's crack trains.

The comedy element is well represented in "Repeating the Honeymoon," a Nestor in which Eileen Sedgewick is featured; "The Vamp Cure," a Lyons-Moran Star comedy, and "A Clean Sweep," an L-KO offering.

In "The Vamp Cure" Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are again seen in the type of story which is peculiarly their own. The role of a young man who masquerades as a girl is a favorite one with Moran and he makes the most of it in this comedy.

Issue No. 34 of the Universal Animated Weekly, Issue No. 81 of the Universal Screen Magazine, and Issue No. 63 of the Universal Currents Events, make up the rest of the program.

"Smiling Bill" Comes East To Make Goldwyn Comedies

SMILING BILL PARSONS, star of Capitol comedies, and Billie Rhodes, who has completed her contract with another producer and become the comedian's leading woman for his future pictures, arrived in New York June 28. Before returning to his own studios in Hollywood, Cal., the comedian will produce two or three comedies in the east, possibly at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee.

Parsons has completed twelve comedies for Goldwyn release at his California studio. "Dad's Knockout," the sixth one, is on this week's bill at the Strand theater, New York City.

Billie Rhodes appeared in Parsons' support in his first two comedies, "Bill's Baby" and "Bill's Predicament," since which she has been fulfilling the terms of a starring contract with another producer.

Parsons and Miss Rhodes made frequent stops in their trip across the continent to appear in person at motion picture theaters where "Bill's Baby" and "Bill's Predicament" have been shown. Everywhere they met with a gratifying reception.

In New York "Smiling Bill" is shortly to project his beaming presence upon the gaze of audiences in about thirty Loew theaters. The Loew offices have contracted with Goldwyn for 110 days booking in their New York City and nearby houses.

Four of the Parsons comedies already have been released, but the Loew houses will start with the first, "Bill's Baby," and follow it with "Bill's Predicament," "Birds of a Feather" and "Matching Billy," thereafter keeping pace with the releases as they come along every two weeks.

"Coming of Faro Nell" Is Released by General

THE Coming of Faro Nell," a breezy Wolfville Tale with a delightful heart interest touch, is released this week by General Film. This is the sixth of the series, and as in the preceding releases Patricia Palmer, Robert Burns and George Holt are the featured players. An outstanding feature of the film version of the Alfred Henry Lewis story is the droll western humor which has been retained by direct quotation from the original story.

The introduction of Faro Nell to Wolfville presents Patricia Palmer in the most sympathetic role of the series. There is an air of mystery which will keep the fans in suspense until the last few flashes, when the mystery of the frequent stage robberies is solved and Cherokee's strange actions are accounted for. When he is revealed as the protector of the dead bandit's daughter Nell, Wolfville breathes a sigh of relief and joyfully welcomes her. She takes the post of "lookout" at Cherokee's faro games and from there on assumes a place of responsibility in this civic life of the community.

Following the Wolfville Tale, General Film will release "Mammon and the Archer," another of the series of O. Henry stories in which Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres are starred. As in the case of "Sisters of the Golden Circle" and "The Girl and the Graft," two recent O. Henry successes, much of the action of the story was filmed on Fifth avenue. The screen version of the O. Henry story is said by General Film to present the popular costars in the most appealing role in which they have yet appeared.

Writing the Right Letter.

Realizing the sales creating possibilities of a well written letter the Triangle Distributing Corporation established a letter writing competition among its exchange men with an effort to promote and stimulate the writing of sales letters with a punch that would reflect the honesty, courtesy, and service policies of their organization.

As a result, E. R. Carr, sales manager of the Triangle exchange at Washington, D. C., is the happy possessor of a beautiful gold watch which was awarded to him as the first prize.

The second prize, a gold watch fob with a Triangular pendant, was awarded to W. J. Pratt, manager of the Boston exchange.

The competition was marked throughout by a spirit of friendly rivalry, and has resulted in the creation of many excellent letter

Farnum at Work on Second Grey Story.

William Farnum, the Fox star, has begun work on "The Rainbow Trail," according to a telegram just received at the Fox Film Corporation offices from Hollywood, Cal. "The Rainbow Trail" is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage" which has just been completed by Mr. Farnum. Both stories were written by Zane Grey.

"The Rainbow Trail" is being filmed under the direction of Frank Lloyd. Some of the scenes in it will necessitate the entire company traveling again to the wilds of Arizona, where, it is expected, they will remain several weeks.

Stone Founds a Film Library.

A Film Library, consisting of an intelligent collection of "stock scenes," such as explosions, wrecks, arriving and departing ships, marching columns, animals, sunsets, foreign city, street or native scenes, rough water, clouds, fires and personages, from which a director can strengthen or rebuild a weak scenario or adequately present a brilliant one, has been established by Abram Stone at 145 West 45th street.

Cameramen will recognize the possibilities of this new outlet and market place for "good shots," made when on "locations" for other purposes or "specials" that for any reasons have died on their hands.

Selection of Title by Public Proves Popular

AN OFFICIAL of Western Photoplays, Inc., states that it is the intention of this company to make their forthcoming serial a high-class, beautiful and well-mounted classic, and one that the best theaters will be eager to obtain. He calls attention in this connection that some of the best stories and well known books have been issued in serial form. It is said that the interest of the story will not depend on impossible stunts, but that Director Golden is insistent upon strong dramatic situations, lavish sets, skilful acting, novel camera effects, as well as sustained thrilling interest.

The idea of submitting the question of selecting a title for this serial to exhibitors and the public is said to have struck immediate popular favor, and Leah Baird the star, who is sending out the letters, has received replies from seventeen exchanges, seventy-two exhibitors and over two hundred motion picture fans. So far Miss Baird's choice of a title has received an overwhelming majority of the votes.

"One Dollar Bid" Story of Kentucky Life

J. WARREN KERRIGAN, Paralta star, completed his third production under that banner on June 3, the anniversary of his first day of work on a Paralta production. This production is the screen version of the novel "Toby" by Credo Harris.

"Toby" is a novel of Kentucky, a faithful painting of the life of his native state by the Kentucky author. The descriptive parts of the book are brought out in the screen version by means of clever character touches, while a thrilling series of plot incidents serve to raise the interest continually toward the denouement and solution of the main theme of the play—the mystery surrounding the hero's life. Miss Lois Wilson makes a charming heroine in support of Mr. Kerrigan and a fine cast has been assembled in the picture. Ernest C. Warde, directed Mr. Kerrigan in this production.

Franklyn Farnum "Gets His Gate."

Franklyn Farnum simply has to have an outlet for his abounding energy. The former Bluebird star who is now under the Metro banner as leading man with Anna Q. Nilsson in George D. Baker's screen drama, "Judgment," under production in Hollywood, puts bundles of "pep" into his work from the beginning of the picture.

In one of the first scenes the hero of the story played by Farnum has to run his automobile through a fence thrown across a road by a highwayman. Director Will S. Davis explained the scene, and Farnum took his place at the wheel of his machine.

"Now, don't risk serious injury," cautioned Davis. "We can stop the camera when you reach the gate, and then pick you up after we have smashed it and you have gone through."

Farnum just grinned, threw in the clutch, and dashed straight for the gate, while the cameraman ground away. Actor and auto went flying through the wooden barrier, splintering it, and Farnum wasn't even shaken up.

Two More Lloyd Gloom Kickers.

Following his success in "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany" Harold Lloyd will appear in two more screen farces before September. The titles announced are "That's Him," to be released August 4, and "Bride and Gloom," released August 18.

Educational Issues Split of Fun and Natural History

A HEATHEN Benefit" matches "Birds of Vanity" in the split-reeler of fun and natural history issued by the Educational Films Corporation to its regular houses Fourth of July week.

"A Heathen Benefit" is said by all who have seen it to be one of the best International cartoon comedies. The town folk learn that the minister is organizing a benefit for the heathen in foreign lands, for which Captain Katzenjammer has promised to perform some tricks in magic helped by the Kids. The next scene shows all hands inside the Town Hall, where the Minister has brewed a very delectable "temperance" punch in which the Kids, however, have poured a large quantity of bay rum. Mamma takes a hooker of the "temperance" drink and is so much fascinated thereby that she grabs the whole punch bowl and leaves the room to begin on the contents in good earnest. In the meantime, the Captain starts his tricks, and the situation works up to a funny climax.

In "Birds of Vanity" Professor Ditmars sets forth that in the animal world the males are the dressed-up, vain and pompous things, while the females are dully clad. Some interesting footage of Asiatic pheasants, beautifully appareled, and also of the male peacock showing off his clothes, not only to his mate, but to all and sundry that will look at him, are exhibited. The rare white peacock is also shown. Not only is the male bird the glass of fashion and the mold of form, but he gives a remarkable series of solo dances, by means of which he ingratiates himself with the other sex.

Getting Ready for Marion Davies' Second

WORK on Marion Davies' second Select picture began on July 1. The present plan is to do the studio scenes in the Norma Talmadge studio in East 48th street. Julius Steger will have entire charge of the production and Andre Barlatier will do the camera work. Mr. Steger has been busily at work on the script for the past three weeks.

Mr. Steger promises a surprise in this picture. The story, which as yet has been given no title, is an adaptation from a well-known work and contains a big thrill. It is up to the minute and has a decidedly patriotic flavor. Mr. Steger is at present engaged in selecting a company.

Miss Marion Writing Fairbanks Script.

The announcement that Frances Marion has been engaged to prepare the screen adaptation of "He Comes Up Smiling" shows that Douglas Fairbanks will go to extremes for hundred per cent. working material. Miss Marion is already on her way to Honolulu where she will start immeditely on the scenario of the famous Fairbanks speaking-stage success. It was Fairbanks' idea that she spend two weeks in the land of ukeleles.

Allan Dwan, who has three Fairbanks pictures to his credit, will be in charge of production, and seems to feel that "He Comes Up Smiling" will make a very popular screen play.

Fox Buys Two Seltzer Stories.

Two more famous stories have been added to the list which William Fox has compiled of the books he is picturizing or has picturized. The latest books to be purchased by Mr. Fox, according to an announcement from the Fox Film Corporation offices, are "The Two Gun Man" and "The Coming of the Law," both by Charles Alden Seltzer. Mr. Seltzer also wrote the story "Slow Burgess" from which the William Fox production, "Fame and Fortune" has just been completed.

As in "Fame and Fortune," Tom Mix, the picturesque cowboy actor, will be the star in "The Two-Gun Man" and "The Coming of the Law." Both are swift Western stories. Both in the magazines and in book form they have had many readers and have done probably more than anything else to bring Charles Alden Seltzer's name to the forefront.

Both of these productions will start work soon at the William Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal.

Marie Walcamp, Universal Star, and Three Tiger Kittens.

Exteriors of the latest Frank A. Keeney production, "The Girl with a Past," have been taken during the last week at Englewood, N. J. The Keeney forces resumed production earlier than expected, on account of the large demand for Mr. Keeney's first release, "A Romance of the Underworld," the Paul Armstrong picture in which Catherine Calvert is starred.

All of the interiors of "The Girl with a Past" are being taken in the Biograph Studios in the Bronx. Miss Calvert, who is starred in all the Keeney pictures, is supported by a strong cast. The production is being made under the direction of James Kirkwood.

Ebony Completes Two New Subjects.

It is announced, through the office of Luther J. Pollard, president and general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation, of Chicago, that two new subjects, comedies that come up to their new standard of novelty, are ready for the cutting room. The first laughmaker, titled "Luck in Old Clothes," is by E. K. Means. This rapid-fire comedy was directed by Ralph G. Phillips, and it features Billy Ledman, Mattie Edwards and Rudolph Tatum.

The second subject is titled "Monday Morning's Madness." This was prepared for the screen by Bob Horner, scenario editor, from a story by William H. Rice, Sam Robinson, Yvonne Junior and Samuel Jacks are featured.

Features and Topicals for Soldiers.

B. L. Steele, professor of physics, Washington State College, Pullman, Washington, visited the Universal exchange in Portland recently to arrange for features to use for the entertainment of the soldiers who will be sent to Pullman for special instruction in the near future. The course at Pullman began June 15, and about 1,500 soldiers were enrolled for special instruction during the summer. Professor Steele paid especial attention to war features in the Current Events, Animated Weekly, etc., and to special features, such as "The Man Without a Country," "The Kaiser" and similar productions.

Fox Purchases Two More of Zane Grey's Stories

IN line with his policy to buy only the most famous books of the best authors, William Fox has just purchased the motion picture rights to two more of Zane Grey's books. The latest novels of this famous author, two of whose work have already been filmed by the William Fox forces, are "Last of the Duanes" and "The Lone Star Ranger."

Purchase of these two famous novels followed the tremendous success which William Farnum achieved in filming "Riders of the Purple Sage," the thrilling and epoch-making story of the rough life in the early days of Utah Territory. Under the direction of Frank Lloyd, Farnum scored such a triumph in this play that when William Fox saw the picture at a private screening in New York he ordered that Farnum should go ahead immediately on "The Rainbow Trail," the sequal to the "Riders" story. "The Rainbow Trail" is now in work in Arizona, with William Farnum as the star and Frank Lloyd as the director.

The success of "Riders of the Purple Sage" also led to negotiations for "Last of the Duanes" and "The Lone Star Ranger." These negotiations, conducted by William Fox with Colonel William N. Selig of Chicago, resulted in the completion of arrangements whereby these famous books, which have sold into the millions of copies all over the country, will be done under the William Fox banner.

William Farnum also will be the star in these new productions.

Ebony Buys Tickfall Tales.

Reports received by General Film Company indicate that exhibitors are keenly interested in the forthcoming production of "Good Luck in Old Clothes," an Ebony comedy which departs from the usual broad comedy lines to feature a company of prominent white and negro players in high-class comedy based on the E. K. Means story of the same name which appeared in one of the magazines. This is one of the best known of the fifty-six Tickfall Tales published to date, and its release in picture form will follow closely the publication of these stories in book form.

The Ebony Film Corporation has announced that it is concluding arrangements for the purchase of the motion picture rights of other well known Tickfall Tales, which will be filmed during the summer months. The high grade comedy found in these stories is expected by General Film to stimulate a greatly increased demand for these film novelties.

"The Road to France" (World).

World Pictures will finish this week at its studio at Fort Lee "The Road to France," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are starred. It was written by Harry O. Hoyt and directed by Dell Henderson. The working title of this photoplay was "Making Good," but after seeing a greater portion of the picture, World officials were so impressed with the spirit of it that they immediately changed the title to the one by which it will be known when released. It is the story of a no-good boy who makes good. It breathes the indomitable will of America that will bring victory to our banners.

Edith Storey Starts Work in East.

Director Herbert Blache, assisted by Edward Lawrence, has completed the selection of a strong cast for Metro's new Edith Storey picture, as yet unnamed, from the pen of Lois Zellner. It is being photographed at the Biograph studio, where Metro has engaged additional floor space. The story is of the Northwest woods, breezy, virile, wholesome, and replete with intense dramatic situations. Amusing comedy bits effectively balance the more serious moments of the play. Frank Mills has been chosen as leads.

Jennings Forms Co. to Film His Experiences

Will Produce Features Depicting His Own and Brother's Career as Outlaws, Together with Winning Fight to Again Become Respected Citizens.

THE Al Jennings Production Company has been formed for the purpose of producing multiple-reel features starring Mr. Jennings in the character of outlaw and train robber which he actually lived a few years ago.

The officers are Al Jennings, president and general manager; B. F. Robbins, vice-president; Frank L. Jennings, treasurer and secretary, and F. R. Shields, assistant manager. W. S. Van Dyke is the director of productions. Mr. Shields has been prominent in Los Angeles picture circles for some years, and Mr. Van Dyke, after a long experience on the stage, entered motion pictures about five years ago, playing in a number of western productions. He then became a director, assisting D. W. Griffith with "Intolerance" and James Young in Lasky productions, as well as Essanay features including "On Trial." He also directed Jack Gardner and Mary McAllister features for Essanay.

Under the title, "Beating Back," the story of Al Jenning's career appeared in a prominent magazine, and is already well known to large numbers of motion picture patrons. For several years he was the leader of a band of outlaws known as "The Long Riders," operating in Indian territory and the surrounding country. With him was his brother, Frank, who will also appear in the pictures. Both were respected citizens of Oklahoma, and are said to have joined the band of outlaws on being accused of being involved in a train robbery by the men whom they sought to punish because of the murder of their brother.

Al Jennings was finally captured and sentenced to life imprisonment, but pardoned after five years. Later his citizenship was restored, and he was enabled to regain his former position as a successful lawyer in Oklahoma.

Mr. Jennings' interesting experiences will form the basis of the motion pictures to be produced by his company, and he is giving personal attention to the details to insure realism, and is confident that by showing the outlaw, not as a hero, but as he really is, with the grimness, privation and danger, continually hunted by men, that his pictures will teach a lesson and impress audiences with the fact that the payment of crime is invariably punishment.

The first production will be "The Lady in the Dugout," founded on an incident where the outlaw brothers, finding a woman and child starving in a desert shack, robbed the bank which she said had swindled her out of her money and restored it to her. Corinne Grant, formerly with Balboa, has the leading female role.

These pictures will be made for the open market and will probably be released on state rights basis. The executive offices are located at Tucson, Arizona, with studios at that point also in Los Angeles.

Aubrey in Bret Comedies

JIMMY AUBREY, formerly connected with the Vitagraph and Pathe companies, who is featured in the Tom Bret comedies, preceded his appearance in motion pictures by work on the theatrical and vaudeville stages. Mr. Aubrey is said to have an exceedingly refined method of acting and a pleasing personality and an affable manner, also to be very versatile and easy to direct. In the intervals of acting he has had varied adventures in American logging camps and the cattle ranches of the west and has also worked in the silver mines in Nevada.

"The Hand of Vengeance" Arouses Great Interest

THE announcement that the Gaumont Company is distributing a new serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," through independent exchanges is said to have aroused great interest among buyers, and the fact that superfluous footage has been eliminated from this photo-serial has appealed to exhibitors who want a short, thrilling serial to liven up things during the warm months. Hundreds of letters, telegrams, and telephone messages have poured into the Flushing office of the Gaumont Company.

"The Hand of Vengeance" is about ready for showing. Great care has been exercised to make the slides, posters, and every aid to publicity as attractive as the best artists can design.

Betzwood Film Completes Picture for Chinese Star

CAMERA work on the Betzwood Company's production with Lady Tsen Mei, the Chinese star, has been completed and Director Ira M. Lowry has commenced taking "Sandy Burke," a western story by J. Allan Dunn, in which Louis Bennison is starred, supported by Evelyn Gayer, Alphonse Ethier, Virginia Lee, Herbert Pattee, Andrew Benhison, Naudia Gary, and others.

Mr. Bennison's most recent achievement was a successful season just closed as the star of "Johnny Get Your Gun."

Strand Books Raver's "Outwitting the Hun"

A CONTRACT has just been effected between Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand, and Harry Raver, who has recently imported from the studios of Italafilm, Turin, Italy, a three-thousand-foot novelty which will be shown at the Strand during the week of June 30.

"Outwitting the Hun" is the title and the major portion of the picture is presented by the aid of hundreds of puppets resembling officers and soldiers of the opposing armies. In the story this puppet war is the result of a child's dreams, inspired by hearing a letter read from her father in the service at the front. Every phase of modern warfare is illustrated, including aerial bombardments, destruction of towns and villages, thrilling rescues and escapes, the deadly German gas at work and various situations common to war as it is now conducted.

Pastrone, the producer of "Cabiria" and "The Warrior," spent over a year in completing "Outwitting the Hun," because of the tremendous detail involved in the building and manipulation of the settings and characters employed.

Rapf to Film "Sins of the Children."

Harry Rapf announces that he is preparing to produce another feature photoplay, "Sins of the Children," adapted from a story by Cosmo Hamilton, which was published in the Red Book Magazine. Alma Hanlon has been selected for the leading role, and the supporting cast is now being engaged. Production will begin at an early date.

Ditmars' Picture Shares Reel with Katzenjammers

A PICNIC FOR TWO" and "Life in Inland Waters" are the International cartoon comedy and the Living Book of Nature chapter conjoined in the Educational's latest split-reel. The director arranges a picnic party for the irrepressible Kids, their mamma and the Captain. Mamma packs up the picnic basket and the Captain gloats over a family excursion ticket which he has produced.

Alas! the Kids substitute living dog, cat and pig for the sausages in the three big baskets of lunch. All hands make the train after considerable trouble, as the Kids had stopped the clock. After all are aboard and the train started, the zoo in the lunch basket shows signs of life. The dog bites the ticket collector, who yells with pain. In the skirmish, the dog, cat and pig go down the aisle and start a riot. The conductor pulls the emergency cord. The baskets and accessories, as well as passengers, are dumped on the floor and the Captain emerges with several of the animals draped over his form. But the finish is a sad one for the Kids, as the Captain and the ticket collector take the mischief-makers out to the locomotive and give them a thorough spanking, using jets of steam instead of birch rods.

"Life in Inland Waters" reveals many wonders of brook, river and pond. Among the quaint subreptilian species shown are the blind salamander, a native of underground rivers; the California newt, remarkable for its faculty of reproducing any lost limb; the common or marsh frog in its evolution from pollywog to adult, and aquatic insects metamorphosing from water bugs to flyers.

Ernest Shipman Takes Over Several Features

ERNEST SHIPMAN reports considerable activity following his arrival in Los Angeles. Several important independent productions have been taken over by him for exploitation on the state rights basis. Mr. Shipman further reports that a new arrangement has been entered into between the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company, Inc., and himself and that the fourth and fifth releases of the Shorty Hamilton series have been completed.

Mr. Shipman claims these new Shorty Hamilton pictures are exceptionally good and will prove an agreeable surprise.

He is considering confining his personal activities largely to the offices he is opening in Los Angeles, that he may be in closer touch with the independent producers and visiting his New York headquarters from time to time as the occasion requires.

Current Gaumont News Reels Feature War Pictures

Subjects Include Naval, Aviation and Army Views, Soldiers and Sailors Playing Baseball in London, and Scenes from Western Front.

THE Gaumont news reels are featuring official war films. In Graphic No. 13 is shown the launching of the "Liberty," the largest member of our war marine, and the official test of a new and non-sinkable lifeboat. In this issue are also two subjects, "The Eyes of the Army," a great aviation picture showing daring flyers; "The Cavalry of the Clouds," with more than a dozen aeroplanes in thrilling formations doing death-defying stunts, and Rodman Law, daredevil parachute artist, landing safely after leaping from an aeroplane 6,000 feet above the ground, and "The Navy Is Ready," which not only pictures the businesslike and efficient men who will lead the Marines, but the types of submarine chasers, hydroplanes, balloons, and trawlers which scour the sea for enemy U-boats.

Gaumont News No. 14 shows Yankee soldiers and sailors introducing baseball to dear old London, where it is received with an enthusiasm impossible to conceive a few years ago. From France comes what are said to be the first pictures of American gunners manning the huge French "400's" on armored railway trucks; the rapidity with which American engineers are constructing military railways and suspension bridges in France, and Marshal Joffre welcoming the Americans. A thrilling military spectacle presented by 7,000 Marines in honor of the Secretary of Navy, foreign military missions, members of Congress, and many distinguished citizens makes up another very interesting subject. A sham battle, the testing of gas masks, Indian style of fighting, and a "chow" banquet are entertainingly portrayed.

Racing, bathing, food conservation, class day at Harvard, outings for our fighters, and many other news topics, including the great railroad wreck at Gary, Ind., where 85 circus performers were killed, are also shown.

"Golden Hope" Selected For Anna Case's Debut

ANNA CASE, the beautiful girl who has attained success as a concert singer and prima donna of the Metropolitan opera house, one of the few American girls who have reached this coveted goal of all singers, is to make her debut in the near future as a motion picture star under the banner of the International Film Service Co., Inc., and Julius Steger is to be her director. The name of her first picture is "The Golden Hope," and while it is said the story will hold a strong appeal on its own behalf the strictest secrecy is maintained as to the theme.

Petrova Using Song with Patriotic Slogan on Tour

IN a competition recently conducted by the Newspaper Enterprise Association which serves about 300 newspapers, a prize was offered for the best American war slogan. Out of the hundreds submitted, that originated by Marion I. Coop of San Diego, Cal., was judged the best. Her inspiring "Freedom for All Forever" is said to have so impressed Secretary of War Baker and Secretary Daniels of the Navy that they endorsed the phrase as representing succinctly the ideals of America in the great struggle and a bill has been introduced in Congress urging all patriotic Americans to use, to live up to, and to fight for this slogan. This phrase has been embodied in a patriotic song written by Lieut. B. C. Hilliam of the Royal Canadian Forces, and in every city she visits on her coast to coast War Savings Stamp Campaign, Madame Petrova, in each theater where she appears, after her little talk, sings Hilliam's song, and then has the chorus thrown on the screen and offers a five dollar war stamp to any one in the audience who will sing the chorus alone. After the prize winner has been called up on the stage to receive his or her stamp, and curiously enough, up to date, more women than men have won the war stamps, Madame Petrova invites the audience to join her in singing "Freedom for All Forever," thus getting the people in a patriotic frame of mind before she starts the bidding for stamps. To each of the first ten purchasers in each city she presents a copy of the song autographed by both the soldier and herself.

Tom Bret to Speak in Motion Picture Theaters

TOM BRET, the motion picture comedy producer whose pictures featuring Jimmy Aubrey are released to exhibitors by American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, will appear personally at leading motion picture theaters.

Tom Bret is said to be a witty speaker, and always keeps his audiences in the best of humor.

State Right Distributors Announces Readjustment

Now Offers Producers Three Channels for Handling Pictures—Under Collective, Syndicate or Individual Territorial Purchase Plans.

THE State Right Distributors, Inc., at its recent meeting in New York City, instituted a change in its policy by which the obligation of members to accept purchases of a buying committee has been eliminated. A system has been inaugurated whereby every member henceforth will have a voice in the purchase of a negative under the organization's collective plan.

In developing this idea plans have been adopted to cover instances where, at some future time, certain members, for local reasons, may be unwilling to join in a collective purchase. In such an event, any group of members will have the privilege of forming a syndicate among themselves for the purpose of taking over either the negative rights or the rights to a large portion of the territory.

A representative of the organization points out the fact that, taking into consideration the changes adopted, producers will, under the three-fold plan of collective, syndicate and individual territorial purchasing, have an outlet through the State Right Distributors, Inc., for features of merit, on any basis on which they might desire to sell.

As heretofore, the home office of the organization in the Longacre Building will continue to act as New York headquarters for all members, handling all matters of interest to them, both individually and collectively. Independent producers can at all times gain access to any members of the State Right Distributors, Inc., through the home office.

Following is a list of the organization's members: S. L. Lesser, San Francisco, holding the franchise for California, Nevada and Arizona; B. S. Cohen, Foursquare Pictures, Inc., of Denver, for Wyoming, Utah Colorado and New Mexico; H. L Dollman, Doll-Van Film Corp., Indianapolis, for Illinois and Indiana; M. R. Rosenberg, De Luxe Feature Film Co., of Seattle, for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana; L. D. Netter, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, for Ohio and Kentucky; Harry F. Grelle, Supreme Photoplay Productions, Pittsburgh, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Syndey B. Lust, Super Film Attractions, Washington, for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia; Nathan Hirsh, Pioneer Film Corporation, for New York City; J. J. Allen, Famous Players' Film Service, Toronto, for Canada, and Arthur S. Hyman, Dawn Masterplay Co., Detroit, for Michigan.

"Tempered Steel" Fourth Petrova Film for Rialto

THE initial New York presentation of Madame Petrova's fourth special production, "Tempered Steel," took place at the Rialto theater on Sunday, June 23. This is the fourth production in which the Polish star has appeared which has had the distinction of being presented first at Mr. Rothapfel's well-known temple of the photoplay.

The picture which inaugurated the personal production organization of Madame Petrova, "Daughter of Destiny," appeared at the Rialto theater during December. Following this, Mr. Rothapfel booked "The Light Within," then "The Life Mask."

Following the week's run of "Tempered Steel" at the Broadway photoplay house, the picture will be released via the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. It is the first melodramatic vehicle in which Madame Petrova has appeared, contains several "thrill" scenes and marks the inaugural work of Ralph Ince as director of Petrova productions.

Webster's Illness Delays Work on Second Production

THE Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., announces that work on the new multiple feature to follow "Reclaimed" will be delayed in consequence of the continued illness of Mr. Webster.

Within the next two weeks, however, the casting of the new play will begin, and whether Director Webster has fully recovered by that time or not the feature will be rushed to completion at the earliest possible time.

Sales of the Week

Activities in the State Right Market During the Past Seven Days.

ARROW FILM CORPORATION announces the sale of rights on "Raffles" to the Central Film Corporation, Chicago, for the state of Illinois.

California Motion Picture Enterprise have purchased from the Monopol Film Corporation, rights to "Mothers of Liberty" for Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, and will open an office in Atlanta, under management of Ernest E. Gagnon to handle this territory.

R. M. Savini has secured from Ernest Shipman rights to the Josh Binney comedies for Virginia, in addition to territory he is already handling on this series.

Ernest Shipman announces the sale of rights on the Francis Ford production "Berlin Via America" to Unity Photoplay Company, Chicago, for Illinois; and Elk Films, Inc., for northern New Jersey.

"Hearts of the World" Well Received in Indianapolis

HENRY L. DOLLMAN of the Doll-Van Film Corporation, controlling rights to D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" for Indiana and Kentucky announces that he is extremely gratified with the way in which this picture has been received by the public in his territory. At the opening performance in the English Opera House, Indianapolis, on Sunday, June 16, the picture received an ovation from an enthusiastic audience composed of representative people in that city.

PICTURE THEATER PROJECTED.

HARTFORD, ARK.—C. Hale will build an addition to Yale theater.

SILOAM SPRINGS, ARK.—Henry Brothers have disposed of Midway theater to G. W. Sherman.

ARCADIA, CAL.—C. C. Beatty has contract to erect theater for Mrs. Ruth Castle, manager of Colonial theater at Monrovia, Cal.

SANTA MONICA, CAL.—Frank E. Bundy has disposed of his Santa Monica Canyon theater.

LEADVILLE, COLO.—International Amusement Company, Denver, has plans by H. W. J. Edbrooke, 512 Tabor Opera House block, for two-story theater, 36x125 feet, to cost $30,000.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.—Frank Jacoby, 1038 Broad street, has plans by F. A. Copper, National Bank building, for one-story moving picture theater, 50 by 180 feet, to cost $20,000.

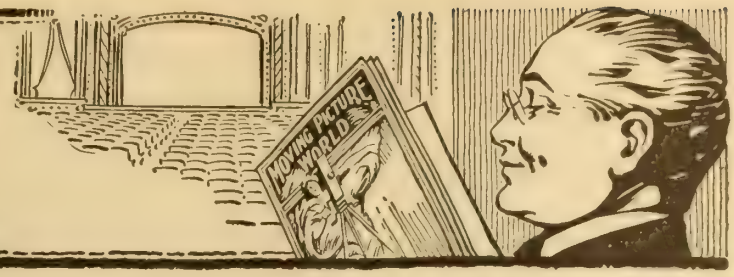
Shepard Talks of "Mickey"

IS A good picture, a big picture, sufficient in itself as a money-making proposition?" asks H. J. Shepard, of W. H. Productions Company. "In other words, it has often been questioned whether any production can secure the maximum of profits on the strength of merit alone. Often we have heard that such-and-such a production was killed because they didn't put it over properly. The service didn't 'live up' to the possibilities in the production.



"In the case of Mack Sennetts' production, 'Mickey,' the advertising campaign was laid out in detail. There has been a steady fire of advertising, publicity and exploitation. 'Mickey' has been kept before the public eye for over two years, till it has become a familiar something toward which the public is looking forward. A wonderful lobby display has been evolved, in collaboration with Mr. Nelson Evans, president of Evans Studio, Los Angeles. Another feature is the exploitation of the song 'Mickey.' To date almost one million copies have been disposed of. Arrangements have also been made whereby over fifteen hundred retail dealers and large five and ten-cent store syndicates will devote a window display to the song when requested by exhibitors who are running the photoplay. A number of prominent vaudevillians are taking up this number, and full orchestration of 'Mickey' with slides is being sent to the largest picture houses throughout the country. Even into the home 'Mickey' is coming as a piano and graphophone record.

"The campaign book on 'Mickey' embodies almost the complete service rendered with this production. There are newspaper advertisements, press stories, every aid the exhibitor needs. Every advertisement has been given the utmost thought and attention, so that the exhibitor will not waste time brushing up any of his service so that it will live up to his own knowledge of box-office assets. The Service Department of Western Import Company is bringing out the many selling points in 'Mickey' in such a way that its appeal will reach every type of person—the foreign publicity also being kept in mind—for 'Mickey' is destined to be a universal pleasure."

Film Trade Brevities from New England

Aaron A. Corn Opens Exchange for the William L. Sherry Service—Two New Theaters—Notes of Interest to Film Men.

By Robert N. Howe, 80 Summer street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—A new exchange has been opened at No. 16 Piedmont street in Boston which will distribute the William L. Sherry service through the New England territory. The exchange is under the management of Aaron A. Corn, a man well-known in the film business in New England. Meyer Grevner is the assistant manager. The new office is in the midst of the film exchanges and is doing a lively business according to the statement of Manager Corn. The company now has three pictures that they are distributing throughout New England, the leading one being, "A Romance of the Underworld," featuring Katherine Calvert, which is receiving very heavy bookings the first week of release.

New Theater Opens at Nashua.

Nashua, New Hampshire.—The Park theater of Nashua will open July first, taking the Mutual service. The theater will have a seating capacity of twelve hundred and will have only moving pictures. The Park will be managed by E. S. McQuestin, a local motion picture man.

New House Building in Fall River.

Fall River, Mass.—A new theater is being erected in this city that is rapidly nearing completion and is expected to open the first of July.

The theater is called the Empire and is controlled by A. A. Spitz of Providence, R. I. The theater will be one of the largest in the city and will be devoted to moving pictures exclusively.

Trade Jottings from New England.

The new Pathe serial, "Hands Up" will be released for distribution in New England on August 18. Manager Stanley Hand of the Boston Pathe states that he receives many letters from exhibitors pertaining to the serial, and from the interest shown he predicts that it will be the biggest one ever handled by the Pathe in New England.

Assistant manager of the Boston Pathe exchange, S. Rubenstein, has just returned from a trip through Massachusetts and New Hampshire where he had been handling the Pathe production "The Yellow Ticket." He reports excellent business in that territory.

A joint meeting of all the branch managers and salesmen of all the Famous Players-Laskey offices, including the Boston office, the New Haven office, and the Portland, Maine, office was held to discuss business for the coming year.

Manager Harry Segal of the First National Exhibitors circuit and the Globe Feature Film Corpoation, of Boston, has gone on a tour of inspection of the diffeent theaters throughout New England taking the First National and Globe Feature film service. On his trip he will talk with the managers of the theaters and discuss plans for improving the service. He is accompanied by his assistant Edward L. McEvoy.

Holyoke, Mass.—Many men in the motion picture business in this city have engaged in other occupations in accordance with the non-useful occupation law that is soon to go into effect.

Manager Phillip DuFault of the Globe theater has given over his business to his wife, who now manages the theater booking all the pictures and tending to the executive end of running the theater. Mr. DuFault has accepted a position in the Winchester rifle factory and likes his present employment. G. A. Berry, manager of the Bijou theater in Holyoke, is about to take a similar position, while many other film men in this city are doing likewise.

Malden, Mass.—The Auditorium in this city that has lately been running a stock company and musical comedy is going to show moving pictures for the summer season. The theater is controlled by William Bradstreet, a well known theater man around Boston. The first week's bill is "My Four Years in Germany" which will be shown twice daily for one week.

Philadelphia Trade Letter

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Versatility Proves Its Value.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Henry A. Sullivan, who is manager of the Belmont theater, one of the Philadelphia houses under the control of the Felt Brothers, has had a long and interesting career, his present success having been earned by sheer hard work. Mr. Sullivan belongs to the old school of this city. He started as a water boy in the Walnut street theater in 1895 and since has been engaged in every branch of the show business. He has been usher, billposter, treasurer, assistant manager, pianist, janitor, doorman, advertising man, electrician and lessee. He was also an actor, carpenter, property man, scene shifter, operator, stage director, producer, booking agent and owner and producer of vaudeville acts.

In many cases his remarkable versatility has been the means of avoiding embarrassment through the action of obstinate employes. If he has any trouble with the help he is always equal to the occasion and has a record of surmounting any difficulties in short order. Being resourceful, his bills for repairs amount to next to nothing. If it is necessary he will take a brush in his hand to do his own painting as he has done on several occasions and repair wires and string up electric lights if it takes all night. Before the Belmont theater was placed under his management it was considered some "citron fruit" but after it had gone through the "Sullivan refinery" in less than a year's time it became one of West Philadelphia's best paying enterprises.

During a six weeks' absence the Belmont took a sudden flop while under the management of a novice and only after several weeks of hard work did Mr. Sullivan bring the house back to its former high standard. The Felt Brothers' confidence in him is such that they will back him to the limit whenever the occasion arises. In conjunction with the showing of big productions he has pulled several clever and original stunts which resulted in many instances in blockading the traffic in front of his theater.

Pershing's Film Inspires Workers.

Through the interest of William J. Boyd, district sales manager, whose desire was to create and instill further patriotism into the minds of the workers with a view of greatly aiding the output of machine oils for the Government, more than 500 employees of E. F. Houghton & Company, of Phila., were taken to view "Pershing's Crusaders," the United States Government's war film now showing at the Forrest theater. Charles E. Carpenter, the president of the above company, delivered a most impressive and able address which stirred the audience to a high pitch.

Vacation Time on Film Row.

William E. Smith, president of the Famous Players exchange, distributors of the Paramount and Artcraft will give two weeks' vacation to all of his employees with pay. Vacations now being in order it is very gratifying to note that this essential blessing has been visited upon the holiday workers in film row.

Frank W. Buhler, general manager of the Stanley Company, announces that all employees will be given two weeks' vacation with pay and has already started several managers upon their pleasure tours. Notwithstanding the shortage of help the time was cheerfully allowed in order to allow his faithful workers this recreation which eventually will create a healthful growth in the business.

Buffalo Exhibitors Face Difficulties

The Small Theater Feels the Strain of Competition, While the Larger House Is Spending Large Sums on Programs.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 157 N. Elmwood street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Exhibitors Feel War Conditions.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Upward of 1,500 drafted men, nearly all patrons of moving pictures, left Buffalo for the various military camps Tuesday evening, June 25. It is believed that the number of young men who have already departed from this city to fight for Uncle Sam is close to 22,000. The exhibitors feel the loss of this heavy patronage, but like true patriots, they are making no complaints. The exhibitors are hoping that with these obvious handicaps the government will not impose on them extra heavy burdens in the way of additional taxes. They say that they can slide the tax over to the public and make their patrons "pay the fiddler" by increased admissions. They incidentally explain, however, that there is a limit even to what the public will pay, no matter how strong their hobby for moving pictures may be. In the meantime the large theaters here are spending more and more money for high-class picture shows and are doing a capacity business. Some of the little exhibitors with limited means say they are not faring so well because it is difficult to meet this competition.

From Film Men in Service.

The accompanying picture is that of Philip Gentilly, formerly picture clerk of the Mutual, Buffalo. He is in the Navy and his last address he sent his friends was the Army Y. M. C. A., Norfolk, Va.

Philip Gentilly.

Walter Bengough, former assistant manager of the Strand theater, Buffalo, and later with the Pathe here, writes his friends in this city that he has arrived in France.

Herman Lorence has been promoted from corporal to sergeant at Camp Upton. His last civilian position was a salesman for the Mutual, Buffalo. Edward Balzer, shipping clerk for the Mutual, Buffalo, for eleven years, has received notice to be ready for the call to the colors. Four Mutual employes here, including three shippers, are doing their bit "to make the world safe for democracy."

John Childs, former traveling salesman for the World office, Buffalo, is now with the American Expeditionary forces in France. Frank Young, formerly in the World's shipping department, has enlisted in the Navy. Mosby McAden, formerly assistant shipper at the World, Buffalo, was last heard from at Camp Meade, where he was an officer of a negro regiment. He is probably now in France. George Landis and C. C. Percy, former salesmen for the World, have also joined the colors.

H. L. Taylor Will Assist at Triangle.

H. L. Taylor has been appointed assistant to T. C. Montgomery, Buffalo manager of the Triangle. Mr. Taylor was formerly with the Motion Picture Distributing Sales Co. and the Film Supply Co., New York, etc. Mr. Montgomery has been covering Rochester, Elmira and Binghamton. The Triangle is releasing the Keystone reissues of the Arbuckle, Normand, Sterling and Conklin comedies.

Buffalo Trade Notes.

The Grande theater building in Main street, North Tonawanda, N. Y., was recently damaged by fire to the extent of $5,000. The building was owned by Peter Diedrich and the Fred Diedrich estate. The loss is covered by insurance.

The Plaza theater, Corning, N. Y., was recently damaged by fire to the extent of $4,000. The blaze was confined to the new Velie block, in which the total loss was $30,000.

Men selected to go to camp from draft division, No. 13, Buffalo, were recently invited to attend the Jubilee moving picture theater, of that city. There were special pictures for the men, and two speakers, one who spoke in English and the other in Polish.

The Buffalo branch of the Mutual reports a heavy volume of business signed up with representative theaters in this territory on the Outing Chester Travel Pictures, which the Mutual is about to release.

Edward Schuster, auditor for the General, called at the company's Buffalo exchange.

"The Yellow Ticket," a Pathe five-reel feature, was recently given a first-run showing for a week at the Strand, Buffalo.

A. Burns, proprietor of the Main street theater, Westfield, N. Y., is receiving the sympathy of his friends on account of the recent death of his wife.

Rochester Trade Notes

By L. B. Skeffington, 61 Main street, East, Rochester, N. Y.

A. N. Wolff Is a True American.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—A. N. Wolff, of the Rialto theater, formerly the Colonial, and president of the Rochester Exhibitors' League, has issued a statement to the public through the medium of the press, in which he vigorously asseverates his Americanism. It seems that last week, on Saturday night, Mr. Wolff, was accused of preventing the sale of War Savings Stamps in front of his theater. In the statement just issued he says that both he and the patrons of the Rialto, on Main street, East, in the heart of downtown Rochester, had been annoyed by demonstrators of an automobile self-starter, who had taken up a position at the curb directly in front of the entrance to the theater. Mr. Wolff says that he did insist that the demonstrators discontinue their work, but in no way interfered with girls who were selling War Savings Stamps. He further calls attention to the fact that the Rialto has assisted every worthy purpose in connection with the war. The screen has time and time again been turned over to the use of the United States Government and both the lobby and the theater proper have been the scene of many campaign for the sale of Liberty Bonds. He says that the management has received thousands of postal cards from soldiers overseas thanking them for the tobacco which has been sent to the men over there. Mr. Wolff concludes by asking anyone who doubts his patriotism to call upon him and give him a chance to explain his ideas in person.

Brevities from Rochester.

At the Piccadilly last week "The Unbeliever" went over the top in a manner that establishes a new record for Rochester. "The Unbeliever" had originally been booked for the first four days of the week, with Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Stranded in Arcady" to follow for the last three days. Early in the week it was seen that "The Unbeliever" was drawing the people in such large and undiminishing crowds that it would be impossible to outplay it in the four days, so the engagement was extended for the entire week. The Piccadilly is a big house, seating about 2,500 and it has proven in the past that but seldom will a picture hold up for the entire week.

This year there will apparently be no outdoor moving picture shows in Rochester. In the past there has always been one or more airdomes, but this year there are none. The condition probably arises from the war. At Ontario Beach Park on Lake Ontario, however, this is proving one of the most popular attractions.

All the moving picture houses are deep in the War Savings Stamp campaign which is in full swing here this week.

Pittsburgh Trade Letter

By L. J. McCurty, 455 Union Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The operators in the Pittsburgh District are in a quandary as to where they stand regarding the work or fight order of General Crowder. Just what their status is seems to be the paramount question of the hour with most of them. The Operator's Local Union had a meeting on Sunday, June 23, at which it was decided to send two delegates to Washington to gather more definite information on the subject. This committee of two, consisting of Messrs. Freeman and Sipe, will interview Gompers of the A. F. of L., as well as Chas. Shay, of the Operators' Union, there.

Quality Under New Management.

The Western Penna. Amusement Co. has secured a lease on a picture house next to the Hotel Henry on Fifth avenue, downtown. This house, which was formerly run under the name of the Quality will be entirely remodeled and furnished in a modern manner. The location is fair, and should do some business. The house is said to have done a fair business while open before, but conditions have improved considerably in the immediate vicinity, many new office buildings and stores having been built of late and this new condition ought to favor it considerably. The house will be ready some time in the fall.

Work Begun on the Grand.

The Grand theater, which was purchased recently by Goldberg from Goodman, of Beaver Falls, as reported in the World, will be entirely remodeled and redecorated. Work has commenced on this now, and the theater will be ready for the fall patronage, although no interruption will occur while the work is under way.

A. M. Burt Buys Another House.

Mannington, W. Va., a thriving small town in the oil fields, now has one owner for all three theaters. A. M. Burt has acquired ownership of the Dixie and Idle Hour, and with his own, the Burt theater, this makes him sole theater man of the town.

S. Gallo Takes Strand Theater.

The new Strand theater at Indiana, Pa., the home of the state normal school, has been taken over by Samuel Gallo, a comparatively new comer in the theater business. The retiring owners are the Caros Brothers, who purchased the theater from Mr. Blitz some time ago.

Mike Marks Buys Star Theater Stock.

Mike Marks, who for thirteen years had the Star theater at New Castle, but recently sold it to the West Penn Photoplay

Company, after looking around for two months, has bought the interest of George Kyros, of the Star theater in New Kensington, who has decided to retire for a while because of ill health. Kyros will go to Saranac Lake, New York, for the summer, and will return to the theater field in the fall, health permitting. This is a good proposition, and Marks is a live-wire exhibitor.

Exhibitor Tetrick Called.

Another West Virginia exhibitor has been called in the draft. Mr. Tetrick, one of the owners of the Lyric theater, Worthington, W. Va., a coal mining town, left for camp last week. The Dixie theater in Morgantown has lost, it is said, over a dozen members of the staff, employed in various capacities since the draft commenced.

Interesting Brevities.

The censors had another haul, taking the money of several exhibitors from McKeesport, Braddock, Upper Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, and the various exchanges in town, in fines assessed by Alderman Kirby. The F. I. L. M. Club was in charge of the defense and put up the necessary money for all cases appealed.

Pt. Pleasant, W. Va., saw the opening of the Strand theater on June 22, with Mr. Robertson in charge. The theater is entirely modern and will show features exclusively.

Walter D. Kaufmann, formerly operator at the Regent theater in the East End, is now with Company F, 28th Engineers, at Woodbridge, Va. He also has charge of the projection of pictures shown for the soldiers.

IN CANADA.

H. N. Jernberg Honored.

H. N. Jernberg, manager of the Province theater, one of the largest in Winnipeg, was appointed deputy registrar by the Dominion Government for National Registration Day, Saturday, June 22, when every resident of Canada was called upon to register. Mr. Jernberg was appointed in order to facilitate the registration of all film men and theater employes in Winnipeg.

Canadian Theater Notes.

John T. Fiddes of New York has been filling a month's engagement as a soloist at the Strand theater, Toronto, with considerable success. Mr. Fiddes made his first appearance with the start of the Strand's "summer season" when the theater was decorated with chintzes and flowers and the exterior redecorated. The presence of a soloist is an added attraction at the Strand and the engagement of Mr. Fiddes is an idication that Toronto theater managers are aiming to use every effort to maintain interest in the theaters. Up to June 24 not one Toronto picture theater had closed for the summer months.

The Rialto theater, Montreal, which was closed early in May, was reopened on Saturday, June 22, under new management. The opening feature was "The Whims of Society" with Ethel Clayton. Admission prices for this house were fixed at 5c. for children and 10c. for adults.

The Coliseum theater, 2215 Queen street east, Toronto, had a big programme for the children on Saturday, June 29. At a special matinee the feature attraction was "Blue Bird," a Sennett comedy and ice cream cones for every child patron.

The Reo theater, Queen and McCaul streets, Toronto, has changed hands, having recently been sold by the owner, Mr. A. Tobin.

Announcement is made that the Patricia theater, London, Ontario, will be closed for six weeks during which time extensive alterations will be made in the structure. A brand new front is promised and interior changes are also promised.

Film News of the Week in Toronto, Ont.

Notes from Canadian Exhibitors and Exchange Men—Personal Items and Business Notes of the Trade.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Winera Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

Woman Booker Makes Good Record.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—Toronto claims the distinction of having the oldest woman booker, in point of business service, in exchange circles anywhere. The lady in question is long on experience and short on years. Having safely disposed of the subject of the lady's age, your correspondent will proceed with the formal introduction. The record-holder is Mrs. Imogene Jewell who has been the booker of the Toronto branch of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian Pathe distributors, for the past two years. During the period she has been in charge of the booking department, she has yet to make her first mistake in arranging booking schedules, according to Manager Culleton.

Attention is brought to the record of this young woman because of possible similar claims on the part of exchanges in other cities with regard to the employment of women in the places of men who have enlisted for active service overseas.

Grand's Picture Policy a Success.

The Grand opera house, Toronto, has been continuing its "moving picture season" with success. This legitimate house has been a moving picture theater for two months, during which time a wide variety of "special attractions" have been screened. Following "Hearts of the World" and "Ramona," a week's showing was that of "Civilization." This was during the week of June 24.

H. F. Hill's Personal Publicity.

H. F. Hill, manager of the Bijou theater, Calgary, Alberta, is sending out circular letters to all women patrons of the theater once each week. The weekly letter is also published in full in the Calgary Herald. The communication consists of a simple explanation of the current attraction and the dates of showing, together with a statement or two about the aims of the theater.

After describing Fox's "A Branded Soul" in a recent letter, Manager Hill wrote the following: "Need I tell you any more to indicate the tenseness, the thrills in this photoplay? Come and see it worked out by this 'Girl of a Thousand Expressions.' I believe you will count your time well spent. I am trying to run my theater to give my patrons the best entertainment obtainable. I hope I am achieving that end. Yours truly."

This form of personal advertising has aroused considerable favorable comment locally.

Censor Backs and Fills in Winnipeg.

Some time ago manager Wilson of the Lyceum theater, Winnipeg, Manitoba, arranged to present "The Auction Block," one of the special releases controlled in Canada by Regal Films, Limited. At the last moment the Manitoba Board of Censors recalled the feature and condemned it. Manager Wilson was forced to substitute another picture after doing considerable advertising for "The Auction Block."

Eventually, the Manitoba reconsidered its decision and reversed its decision, passing the picture without a cut. Manager Wilson again booked the picture for the Lyceum and it was presented during the week of June 24.

J. M. and C. P. Walker Pay a Visit.

J. M. Walker and C. P. Walker of the Walker theater, Winnipeg, took a trip to Eastern Canada during the last week in June on business and pleasure bent. Among other things they arranged to attend the annual convention of the Canadian Bill Posters' Association at Chatham, Ontario. After the visit East, J. M. Walker will join his family for a holiday at Red Wing, Minn. The Walker theater put on a picture for the week of June 17 when "Over The Top" was presented at 15c. to 75c. prices.

Walter Stanbrook, house manager of the Walker theater, also planned to take a three weeks' vacation in the Canadian West after the close of the regular season of the theater on June 29.

Miss Joudry Takes Over Theater.

Miss Margaret Joudry of Rosthern, Saskatchewan, has taken over the management of the Rosthern theater of that place in succession to her father who died recently. The house was closed immediately after the death of her parent but the daughter determined to continue its operation. She went to Winnipeg where she became an apprentice in the projection machine room of the Arlington theater. By close attention to details and continual labor day and night, she gained her operator's license within six weeks and received the endorsement of the Manitoba Government Bureau of Labor. Miss Joudry is the only support of a widowed mother and a soldier brother who is serving in France with the Canadian Expeditionary Force. She re-opened the Rosthern theater on Friday night, June 21.

Manager O. W. Powell Weds.

Manager O. W. Powell of the Regina theater, Regina, Saskatchewan, has taken unto himself a wife, the bride being Miss Hilda Howe, formerly an employe on the staff of the Empire theater at Saskatoon. The Regina theater is connected with the Groves-Walker Syndicate.

Gerard Film Makes Stir in Toronto.

Manager Roland Roberts of the Regent theater, Toronto, obtained the services of no less than eighty local clergymen to advertise the special attraction "My Four Years in Germany," which was presented at his theater during the week of June 24. Roberts invited all the local clergy to a special showing of the feature and all denominations were represented at the private presentation. The attendance of preachers alone was eighty. On the following Sunday, Toronto pastors issued an appeal for the "Prisoners of War Fund" and made references to scenes they had viewed in the picture in a number of cases.

Gerard's narrative made good from the very start on this first showing in Toronto, great enthusiasm being aroused at every presentation.

Incidentally, Goldwyn's "The Venus Model," starring Mabel Normand, made a distinct hit at the Regent during the week previous. According to Manager Roberts, this release made a "clean-up." The picture really played to big business all week.

Some Good Publicity Stunts.

Two Montreal picture theaters did something a little out of the ordinary during the week of June 24. At the Imperial theater, manager Conover distributed 5,000 certificate cases for National registration cards to patrons who presented newspaper coupons. The features during the week were "Mile-A-Minute Kendall" for three days and "Prunella" for four days. June 22 was Registration Day in Canada and the distribution of the card holders was very timely.

At the Holman theater, manager Pomeroy exhibited a Harley-Davidson motorcycle which was similar to the one used by Herbert Rawlinson in the current attraction, "Smashing Through." Pomeroy secured the machine through the courtesy of a local distributor, Arthur Ross.

Birmingham a Leading Picture Show City

South's Great Manufacturing Center Lacks Sunday Amusements, But Has Exhibitors Who Are Awake During the Week.

By J. L. Ray, care of Nashville Banner, Nashville, Tenn.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—Located in the Alabama steel district where thousands of workmen are engaged in the manufacture of government materials, as well as being closely connected with nitrate and munitions plants in the vicinity, Birmingham, Ala., is one of the South's most progressive cities. Moving pictures, always popular with fandom of this section, are proving an invaluable asset in furnishing entertainment to the many government workers and soldiers from nearby cantonments as well as to the civilian populace.

Although denied the privilege of operating shows on Sunday, through a recent election in which the Pastors' Union threw the majority of votes to the negative side of the Sunday opening question, Birmingham is making rapid strides in the moving picture field. Provided with an abundance of picture houses for whites and an equally large proportion for the colored race, the city is well covered in all sections, as well as having a number of combination moving picture and vaudeville houses in the uptown section.

The Lyric runs several reels of pictures each day with the vaudeville performance. Both white and colored are admitted, separate sections being provided. Prices range from 15 cents to 55 cents, exclusive of war taxes.

Loew's Bijou, in charge of Manager L. H. King, runs pictures in connection with the regular Loew program. White and colored are also admitted here, with prices ranging from 10 cents for the colored gallery to 35 cents for box seats.

The Rialto is one of Birmingham's best moving picture houses. It is a feature house operated by Mudd & Colley, on Nineteenth street. Prices run 10 and 20 cents. A balcony and main auditorium floor accommodate over 1,000 people.

Mudd & Colley operate a number of the Birmingham houses. Another handsome show palace is the Trianon on Second avenue, with a 950 capacity. The Trianon is rather new, and is finished handsomely. A full orchestra plays with the pictures. The Princess is a popular picture house operated by the same company.

The Strand on Second avenue is a 1,200-seat house, and very spacious. The decorations are attractive, and fittings of a substantial nature. Prices run 15 cents for adults, with a 2-cent war tax, and 10 for children with 1 cent tax. T. A. Abernathy is manager.

Mr. Abernathy likewise conducts the Odeon No. 1 and Odeon No. 2 as well as the Colonial. The Odeon No. 2 charges 10 cents admission, with a 1 cent war tax, on Twentieth street, between First and Second avenues. The Colonial is a 650-seat house on Second avenue, and has a large balcony. Prices run 10 cents for children and 15 for adults.

The Majestic runs vaudeville and pictures, and caters to white and colored. Colored people are seated in the upper gallery. Prices run 10, 15 and 25 cents.

A number of houses exclusively for colored people draw their full share of patronage. The New Queen, on Eighteenth street, shows pictures and vaudeville. The Pastime, Fourth and Seventeenth, shows pictures alone for 10 cents admission. The Champion, Eighteenth street, charges 10 and 5 cents, and the Savoy, another Eighteenth street house, also operates on a 10 and 5 basis.

In addition to the uptown houses mentioned there are a large number of suburban shows which are operating to good crowds daily.

Robs Knoxville Box Office.

One of the boldest theater robberies held in Tennessee in some time was perpetrated in Knoxville a few days ago when a lone bandit held up Webster English, an employee of the Bijou theater, at the point of a pistol and compelled him to hand over the theater's money box containing $360. The affair took place about ten o'clock at night in plain view of many people who were passing in and out of the house at the time. At this writing the robber had not been apprehended, but the police have a clue which they claim will lead to his capture eventually.

When the audience learned of the trouble in the box office there was some excitement, but employees managed to keep down a demonstration, and the show proceeded as usual.

Marine Picture Goes Well.

"The Unbeliever," produced in conjunction with the United States Marine Corps, showed at the Knickerbocker during the week of June 24 to good crowds. Officers of the local marine recruiting station were at the theater to help the picture "go over big," and throngs attended daily. Prices were fixed at 30 cents for all performances, including war tax.

War Picture at the Princess.

In addition to the regular program of vaudeville and a news reel, Manager Harry Sudekum of the Princess theater, Nashville, has arranged to show a continuous series of official war pictures. Twelve episodes are included in the lot, a new subject running with each semi-weekly change of the bill. The pictures shown thus far have proven a splendid drawing card, and have been enthusiastically received.

Moxon Goes to New York.

Following the Nashville Orpheum's close at the end of the summer season, Manager and Mrs. H. W. Moxon left Nashville for New York, where they will spend a summer vacation.

While in the big town Mr. Moxon will look over some booking plans for the fall season.

Cleveland Trade Letter.

By M. A. Malaney, 607 Belmont Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio.

Kuhn Under Technical Charges.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—An unusual technicality has arisen in Ohio film circles by the arrest of Jack Kuhn, manager of Loew's Stillman theater, Cleveland. Mr. Kuhn was charged with running the Marguerite Clark picture "Prunella" without an Ohio censorship leader. The picture had been censored, but the complaint stated that the leader was not on it. Kuhn claimed that he ran the leader on the picture at the first performance of the day the production opened at the Stillman.

The case was continued until the week of July 1.

They Have Cause to Wonder.

The word "hell" in a title seems to be under the Ohio Board of Censors' ban. During the week of June 24, the board turned down the Universal's feature with Harry Carey entitled "Hell Bent." Manager Smith of the Cleveland Universal office was informed the picture would be approved if renamed, so he has called it "Three Bad Men."

About a year ago, the censors turned down the Bluebird feature "Hell Morgan's Girl."

Exhibitors of Ohio are wondering.

Meeting of Goldwyn Clan.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Managers of the Goldwyn offices in the Central States held a conference with Alfred Weiss, vice-president of the company, in Cleveland, June 22.

Among those in attendance were H. A. Bandy, manager, and W. J. Brandt, W. J. Kimes and Fred Schramm of the Cleveland branch; J. E. Flynn and Richard Wernicke of the Detroit office; A. J. Pincus and Will Baker of Cincinnati and C. C. McKibben, R. T. Meyers and W. G. Liber of Pittsburgh branch.

Following the meeting Mr. Weiss tendered the managers and salesmen a banquet at Hotel Winton.

Paul Gusdanovic Adds Another.

Paul Gusdanovic, owner of the Orpheum, Norwood and Homestead theaters, Cleveland, has added another house to his string. He and Jimmy Surrell, his business associate, have purchased the Eclair theater, on St. Clair avenue and East 78th street. This is one of the best-paying houses in the city. There will be several alterations made before fall.

Interesting Trade Jottings.

Manager Johnson of the Cleveland Vitagraph exchange has received word from his former Toledo salesman, J. S. Robb that he has arrived safely in France with the 83rd division.

Manager Cohn of the Union Film company, Cleveland, has returned from a trip to New York where he bought two hundred more reels of short subjects.

F. H. Clary Takes Gilger Theater.

F. H. Clary has taken over the Gilger theater, Norwalk, Ohio, and is operating it as a straight picture house at present.

The Gilger is the largest house in that city and for many years was operated by the owner, Mr. Gilger, who lives in Cleveland. His son who was assisting him, joined the colors and it was necessary for Mr. Gilger to relinquish the theater as he is in the wholesale jewelry business in Cleveland.

Milton Korach Called to Service.

Milton Korach, who for over a year has been assistant director of the Cleveland Plain Dealer Screen Magazine, has been called to the national army. Milt left for Camp Sherman during the week of June 23.

Korach is one of the best-liked film men in Cleveland and his friends not only tendered him a big supper at the Martinique hotel before he left but bought him a handsome camp kit. The supper was a unique affair being served by innings instead of courses.

The feature of the "game" was a wonderful catch of a very essential portion of the supper by Milt's boss—Sam Brodsky, general manager of the Plain Dealer Screen Magazine.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 1st Nat. Bk., Cincinnati.

Thrift Week Drive Uses Theater.

CINCINNATI, O.—The War Saving Stamp campaign in Cincinnati is receiving aid of the most substantial nature through the theaters, as the case has been with every form of war work in Cincinnati. A unit consisting of women made a special drive through the theaters, speakers visiting the leading houses and making appeals to the audiences for pledge cards. The Forest theater, Avondale's leading house, did itself proud by an unusual stunt in this connection. It announced that during "Thrift Week," beginning June 24, thrift stamps would be accepted in payment of admissions, and that these stamps would be held by the theater as a permanent investment instead of being turned in for cash, thus making the entire gross receipts for the week an investment in the stamps. This had the natural effect of stimulating sales among patrons of the theater, who used some of their stamps for the purpose of buying tickets.

Enforcing Theater Sanitation.

The intention of Cincinnati health authorities to take time by the forelock and prevent the spread of communicable diseases was indicated to moving-picture exhibitors a short time ago by the announcement that physicians and policemen would be detailed to visit the theaters for the purpose of seeing that all requirements for the protection of the public health are fully observed. While practically all of the theaters are scrupulously observing every such requirement, there are a few which have come under the displeasure of the health department for various infractions, and as these few tend to bring criticism upon all, exhibitors in general welcome the prospect of rigid enforcement of health rules.

Fire Damages Milford Theater.

Milford, O.—Damage to the amount of $450 to films, projecting machines and the building was caused to the Batavia opera house when a film ignited and started a fire. Milton Kain, an operator, was trying out a projecting machine when the blaze started, and the fire spread to the theater before it could be extinguished.

Will Build Theater in Whitesville.

Whitesville, W. Va.—The Whitesville Amusement Co., recently incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000, will construct and operate a moving-picture theater here. D. N. Mohler, R. R. Wood and others, all of Charleston, W. Va., are interested.

Offers Photos to Help Red Cross.

Lady Tsen Mei, the noted Chinese actress, who is starring in the new production now being finished at the Betzwood Film Company's studios, has created an additional interest in the War Savings Stamps drive which is soon to take place here by offering to send her photo to her many admirers if they send a thrift stamp along with their request. All stamps received will be donated to the Red Cross.

Camp to Have Theater for 5,000.

Plans are now under way at the great motor storage depot, Camp Holabird, Colgate Creek, Md., for the erection of a huge auditorium or theater which will have a seating capacity of 5,000 and cost about $30,000. According to the plans now under way the proposed auditorium will be built in such a way and equipped so that motion picture entertainments can be given as well as other shows.

Manager E. R. Pearson of the First National exchange spent two days in Fargo attending the showing of "My Four Years in Germany" at the Orpheum theater.

Give up your luxuries that the Kaiser may be made to give up his ambitions.

Louisville Theaters Expect Many Patrons

More Soldiers Will Be at Nearby Camps and Workers at New Munition Factories Will Also Add to the Attendance.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The outlook has improved wonderfully within the past week with the Louisville moving picture men, due to the fact that Camp Taylor is filling up again, and the recent Government announcement that a new artillery range cantonment will be erected at the West Point, Ky., range, just twenty-five miles from Louisville. The cantonment at that point will have a capacity of between 30,000 and 50,000 men, which will give Louisville a big military population to draw from when both camps are running full blast. In addition a deal has been practically closed for a large plot of land just south of Louisville for a big smokeless powder plant to be operated by the duPont interests, and which will bring several thousand workers to the city if it goes in.

As a result of the West Point operations some of the local moving picture men have already undertaken to secure options on plots of land close to the camp or in West Point for moving picture enterprises. The government recently took over 20,000 acres of land, and has secured options on 20,000 acres additional, or 62 square miles in all. One moving picture man had already secured an acre plot for the possible purpose of erecting a picture house when the government took options on the additional land, with the result that his proposed site is inside of the camp property limits, and will not be available for the purpose. West Point is twenty-five miles from the city, but only a few miles from an interurban line and connected by bus. It is also connected by the best pike in the state, and by two railroads and the Ohio river steamers. However, it is too far from Louisville for the boys to come to the city often, as in the case with the men stationed at Camp Taylor, and so West Point will shortly enter the amusement ranks for itself. It being a small town or rather village with practically nothing in the way of amusements except good swimmining in the open Salt and Ohio rivers. A temporary camp has been operated at that point for some months, and amusements have developed slightly, but only on a temporary scale. Several sizeable picture theaters may be opened as soon as the work on the camp nears completion.

Likes Typhoon Cooling System.

Manager Fred Dolle, of the Alamo theater reports that he is more than pleased with the excellent results obtained through the use of his typhoon system of cooling the big house.

Business Brevities of Interest.

J. G. O'Connar, representing the Mutual Film Corporation, Indianapolis, which is handling Louisville through that office since closing the Louisville office some time ago, was recently in Louisville where he handled a private screening of the Outing Chester Travel Classics. The Indianapolis office has taken newer and larger quarters at 111 Maryland street, having just moved.

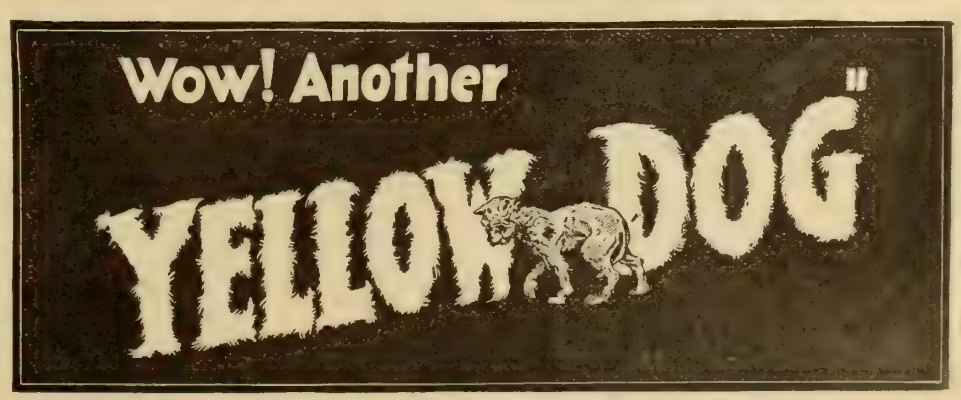
Hopkinsville, Ky.—All adjustments have been made with the insurance companies in connection with the loss on the Princess theater building, both with the owners of the building, and the Crescent Amusement Co., of Nashville, the operating company, and work of clearing off the wreckage preparatory to rebuilding has begun.

Louisville, Ky.—D. W. Griffith's war romance, "Hearts of the World," attracted such large crowds at the Keith Mary Anderson theater, that the inside ticket window was only used for handling reservations, and taking orders for reservation, a special ticket booth being placed in the lobby abutting on the street, in order to better facilitate handling ticket sales.

Cincinnati Trade Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

"The Re-Making" Gets Fine Reception.



CINCINNATI, O.—Although there have been some splendid productions shown at the Grand Opera House during its several seasons of moving pictures, it is fairly safe to say that none of these has surpassed in drawing power and local interest the Camp Sherman film running a two-weeks engagement there, entitled "The Re-Making of a Nation." As all of the local patriotic organizations backed the show for its merit as evidence of the fine training the drafted men receive, and its educational value led to special performances for school children, the total attendance for the engagement bids fair to run into record-breaking figures.

C. S. Sullivan Now in Ohio.

C. S. Sullivan, a former Michigan exhibitor, known as "the old-timer," is now working Ohio with his feature, "The House of Bondage." Sullivan is an interesting old Irishman and well liked among the exhibitors. He makes friends everywhere. He not only controls Ohio, but Iowa, Wisconsin and Indiana rights on this film. He is a pioneer in the film business, having operated the following theaters: The Grand and Royal, Escanaba, Mich.; the Royal and Grand, Calumet, Mich.; Royal, at Hancock, Mich.; Royal, at Ishpeming, Mich.; the People's, Laurium, Mich.; Royal, Iron River, Mich.; Cosy, Marinette, Mich.

Sunday Show Exhibitors Fined.

H. C. Mickey and Buck Brothers, exhibitors of Fostoria, Ohio, were recently arrested for keeping open on Sunday. Each was fined $10 and costs and the theaters ordered to stay closed. The theaters in Tiffin, Ohio, also have been closed.

Film Trade Notes of Week from Kansas City

Personal and Business Jottings From the Territory—What Exhibitors Are Doing in the Middlewest and Southwest.

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

Harry Harden in Signal Corps.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Harry Harden, booker for Metro, has enlisted in the Signal Corps division of the army and will leave very shortly. Mr. Harden, who was in the draft, has endeavored a number of times to join the Navy and Marines, but was unable to pass the physical examination. He has been in the film business for some time, starting as a shipping clerk for the Fox Film and later joining Metro when his brother, Charley Harden, was made manager of the Kansas City exchange. Ernest Allison is taking Mr. Harden's place. He, Mr. Allison comes as a stranger to the exchange business but has had a great deal of office experience in detail, correspondence and shipping.

Camp-Bell Announces Its Special.

The Camp-Bell Company will soon announce its special, "Mothers of Liberty," to be officially known as the picture representing the Fourth Liberty Loan. The company has adopted the trade slogan, "Every dog was once a pup. Watch us grow." E. J. Peskay, sales manager, has just returned from a four weeks' trip through the state of Kansas and will leave very shortly on a similar one through Missouri.

Universal Exchange Notes.

D. B. Ledermann, formerly manager of the Des Moines office of the Universal Film & Supply Company, and now a special representative out of the New York office, is in Kansas City for a week or ten days. Mr. Ledermann is installing a new bookkeeping, billing, and sales system in the Kansas City office.

Dallas Trade Letter

By Thomas E. Fox, Times Herald, Dallas, Texas.

Douglas Hawley Gets Important Post.

DALLAS, TEX.—Announcement is made by president E. H. Hulsey of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Texas, of the appointment of Douglas Hawley as manager of the Dallas office of that film distributing concern. Mr. Hawley has been connected with the largest daily afternoon newspaper in Dallas—which means Texas—for the last ten years, and during the last five years was its news editor. For the last year, also, he has been correspondent at Dallas for The Moving Picture World, readers of this journal remembering the "by line" over his "stuff" out of Dallas during that time. He is highly popular with the Texas newspaper fraternity, and his friends predict that his record will repeat itself with Texas amusement managers.

Additions to Dallas Mutual.

Manager R. A. Morrow of the Dallas Mutual, is getting thing rounded out in that office, following his appointment June 1. Mr. Morrow reports the addition of J. G. Tomlin, formerly with Pathe, and W. L. Terry, formerly with Santimos of Waco, to the Mutual sales force. Notice of the first Haworth release of Hayakawa's effort, has been given for early in September, and the Mutual fellows are looking forward to it with more than ordinary interest. Mr. Morrow also expects some good results with the new Outing Chester travel pictures to start June 30 in one reel releases. The Outing pictures, it is felt, will be entirely different from the travel releases that have heretofore been seen.

Amusement Company Chartered.

Charter of the Jefferson Amusement Company of Beaumont, Tex., has been filed with the secretary of state at Austin. The concern is capitalized at $75,000 and the incorporators are J. L. Pittman, J. C. Clemmons and Sol. E. Gordon.

Dallas Business Notes.

Manager Jimmie Kelly of the Dallas General Company, seems to be getting into the habit of putting on morning shows for the benefit of exhibitors who may be interested in General releases. There was a big attendance at the latest Barriscale patriotic release, shown June 18, and an equally interested audience showed up at Cameron's Crystal theater, Dallas, on June 23, for the screening of "The Last Raid of the Zeppelin L-21."

Manager Lou Remey of Goldwyn, has returned from a trip into San Antonio territory, and says everything's looking good. Remy is one of the most popular managers in film row and numbers a host of friends among Texas exhibitors.

George Bell of Galveston, who conducts five theaters in that city, was a visitor on Dallas Film Row during the last week in June, and declared the usual summer tourist run to the Texas coast resort city was satisfactorily affecting business. Mr. Bell made some new bookings and declared he and the other fellows down at Galveston were waiting the time with patience when the Texas Amusement Managers' Association meets there early in July.

Summer Heat Lessens Theater Attendance

Almost Ten Per Cent. of the Theaters in Northwest are Expected to Close For the Summer Season—Jottings of the Trade.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Slowly but surely the summer heat is having its effect upon moving picture business in the Northwest states. Every day brings in reports of a half or a dozen of theaters closing down for the summer or at least cutting down their number of showings per week. At the present time the number of theaters that are closed for the summer amounts to about seven or eight per cent., but it is expected that in another week about ten per cent. of the theaters of the territory will either have closed up or cut down their show days.

In the cities a majority of the theaters are enjoying a fair business, everything considered, but it is noticeable that thus far this summer business has been much lighter than in preceding years at this time. Overflow houses even on Sunday nights are very few and far between now-a-days and some of the biggest features to be shown in the city in years have only played to fair business.

One of the best attended showings in recent weeks was recorded at the St. Paul Metropolitan opera house, a legitimate theater, the week beginning June 16. This theater, due to its location and clientele has never proved an exceptional motion picture theater, but the displaying of "Pershing's Crusaders" brought out capacity crowds daily, despite the heat and rainy spells during the week. The theater secured considerable cooperation from various lodges and patriotic bodies as well as from the newspapers and the film received highest praise from local critics.

The "Pershing" production opened to a good business at the Minneapolis Metropolitan on Sunday, June 23. All local newspapers carried a double page advertisement about the showing, local merchants pro-rating the expense of it among them. The Wednesday, June 26, performance was scheduled to be given to the Flour Millers' Association of the city, that body having reserved the entire theater for the occasion and Friday, June 28, was reported to have been given for the Bankers' Association, that body having reserved the entire theater for the evening. The government is in charge of the Minneapolis showing also. The "Pershing" film will next be shown at Fargo, where it will again be presented under governmental auspices.

A. R. Nelson Opens Parex Exchange.

A. R. Nelson, formerly of the firm of Nelson & Moor, owners of the Independent Film Corp., has secured the managership of the Parex film exchange here and has opened offices on the first floor of the Kasota building, Fourth and Hennepin here. Mr. Nelson is well known to Northwest exhibitors and he hopes to give the Sherry productions a good distribution throughout this territory.

Westcott Gets a New Film.

Manager J. Earle Kemp, of the Westcott Film, has announced the acquisition of territorial rights for Minnesota, Wisconsin and the Dakotas to Francis Ford's production "Berlin via America." Mr. Kemp hopes to be able to announce a local first run of the Ford feature shortly.

Huesman Promoted by General.

Arthur Huesman, former booker, has been appointed manager of the local General exchange to succeed R. K. Evans. Mr. Huesman assumed his new duties Monday, June 24. Mr. Huesman is well known to Northwest exhibitors due to his long service at the General, and is known to be one of the hardest working film men in the territory.

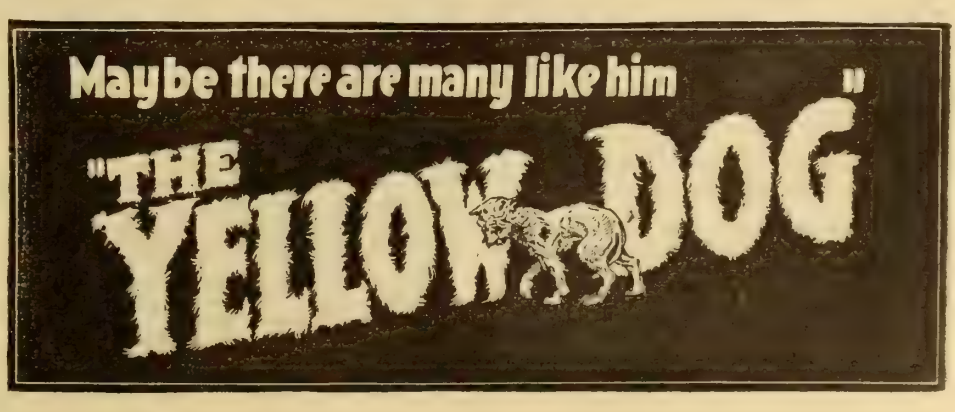
Will Distribute "Song Hits."

Jack O'Toole, manager of the Foursquare exchange, has announced that he would distribute the "Song Hits in Photoplays" throughout the Northwest territory. The "Song Hits" are short subjects developed from the latest popular songs and featuring prominent film stars. Mr. O'Toole contracted for several good runs of the short novel features two days after he had secured his first releases.

Notes About Exhibitors.

Manager Charles G. Branham, of the Minneapolis Strand, has booked several late Paramount releases to display at his theater, among them "Hit the Trail Holliday" and "Old Wives for New."

So successful was the New Lyric's week showing of "De Luxe Annie," featuring Norma Talmadge that Manager Koch of the New Aster immediately booked it for a second run of four days and enjoyed good business as a result.



F. L. Koppleberger, owner of the Majestic and La Crosse theaters at La Crosse, recently purchased the Dome, Unique and Casino theaters at La Crosse. It looks as if friend Koppleberger is trying to steal some of Ruben & Finkelstein's thunder.

Manager T. L. Hayes, of the New Garrick, displayed Marguerite Clark's "Prunella" to capacity business last week, presenting his picture with some of the most artistic and unusual stage effects ever used for a local presentation.

Manager McCormick of the Hippodrome, St. Paul, followed his week's showing of "The Unbeliever" with a week's showing of "Old Wives for New." From appearances it looks as if Mr. McCormick will bring the Hippodrome into the front rank among local picture theaters despite the summer season opening.

Manager Harry Green, of the Crystal theater on Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, reported the robbing of his safe to the police one night recently. The yeggmen made away with about $300 in money and other valuables.

Arthur Gostle, assistant manager of the New Palace, St. Paul, and former manager of the New Unique, Minneapolis, answered Uncle Sam's call for men for the National Army last week. Mr. Gostle left for Camp Lewis, Wash., Monday, June 24, with 1,500 other St. Paulites.

Trade Brevities from the Pacific Coast

Eugene H. Roth Takes Over the Strand Theater at Sacramento—Film Men Back Big Recreational Benefit for Navy and Marines.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Eugene H. Roth, managing director of the company which conducts the California and Portola theaters, two of the leading down-town moving picture houses of this city, has arranged to take over the Strand theater, formerly known as the Dieppenbrock, at J and Twelfth streets, Sacramento, Cal. Affiliated with him are men interested in the San Francisco theaters, but the Sacramento house will be operated as a separate enterprise. Work is to be started in the near future on extensive improvements that will cost several thousands dollars and which will transform the house into a cozy family theater. While the policy has not been announced, many innovations of a pleasing nature will be offered the Sacramento public. Plans for the alterations are being started and the opening will probably be held in September. This theater has a seating capacity of 1920 and is equipped with a full stage. The deal was made through the offices of A. J. Rich & Co. of this city, who also sold the Hamblen theater at Alameda a short time ago. The name of the Sacramento house will probably be changed to The California.

Film Men Promote Benefit.

Leading moving picture men of this city are taking an active interest in the plans for the great vaudeville show and dance to be tendered at the Exposition Auditorium on the evening of June 29th for the benefit of the band instrument fund of the United States Marine Corps. All proceeds in excess of the band's requirements will be distributed between the Marine Corps recreation fund and the Marine and Navy Scouts. This organization has always taken a prominent part in local work of a charitable nature and the band and quartette has appeared at many local theaters. The film men on the committee which has the affair in charge consists of M. J. Cohen, of the Kleine System; Louis Reichert, of Metro; Newton Levi, of Mutual; William J. Citron, of Fox; Sol L. Lesser, head of the All Star Features; Ben F. Simpson, of Triangle; Louis R. Greenfield, of the Kahn & Greenfield, and A. H. Moore, of the U. C. theater, Berkeley. Colonel Lincoln Karmany, commanding officer at Mare Island, is chairman of the committee, which includes many other officers in the Marine Corps.

Pershing Film at Columbia.

The only moving picture to be presented at the Columbia theater during the coming year will be "Pershing's Crusaders," which opens for a limited engagement on July 1. Room on the booking schedule was made for this production, which is being handled by the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., on account of its patriotic appeal and timely nature.

All Star News Notes.

Louis Hyman, manager of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., is enjoying a two weeks' vacation in the Yosemite Valley, accompanied by Bert Levy and family.

Harry Carney, who has been on the road for this exchange for some time, is now filling an inside position and attends to the wants of visiting exhibitors.

War films continue to be in demand here, the French production, "They Shall Not Pass," attracting considerable attention. A government war review film that formerly appeared in the news weeklies, but is now issued separately, is being booked through the Film Division of the State Council of Defense. This review is handled by Pathe throughout the United States, with the exception of California.

Fred McClellan has arrived at this office to begin work in connection with the presentation of "Hearts of the World."

The All Star Features Distributors, Inc., is now offering Vod-A-Vil Movies, released every other week, and has booked these at the Strand theater of this city, the Liberty theater, San Jose, and the Kinema theaters of Oakland and Fresno.

Atlas Educational to Move.

The Atlas Educational Film Corporation is preparing to move to larger quarters in the Pacific building at an early date, the change being made imperative owing to the increased business being done. This concern recently began to handle the Devry projector and is doing a large business on this. In the new quarters a large projection room will be fitted up with two machines and outside projection will be handled.

Fox Manager Home.

William J. Citron, manager of the local branch of the Fox Film has returned from the convention of Fox managers in New York, coming by way of the Pacific Northwest. Mr. Citron expresses himself as being highly enthusiastic with the plans for the coming year and feels that exhibitors will be the same when the good news is sprung. "Our coming program will be a knock-out," he said.

Machine Business Good.

G. A. Metcalfe finds that there is a good demand for operating room equipment, despite the fact that exhibitors are not doing a heavy business. He has sold Power machines and full equipment to be installed in the new theater being erected at Burlingame by W. P. Archibald, as well as machines and a Westinghouse motor-generator for the Coliseum theater being erected in this city by Samuel H. Levin.

Famous Gets New Publicity Man.

P. M. Le Berthon, formerly of Los Angeles, has been made manager of the publicity and service department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., succeeding W. W. Vaughan, who has filled this position for several months, and who has been promoted to the sales division.

Film Exchanges to Move.

The Sunset Film Corporation will move shortly to the new concrete building at 94 Golden Gate avenue. Quarters here will be shared with the Western Feature Film Company, now at 180 Golden Gate avenue, and in a measure the business of the two concerns will be consolidated. The films of the latter concern will be handled in the Los Angeles territory by the Sunset Film Corporation, which maintains a branch there.

New Exchange to Open Soon.

William Alexander, representing William L. Sherry, was a recent visitor and arranged for the opening of a Parex exchange at an early date. Quarters have been secured at 180 Golden Gate avenue and the new exchange will be in charge of Charles I. Luntz, until recently with the Fox Film, and known to all exhibitors in this territory. Mr. Alexander has gone to Seattle to establish an office and will return here in a short time.

T. & D. Circuit News.

Harry Oviatt, formerly in charge of the local Pathe office, but more recently connected with other local concerns, is in charge of the Berkeley T. & D. theater during the absence of Sam Y. Edwards, who has gone to the mountains to regain his health.

Five shows are now on the road in this territory with "My Four Years in Germany," while six are out with the first Chaplin release. A minimum admission price of 15 cents has been set on the latter.

A. M. Bowles, of the film exchange department, recently concluded a long road trip through the northern part of the state.

Visitors to San Francisco.

Recent trade visitors have included W. B. Martin, of the Elk's theater, San Luis Obispo.

J. Woods, of the Auditorium, Grass Valley.

A. C. H. Chamberlain, of the Madera Opera House, Madera.

E. A. Watkins, of the Angel's theater, Angel's Camp.

C. T. Crenna, of the Majestic theater, Concord.

Re-books "The Unbeliever."

San Jose, Cal.—The recent four days engagement of "The Unbeliever" at the Liberty theater broke all former records for attendance and James Beatty has booked this attraction for a return showing during the first week in July. In addition to this he has secured the services of the United States Marine Band, of Mare Island, at a heavy expense and will offer a musical program such as San Jose has never before enjoyed. The Chamber of Commerce of this city has for years attempted to bring this band to San Jose, but it has remained for Mr. Beatty to secure its services. The Marine Quartette will also be on hand and a special Sunday morning concert has been arranged for.

Brief Trade News.

Oakland, Cal.—Oliver Kehrlein, of the Kinema theater, has purchased a handsome home in Piedmont and has moved his family there from Fresno, Cal. It is the plan to reside here during the summer and in the Raisin City during the winter months.

Oakland, Cal.—Thomas J. Myers has been placed in charge of the local Pantages theater and extensive remodeling and refitting is planned. He was formerly manager of the house at Tacoma, Wash.

Fresno, Cal.—Theodore Keech, who has had charge of the Liberty theater since it was opened, has resigned as manager and his place has been taken by William Sharpe, who has been transferred from the San Jose house.

Special Lobby Display at the California.

The lobby display of the California theater, San Francisco, is attracting wide attention on the part of the general public and exhibitors, this form of advertising having been developed along artistic lines to match the beauty and dignity of the house. No lithographs are used and the photographs shown are not only carefully selected for artistic value, but are transformed into a work of decided merit by a unique treatment of the house photographer, J. L. Padilla.

The photographs used are enlarged to a one or three sheet size and an entire change is made in the background. The first ones prepared have a background to simulate a fine wood-cut, which harmonizes perfectly with the wonderful carved wood ceiling of the lobby. The accompanying cut is from one of the new photo-posters featuring Norma Talmadge, used during the engagement of "De Luxe Annie," the background being a Doré masterpiece. Other artistic creations along the same line are promised by house manager Harry David.

Spokane News Letter

By S. Clark Patchin, E 1811 Eleventh avenue, Spokane, Wash.

Tyrone Power Has to Take Rest.

SPOKANE, WASH.—As a result of a nervous breakdown, Tyrone Power, leading man with the Washington Motion Picture corporation, will take a vacation of several months and the leading character, in the first photo play production of the company will be Mitchell Lewis, who is expected here daily and among whose best productions are "The Barrier," "The Flower Of No Man's Land," and "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

"Mr. Power has had a severe working season in New York," said manager C. J. Ward, "and is on the verge of a nervous breakdown unless he takes care of his health immediately."

Larry Trimble general director of productions of the company said, "We will not lose much time in going on with the picture as Mr. Power's indisposition prevented our taking many scenes with him and most of the work accomplished was in parts where only other members were needed.

"Although I am disappointed that the picture could not be completed with Mr. Power yet I feel we are lucky in that Mitchell Lewis, whom I consider one of the five best bets among picture men, is available."

Spokane Film Brevities.

Manager Walter C. Smith of the Hippodrome theater, a moving picture and vaudeville house at Spokane, has arranged a benefit matinee to be given June 28, for the mess fund of the Modern Automobile School where more than 100 enlisted and drafted men are studying automobile mechanics to help win the war.

Clara Kimball Young, who was to have spent June 16 in Spokane, has postponed her visit until in July when she will appear in person at the Liberty theater according to Sam W. B. Cohn manager.

The Auditorium theater has landed another pictorial scoop in obtaining the first official United States government war pictures entitled, "Pershing's Crusaders." These will be shown the first week in August by J. W. Allender, who manages the pictures at the Auditorium.

Seattle Exchange Personals.

L. Amacher, booker at the office of L. J. Schlaifer Company, is leaving to take the place of Edna Craig, booker at the World office.

Harry Arthur, Jr., manager of the Portland De Luxe office, is spending several days at the Seattle headquarters this week.

George J. Ekre, who has charge of the Portland territory for General, paid a visit to Seattle headquarters this week.

H. B. Dobbs, Northwest Select manager, is covering the big towns in Montana just now. He reports business conditions good in that territory.

W. J. Drummond, Seattle K-E-S-E manager, is in Spokane this week.

R. H. Allan, general manager, left for Spokane the latter part of this week.

W. H. Smythe, formerly manager of the Strand theater, Seattle, is now traveling for Pathe out of the Seattle office.

Business Jottings.

F. C. Fischer, who represented the Greater Theaters Company of Seattle at the conference of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in New York, says that he is more than pleased with the way business has been going on First National pictures in the Northwest territory during his absence.

Harry Lustig, Metro special representative who has just returned to Seattle headquarters after a six-weeks' trip to the various offices of his territory, announces the following first-run bookings of Metro's newest Screen Classic Productions in the three leading Coast cities of the Pacific Northwest: Nazimova in "Toys of Fate" for 9 days, starting July 13 at the Clemmer, Seattle; the Dolly Sisters in "The Million Dollar Dollies," at the Clemmer for 9 days, starting August 10; Arnold Daly in "My Own United States," at the Orpheum, Seattle, for 7 days starting July 7.

For a state rights concern with a limited business such as the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions the list of their pictures appearing at downtown theaters in Seattle this week is quite imposing. "War's Women" is at the Strand, "Parentage" at the Little, a W. S. Hart re-issue at the Washington, a Jester comedy and two Bruce scenics at the Colonial, and "Hate" at the High Class.

Seattle's Strand Shakes Its Familiar Jinx

Jensen and Von Herlberg Policies Make a Success of Theater that Has Been Considered "Too Far Downtown."

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Washington.

SEATTLE, WASH.—The case of the Strand theater, Seattle, disproves the theory of a motion picture theater's getting a habit of failure. This house, which in the six or seven years of its existence previous to this year has never been a success, now that it is under the management of Jensen and Von Herberg, is showing just what it can be. There has really never been any reason why it should not have been a success. It is a big, beautiful house, and it was built and still is in the heart of the shopping district. For the last two years, however, it has become the custom of motion picture men of the territory to speak of it as too far downtown. There is a tendency of the retail trade farther up town, as there is in all cities, but the tendency has not yet become a fact, and the Strand is nearer the leading department store of the city than any other theater, while all the other big stores are within two or three blocks of it; and it will be several years before the center of the retail is shifted as far north and east on Pike and Pine streets as the plans that are now under consideration will bring it. Meantime the Strand was taken over early this spring by Jensen and Von Herberg. Immediately the biggest drawing cards on their booking sheets were put on at this house, and a fine big orchestra led by Frank Adelman, formerly leader of their Coliseum orchestra, was employed to furnish the music. The fact of the change in management was widely advertised both on bill boards and in the half-page ads that announced the Strand's presentation of pictures starring such favorites as Fairbanks, Hart, Clara Kimball Young, Mary Pickford and Elsie Ferguson. At first people raised their brows in surprise at the appearance of these stars at the Strand, when they were always accustomed to be seen at the Liberty or the Coliseum; but they wanted to see the stars, so they went, while the prestige that the Liberty and the Coliseum already had was sufficient to bring them back there also.

The Strand is now admitted to be a Jensen and Von Herberg success, which is saying a good deal. It is drawing a particularly good business this week, in spite of the warm weather, with Elsie Ferguson in "The Doll's House."

W. A. Mead Is Universal Manager.

W. A. Mead is to be the new manager of the Seattle Universal exchange, instead of George P. Endert, whose appointment was announced in last week's World. At the last moment Mr. Endert decided to remain at the position he already had, that of sales manager of the Seattle Artcraft-Paramount office. Mr. Mead gives up the post of assistant manager of the Northwest territory for Fox to accept this place. He has been with the local Fox office for the past 14 months. Although he has been in the film business only two years and a half, he can present a record enviable in this business even for so short a time, that of never having been fired. He has only served with two companies during that time. Triangle was his first love, but he soon found another in the person of a very charming lady, and after a little over a year spent in breaking the trail for future Triangle road men—he having been the first one and for some time the only one in this territory for that company—he resigned in order to marry the charming lady and enjoy a long honeymoon with her in California. When he returned he immediately went on the road for Fox and did his work so well that he was soon promoted to the post of assistant manager of the territory with special jurisdiction over the regular Fox releases, A. W. Eden, the manager, having charge of the Fox Standard Pictures. As manager of the Seattle Universal office Mr. Mead will have under his direct control northwestern Washington.

Gets "Hearts of the World."

"Hearts of the World" will be handled in the Northwest territory in a manner worthy of a Griffith production, even though it will not be put on by Griffith himself. The De Luxe Feature Film Company of Seattle has bought the Northwest rights and will handle it as a road show with an orchestra of thirty pieces to accompany it and will have 14 men behind stage in order to gain the effects. Mike Rosenberg, president of De Luxe announces that he has already closed for the showing of the production in Seattle and in Tacoma at the biggest rentals ever paid for a picture. It will appear in Seattle at Levy's Orpheum for indefinite engagement beginning July 6. The admission prices will range from 25 cents to $1.50.

Personal and Business Notes.

Mel Wilson and Ben Collins of the Butte Artcraft-Paramount exchange spent several days in Seattle en route back to work from their trip to San Francisco, where they went to attend the Artcraft-Paramount convention of managers and salesmen.

Jack Lannon, president of Greater Features, announces that he has obtained for release in the Northwest territory a special production on the subject of the Lusk-Roberts murder case, showing the trial in progress with close-ups of Grace Lusk, as well as the whole dramatic story. W. H. Rankin, salesman for the Greater Features, reports that Keystone and Chaplin reissues are going so strong that they are having a hard time to take up the bookings. A new copy of the Christie Comedies had to be ordered by the Greater Features in order to supply all the exhibitors wanting them in this territory.

Mike Rosenberg, president of DeLuxe Feature Film Company, has bought "The Grain of Dust" for distribution in the Northwest.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Lucas of Centralia, are spending some time in California, where Mr. Lucas expects to learn a few kinks to introduce into his shows.

Ben. F. Albertson Enters the Service.

Ben F. Albertson, K-E-S-E booker, has been accepted for the officers' training camp at the University of Washington campus. He gave up his position this week to begin his training.

R. E. Charles Joins Navy.

R. E. Charles, booker at the Select office, is leaving this week to join the navy.

Washington Exchange Managers to Meet for Discussion of Transportation—What Local Picture Theaters Are Doing.

By C. L. Linz, 622 Riggs Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Quite an important meeting of the exchange managers is scheduled to be held in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce at six o'clock on the evening of July 5. The principal discussion to come before the members of the newly formed organization at that time will be railroad transportation and the opening up of new avenues for the movement of films from exchanges to theaters.

With changes in schedules, increased rates, and innumerable delays, the exchange managers are hard put to it to see that the theaters get their shows on time, and they are going to try and formulate some co-operative scheme or plan for expediting transportation of films.

Admits Foreign Service Veterans.

Washington, D. C.—Of course it is the most natural thing in the world for everyone, especially in the National Capital, to have the desire to honor the men who are fighting our battles "Over There." From time to time little groups find their way "Back Home" via Washington. These men have all seen service of the severest kind—few of them would be able to go back among their comrades, for they are, for the most part, men who have been discharged from the Army because of disability. They come minus an arm, a leg, showing the effects of having been gassed, or otherwise marked by German steel or German atrocity.

A brief announcement has appeared in the local papers: "The Virginia theater, at 606 Ninth street, Northwest, is admitting all soldiers who have seen foreign service."

"Cool" Signs Something of a Joke.

The exhibitor in Washington who has the temerity to fly a banner above his house declaring it to be the "coolest spot in Washington" is playing a joke on himself just now, for Washington is almost frozen to death. However, rather than say that Crandall's Knickerbocker is the personification of coolness, it may be remarked that this theater now looks very inviting, neat and clean, with all of the chairs covered with cretonne and the heavy curtains replaced by "summer weights." A new back drop depicting a winter scene has also been installed.

Victor Abbey Opens Office.

Victor Abbey, former manager of the Mutual exchange here, is reported to have opened an office in the McGill building, Washington, D. C., from which he will direct the booking activities of a considerable number of theaters in this territory.

Illinois Trade Letter.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash avenue, Chicago.

Among Exhibitors in the State.

Dixon, Ill.—The Princess theater has been re-opened under the management of W. J. Crowley, of Chicago. The new manager has had the house re-decorated throughout and made a number of other improvements, including widening the space between the rows of seats.

Benton, Ill.—Work of remodeling the Mars theater has been started. The house will be closed during the months of July and August by Manager Colovos for further improvements.

Carlinville, Ill.—Van Wagen Alling, of Chicago, who recently erected a new hotel here is behind a project to construct an opera house on North Broad street.

Johnson City, Ill.—The opera house has gone under the management of C. C. Jones, and will be operated as a moving picture house. Repairs have been made to the theater.

Mazon, Ill.—The moving picture theater here, has been sold to Gardie and Russell Misner who have leased the opera house from W. V. Lasham for the coming year.

Kewanee, Ill.—The Grand theater has been re-opened under the management of C. W. Rapp and W. L. Stoneham, of Chicago, who will operate a moving picture show each afternoon and evening. A number of improvements in the house were planned.

Decatur, Ill.—A stock company at the Empress theater has given way to a moving picture policy. Features will be run an entire week, two shows in the afternoon and two in the evening. The first bookings were, "Over The Top," and "Tarzan of the Apes."

Aurora, Ill.—The Fox theater will not be closed this summer, but a new cooling system has been installed to make it a comfortable place.

Springfield, Ill.—"My Four Years in Germany," went so well at the Chatterton that it was given an extra Sunday matinee and night.

Oak ark, Ill.—"Tarzan of the Apes" was an especially good attraction at the Oak Pak theater, as the author, Edgar Rice Burrough is a resident of Oak Park.

Springfield, Ill.—Secretary of State Emmerson has issued certificates of incorporation to the Garfield Theater Company, Chicago; capital $5,000; incorporators, Frank Bagley, A. J. Johnson and E. M. Sinnett.

In Michigan.

Holland, Mich.—James Kotros, has remodeled the building at 10 West Eight street where the Royal Gardens formerly was conducted, into a moving picture theater, which will be known as the Lyric. Triangle films will be featured. Ladies were given carnations on the opening night.

Houghton, Mich.—Joseph Skelly has sold his interest in the Orpheum theater company to his partner Richard Callahan, who will become sole owner.

Laurium, Mich.—The Lyric theater which has been conducted by Anstes and DeLoo, was taken over by Richard Callahan and Joseph Skelly, holders of the mortgage. They sold the equipment to the Laurium Amusement company, proprietors of the People's theater which will operate the Lyric. For a time shows will be given only on Saturday and Sunday.

Alma, Mich.—Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Miller, for two years owners of the Idlehour theater have sold it to L. F. Murphy, of Detroit. A. H. Ashley, who is manager of the Liberty theater will have charge of the Idlehour theater. The Idlehour has been under the direct managemtn of Mrs. Miller.

Greenland, Mich.—The Jewel theater has been taken over by J. J. Clark of Mass.

Wakefield, Mich.—The Strand theater in this city has been taken over by the management of the Rex theater at Bessemer.

Calumet, Mich.—The Lyric theater turned over its house for one night to the Camp Fire Girls of the city as a benefit. Films of camp life for girls were shown in addition to the regular program.

Flint, Mich.—The Palace theater gets one of the early bookings of "Hearts of the World," in Michigan. It has been booked for the week of June 30.

Newark Trade Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

American Standard Opens Office.

NEWARK, N. J.—The American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, of New York, has opened a Newark office at 188 Market street. The American Standard have purchased several pictures which they are now exploiting. In addition, the concern has finished a number of their own productions, and intend to produce many more. The headquarters of the company are in the Leavitt building, New York City.

As manager of the local office, the American Standard has installed Otto Peck, whose photograph is herewith reproduced. Mr. Peck has had a somewhat varied and extensive motion picture career. Starting as assistant director for Vim Comedies under Jerry Huffner, Mr. Peck later became studio manager under William Stoneman for Equitable pictures. Mr. Peck then entered the producing game, making three children's pictures for the Golden Film, after which he became studio manager of the Mary Pickford studio at the Famous Players. At a later period Mr. Peck was casting director for Mutual Empire All-Star. Mr. Peck will now assume entire charge of the New Jersey territory for the American Standard. He is now busy producing a five-reel military picture for the Fine Arts Motion Picture Studios, and also on some Kid pictures, which will be released on the American program.

Mr. Peck is extremely fortunate in the selection of Sid Hall, as assistant manager of the local exchange. Mr. Hall has been connected with a number of the larger film companies in various positions, and brings a world of experience with him to Newark. Mr. Hall has previously been associated with Mr. Peck, and the combination is apparently excellent.

"Typhoon Fans" at City.

Managing Director Leon O. Mumford of the City theater, seventh and Orange streets, Newark, announces that construction is now under way for the installation of the typhoon fans in that theater. When the system shall have been installed, Mr. Mumford claims 30,000,000 cubic feet of fresh air will pass through his showhouse every hour.

"Pershing's Crusaders" at Newark.

The United States Official War film "Pershing's Crusaders" is booked for the Newark theater, 195 Market street, for the week of July 7. The week previous, "Old Wives for New" was shown, a picture which had been once advertised to be shown, but was stopped by the censors.

New Film Supply Concern.

Leopold Singer, of 29 Tichenor street, Newark, will do business as the Film Supply Company, and has opened offices at 304 Market street. Mr. Singer will handle a full line of motion picture supplies and accessories.

Fire at Scenario Theater.

A reel of film caught fire Saturday night, June 22, in the booth of the Scenario theater, 581 Orange street, Newark, and before the blaze was extinguished about $300 damage was done. There was no panic or excitement. Those who desired to go out, did so in an orderly manner, but most of the patrons remained. S. Ansbach is the manager of the Scenario.

Earle Fox in Newark Stock.

Earle Fox, the talented young film actor, was the leading man of the short-lived stock organization at the Broad street theater, Broad and Fulton streets. Although the cast was excellent, and the productions good, lack of patronage caused the disbanding of the company after three weeks. Mr. Fox is known to local theater goers through his work in the Griffith, Lasky, Triangle, Metro and Pathe productions.

North Carolina Trade Letter

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

Building Theater at Gastonia.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—J. A. Ethridge and J. White Ware, pioneers in the motion picture field in Piedmont, N. C., are building at Gastonia, N. C., one of the most modern picture houses in the state which will, when completed, seat more than eight hundred. Both men are prominent in organization movements in the state and are counted among the most progressing exhibitors in this section.

Paul V. Phillips Recovering.

Friends in Durham, North Carolina, his home town, have learned with regret that Paul V. Phillips, road man for the Atlanta, Goldwyn office, has been confined to his bed for five weeks, having undergone a rather serious operation. He was suddenly stricken and was unable to reach home. He is, however, improving and expects to be on the road again early in July.

R. A. Davis Heads Atlanta Mutual.

R. A. Davis, a former manager at Durham, N. C., is receiving congratulations upon his promotion to the managerial chair of the Atlanta Mutual exchange. Mr. Davis traveled this territory for Mutual for the past two years, and is one of the most popular film men making this route. He succeeds Charles E. Kessnich, who resigned to accept the management of the Atlanta Metro Exchange effective June 10.

J. F. Bryan Gets Manager's Chair.

J. Frank Bryan, a former member of the Charlotte, N. C., film colony, after holding down a road job out of Atlanta for Vitagraph for some time, has taken over the management of the New Orleans Vitagraph office, one of the most important of this company's exchanges.

G. V. Atkinson Now in Atlanta.

George V. Atkinson, the "Let George Do It" of Charlotte, for three years road man for the local Pathe exchange under manager R. V. Anderson, has followed his former chief to Atlanta, Georgia, and is now covering territory from that exchange for Pathe. Mr. Anderson was appointed manager of the Atlanta office almost a year ago, being succeeded in Charlotte by J. W. Fuller, formerly of the New Orleans office.

Film Men Join the Service.

The Charlotte film colony has lost several men who have joined the colors recently, among them the following: Thomas H. Lark, cashier Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Cicero Alexander, shipping clerk, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; M. J. Rogers, book-keeper, Universal Film Exchange, Inc.

Business Jottings.

Wrightsville, Beach, N. C.—Mr. H. T. Drake, of Fayetteville, Strand theater, is spending some time here with his family. Mr. Drake is very optimistic over the prospects for big business at Fayetteville in the near future and forecasts the establishment there within the next few weeks of a machine gun camp to accomodate forty thousand men to train for intensive service overseas.

"Bill" Conn, of the Charlotte Universal exchange has just returned from a trip through the three states of North and South Carolina and Virginia, where he is handling bookings for "Berlin, via America," for Otto Haas, who purchased the rights for these three states and arranged with the Universal exchange to handle the production. Mr. Conn announces record-breaking bookings on this war picture, almost every town of five thousand inhabitants already signed up for it in the three states. Capacity business is reported where the picture has already played in this territory, second only to the success scored by "The Kaiser." Mr. Haas is proprietor of the Ottoway and Princess theaters here and this is his first venture in the field of states rights purchasers.

Activities in Detroit Film Circles Last Week

The Regent, Under New Management, Does Heavy Business—Foursquare Exchange to Release One Feature Each Month—"Hearts of the World" Opens to Big Patronage at the Washington.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

Regent Theater's Films a Success.

DETROIT, MICH.—The Regent theater, Detroit, now under the management for the summer months of the Dawn Masterplay Co., has proven a big success with motion pictures the first two weeks. The policy has been twice-a-week change, with big features, big orchestra and popular prices. Even Charles H. Miles, the lessee who rented it for the summer to the Dawn people, was surprised at the big business done under the new management. The Regent will return to a policy of vaudeville and pictures next September.

Looks Bright for Foursquare.

Joseph Horwitz, resident manager and part owner in the Detroit branch of Foursquare Pictures, is just back from New York, where he had a conference with George Backer, president of the company. He is very much enthused over the future as Mr. Backer has assured him of one big picture every month from now on produced in his own studio. Mr. Horwitz, by the way, has just purchased a half interest in the Foursquare branch in Cleveland and will now spend a few days of each week in the Ohio City. He has already appointed Eddie Fontaine as manager. Mr. Fontaine was formerly manager of the Strand theater in Flint, and for a number of years was connected with Pathe in Detroit, six months of which he was manager.

"Hearts of World" Makes Record.

"Hearts of the World" opened its Detroit engagement at the Washington theater, Sunday, June 23, to the record business of the theater. Four shows are being given daily, with prices from 25 cents to $1.50. Manager Will M. Elliott has given it special attention with music and stage effects and theater decorations, and the entire presentation is one which brings the highest praise from those who pay their money at the box office. "Hearts of the World" will remain at the Washington theater indefinitely—and no one can predict how many weeks that will be. Speaking conservatively, however, it should stay there at least six to eight weeks.

Changes in Local Universal.

H. M. Berman, and Joe Snitzer, of the Universal, were in Detroit last week looking over the local branch office. When they left a big shift in the personnel of the office staff was made. W. D. Ward, manager, will hereafter devote his entire time to the selling end and Joseph Friedman, formerly one of the salesmen, will have full charge of the office details, which will be a big relief to Mr. Ward, and will permit him to get around the state more than he has been doing for lack of time. Ray Branch, who formerly handled the office, is transferred into the sales force. Ray is very popular with the exhibitors, so that the change is for the best all around. It will make for greater efficiency and is bound to result in increased business.

E. H. Rathbun Gets Commission.

Earl H. Rathbun, son-in-law of Col. W. S. Butterfield, of the Butterfield circuit of theaters, and formerly with the State Film Co. of Detroit, has been promoted to second lieutenant in the quartermasters corps at one of the eastern cantonments.

Alvin Smith Managing the Gratiot.

Alvin Smith, former manager of the Globe and Liberty theaters, Detroit, is now manager of the Gratiot theater, which was recently leased to Art W. Blankmeyer. He is making a number of changes in the house policy and adding new stunts that so far are proving business-getters.

Parex Open a Detroit Office.

The Parex Film Corporation, handling William L. Sherry Service, has opened a Detroit office at 202 Film building, in charge of E. H. Wells.

Detroit Trade Brevities.

From bookings being secured by Dave Prince, the Triangle exchange in Detroit is back to its old-time record. Dave has surely put on a lot of new business since taking charge less than two months ago.

The Standard Film Service, Detroit, has secured the Michigan rights to series of 16 two-reel Shorty Hamilton subjects.

Joseph Horwitz, of the Foursquare exchange, Detroit, announces having secured for Michigan the rights to "The Mad Lover" and "Today."

L. J. Gardiner, who makes the Velvet Gold Fibre Screen, has signed a long-term contract with the United Theater Equipment Co., whereby that concern has exclusive selling rights to the Gardiner screen in all territory covered by its branches. The Gardiner screen is made in Detroit and Mr. Gardiner is the U. T. E. manager in Detroit. An exceptional lot of fine orders have been received lately from the various U. T. E. branches.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy, who operate ten theaters in Michigan, have booked "Over The Top" over their entire circuit.

The latest report of the Detroit Police Department shows 148 theaters, of which 135 are devoted to motion pictures.

The Majestic theater, Detroit, which is playing "Missing" for two weeks, will close at the termination of the engagement, July 6, remaining closed for three or four weeks while considerable repairs are made inside.

Baltimore News Letter.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

Uncertain About "Birth" Film.

AS far as the Maryland Censor Board is concerned, the educational film, "Birth," may be shown in Maryland, but it must be shown to women only.

The women who witnessed the picture came to the conclusion that some of the scenes were entirely too harrowing and morbid and should be struck out, while the unanimous opinion of the men seemed to be that it was all right as it stood.

Soldiers at Auditorium Theater.

In conjunction with "Pershing's Crusaders," manager F. C. Schanberger, of the Auditorium theater, had 20 soldiers from Fort Howard attend several of the performances during the week of June 24, and just before the pictures began, they sang camp songs and gave drills upon the stage.

DeHoff a Tireless Patriot.

Through the courtesy of L. A. DeHoff, photoplay supervisor for Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the New and Garden theater companies, both of these houses were loaned out for patriotic meetings on Sunday night, June 23. At the Garden theater, the members of the Royal Arcanum held their forty-first anniversary and during the entertainment of vaudeville and moving pictures, former Governor Goldsborough made a stirring speech and $7,000 in War Savings Stamps was pledged. At the New theater on the same night an intensive campaign for the War Savings Stamps was started by the retail merchants' bureau of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association by having an entertainment at the New. There was an attractive entertainment and $5,000 was pledged in War Savings Stamps.

"THE MORTGAGED WIFE."

Universal Production Presents Dorothy Phillips in Absorbing Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS six-reel Universal production carries the interest from beginning to end, despite the fact that it is highly improbable in many respects and might well have been told in five reels. It provides a curious study of human frailty, all of the men being afflicted with some form of moral weakness, except the girl's brother, who makes up for this dissimilarity by his general slowness in understanding his sister's situation. The girl herself, Gloria Carter, is portrayed by Dorothy Phillips, and she is the one character who holds the sympathy at all times.

Gloria is married to Ralph Carter, a skulking individual, who announces at the beginning of the story that he has stolen fifty thousand dollars of the bank's funds. He is placed under arrest by some detective, but Gloria telephones her husband's superior in the bank employ, a man named Jerome Harris, and the latter agrees to release Carter as the result of a strange compact. Gloria is forced by Harris and her own husband to live at the Harris home until Carter succeeds in paying back the money.

The wife carries out her agreement and succeeds in fighting off the advances of Harris, who had long been in love with her. She discovers that Myer, secretary to Harris, is a German spy, and with this information regains the note her husband had given Harris. In the course of the story she plunges in the stock market and wrecks Harris, whom she eventually learns to love after her husband has been shot by Myer. The final reel of the story contains a great deal of dramatic action, and shows the sinking of a big liner by a submarine in a striking way.

William Stowell, Albert Roscoe, Sam DeGrasse and Edwin August play the masculine roles. The story was written by Frank Howard Clark and produced by Allan Holubar.

"THE CITY OF TEARS."

Bluebird Production Features Carmel Myers in Sympathetic Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE in a delicate touch apparent throughout this sympathetic Bluebird subject of five reels. The plot is one of the natural, well-ordered type, slight in incident, but full of human kindness and so effectively presented that it should have wide appeal. Carmel Myers plays the role of Rosa, an Italian opera singer, and Edwin August appears as Tony, an Italian delicatessen dealer.

Both of the leading parts are skillfully played, Miss Myers keeping a close hold on the interest in her experiences as a girl out of a job in a big city. Mr. August does an exceptional character bit as Tony. But the development of the story itself is unusual and for this credit must be given to the author, Olga Printzlau, and the producer, Elsie Jane Wilson. Instead of the usual unavailing efforts to create pity for the girl by a series of stereotyped adventures, they have pictured a series of small incidents that have a much stronger effect.

The plot concerns the wanderings of Rosa after the opera company has disbanded. She is out of money and has no friends. Tony, the delicatessen man, befriends her and she takes a job in his establishment. She escapes for a time from the clutches of Billy, a young artist admirer, and in the course of the story falls in love with Tony. She also discovers Tony's long-lost sister.

The story is a cheerful one, with a good undercurrent of humor running through it.

"ONE DOLLAR BID."

Paralta Play of the Kentucky Hills with J. Warren Kerrigan in the Lead.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AN almost forgotten law in Kentucky gives the title to "One Dollar Bid," a five-part Paralta photoplay told in scenario form by Tom J. Geraghty, the original story by Credo Harris. J. Warren Kerrigan heads the cast, and the picture was directed by Ernest C. Warde. Charles Stumar was the photographer. Moonshine whiskey is at the bottom of most of the trouble in the story. Toby, the part played by the star, is suffering from too great a love for it when he is introduced. A really brilliant young lawyer, he has allowed himself to go down hill until he has become a vagabond, living in a deserted negro hut.

The neighbors make up their minds to get rid of the stranger, and the sheriff recalls an old law that will permit him to sell Toby into servitude for one year. When he is put up at auction, Virginia Dare, the niece of Colonel Dare, who is horrified at seeing a human being sold in this way, bids one dollar, and Toby is turned over to her. Admiration for his owner works Toby's reformation and he becomes superintendent of the Dare stables. Before he tells his true name and wins his real place in the world back again, he defends a moonshiner from a murder charge, and risks his life in aiding the man's daughter, who is suffering from smallpox. The arrival of Toby's father is followed by his engagement to Virginia.

There are numerous "character" scenes in "One Dollar Bid," and it will find admirers by the score. There is not much speed in the story, but it is well acted, and the personality of the star is greatly in his favor. Lois Wilson, Joseph J. Dowling, Beatrice Joy, Arthur Allardt, Jess Herring, Elvira Weil and Clifford Alexander comprise the supporting cast.

"TANGLED LIVES."

Vitagraph Feature with Harry Morey Interesting But Loosely Made Melodrama.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE twists and turns of fate in "Tangled Lives," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature written by James Oliver Curwood and directed by Paul Scardon, betray the hand of an author who is more bent on supplying his story with melodramatic situations than in following a natural course of events. An excellent quality of acting on the part of the entire cast and the saving grace of generally spirited action make the picture interesting, however, for those who are not inclined to become critical. Harry Morey as John Howland is the correct type for the character and is thoroughly in earnest every moment he appears on the screen.

"Tangled Lives" deals with a young architect and the three women who become involved in his happiness. Married to a beautiful woman, Howland learns that she cares only for wealth and position and is carrying on an affair with a millionaire, Paul Westcott, for whom he is drawing the plans of a fine mansion. Cora West, married to an elderly man of great wealth, has always loved Howland. Her husband discovers this and commits suicide. Hoping to secure Howland for herself, Cora plans so that the architect comes upon the millionaire embracing Mrs. Howland in the garden. There is a quarrel and Howland is convicted, on evidence that wouldn't stand in a police court, of trying to kill Westcott. He is sent to prison, his wife obtains a divorce and marries the millionaire.

The third woman to affect Howland's fate is a young working girl, who is saved from a life of shame by the architect. When he gets out of prison his first thought is to kill Westcott, but Lola Maynard, who is deeply in love with him, makes him feel that her trust and devotion are the only things worth having. A flash of lightning kills Westcott and blinds the unfaithful wife.

Jean Paige is appealing as Lola, and Betty Blythe and Eulalie Jensen are successful as Mrs. Howland and Cora West. George Majeroni, Albert Roccardi and Charles Kent have the remaining roles. Released July 1.

"SANDY."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A REPUTATION gained by writing "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "Lovey Mary" is bound to create the impression that a story by Alice Hegan Rice will have human characters and a most likable hero and heroine. "Sandy," the five-part Paramount photoplay fashioned by Edith M. Kennedy from the novel of that name, is full of the heart interest that distinguished the other works of Mrs. Rice. Jack Pickford and Louise Huff are happily cast as a young Scotch stowaway and a Kentucky girl who is Sandy's inspiration from the day he first sees her on board the ocean liner. The author is not particularly strong on dramatic situations, and Sandy's path is not beset with sufficient difficulties to keep the spectator uncertain as to his fate. A pleasing atmosphere of kindly feeling and youthful innocence pervades the picture, however, and the last reel is enlivened with an attempt at murder and Sandy is arrested for helping an innocent man to escape. George Melford has directed the picture with satisfactory results.

The first view of Sandy shows him sound asleep on a dock somewhere on the other side of the Atlantic. Owning nothing but a bulldog and the clothes on his back, he gives away the dog and stows himself away in a life boat on a steamship bound for America. He is discovered and is saved from being sent back when the ship lands by Ruth Nelson, the little Kentucky girl, who gets her aunt to pay Sandy's fare.

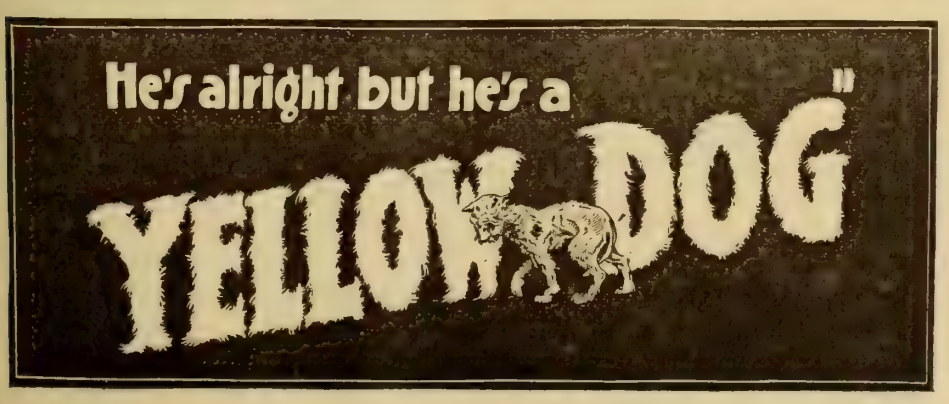
Ricks Wilson, an ex-jockey, is also on the ship and Sandy strikes up a partnership with him. The two work their way to the town where Ruth lives, and Sandy is adopted by Judge Hollis and his wife. Things come the Scotch boy's way after that. He is given a good education and treated like a son. Carter Nelson, Ruth's brother, gets mixed up in some crooked racetrack work with Ricks Wilson, and Judge Hollis has the jockey arrested for fouling and badly injuring another rider. This act is a bit of dramatic license, but it gives Carter Nelson a chance to shoot the Judge and for Sandy to protect the brother of the girl he loves. A prettily staged wedding closes the picture, with Sandy and Ruth in the leading roles.

Well acted parts are contributed by James Neill, Edythe Chapman, C. H. Geldart, Julia Faye, Louise Hutchinson, George Beranger, Raymond Hatton, Jennie Lee, Parkes Jones and Don Lykes.

"TEMPERED STEEL."

Madame Olga Petrova Strikes Fire in Dramatic Story of the Stage.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.



FAMILIARITY with the stage will weaken considerably the force of "Tempered Steel," a five-part picture arranged for the screen by Mrs. L. Case Russell from a story by George Middleton. Produced by the Petrova Picture Company and directed by Ralph Ince, with Madame Olga Petrova as the star, "Tempered Steel" builds up to a strong situation in the last two reels in spite of the fact that a number of incidents could never have taken place. The general public will accept most of the material, however, and never doubt the playwright when the absence of the star is not discovered on the opening night in New York until it is almost time for the curtain to go up. Matters are handled behind the scenes in a much more businesslike way.

There are several minor details of a similar nature, but the foundation of the story is a woman's grit and self-sacrifice at the most trying moment of her life, and the character of Lucille Caruthers, the part played by Madame Petrova, commands the respect and sympathy of the spectator all through the picture.

A young southern girl of a proud old family, Lucille meets strong opposition when she announces her determination to become an actress. Serge Ratakin, an actor whose nature is indicated by the first syllable of his last name, offers her an engagement, and Lucille keeps going ahead until she attracts the attention of a prominent New York manager and is given the star part in a new play. Ratakin is in love with her, but Lucille has become engaged to a young physician.

On the night of the opening, Ratakin comes to Lucille's apartment and threatens to throw vitriol in her face because she has repulsed him. The girl shoots him in self-defense, leaves his dead body and hurries to the theater. Although weak and trembling from the shock she goes through the performance and carries the play to success. Later on she learns that Ratakin was really killed by a flash of lightening.

Madame Petrova has never done anything for the screen as well as she plays Lucille. She strikes fire when the action calls for such a display of animation, and puts something of the impetuosity that is popularly supposed to belong to the true daughter of the South into her work. J. Herbert Frank, Thomas Holding, William Carlton, E. J. Radcliffe, Mrs. Walton and Matilda Brundage form an excellent supporting company. Ralph Ince has directed the picture with his accustomed skill.

"THE KID IS KLEVER."

Fox Film Corporation Features George Walsh in Amusing Five-Reel Subject.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel number, entitled "The Kid is Klever," is a light-running, humorous concoction, built about the figure of George Walsh, in whose personality most of the interest centers. The production tells a story within a story, but the two narratives are easily kept separate in the mind of the observer.

George Walsh first appears, in proper person, at the moving picture studio, where it develops that his regular director is ill and he finds it necessary to get both a new director and a story to work on. In comes a gentleman announced as Monsieur Hoe Beaux, the biggest director in the business—"around the waist." They set to work making a fearful and wonderful story, which is completed and then shown on the screen.

In the second story Mr. Walsh appears as Kirk White, just out of college. He is an all-around athlete and an expert boxer. His father, desiring him to have some experience, arranges a trip to South America. Kirk has a further interest in reaching Rio de Janeiro, for if he arrives there by August 1 he will get a large inheritance from his uncle. A desperado named Jabbzando, who also desires the money, tries to keep the youth from reaching his destination. Many of the scenes occur on shipboard, and the piece winds up with a lively revolution on land.

This vehicle, which was written by Randolph Lewis and directed by Paul Powell, gives George Walsh an opportunity to perform numerous acrobatic feats, which will meet with favor from observers.

"THE FLY GOD."

Characteristic "Red" Saunders Story with Triangle's Roy Stewart the Hero.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

HENRY WALLACE PHILLIPS, the creator of that big hearted and brilliant headed hero, "Red" Saunders, tells a rambling but interesting story in "The Fly God," which has been transferred to the screen by Triangle, with Roy Stewart as the gent with the ruddy hair. In the title the word fly alludes to the busy little bug that we are implored to swat at every opportunity. During a trial for murder, eleven of the jurors have decided to bring in a verdict of guilty. The twelfth juror leaves his decision to a fly that is crawling up a window-pane. If the fly reaches the top of the glass the prisoner is to go free. The fly is the means of the man's acquittal.

In this one of the "Red" Saunders series "Red" befriends a sick man and his wife who are traveling to Arizona by wagon and are robbed by the brother of the sheriff in Saunders' township. Robert Allers, the man in search of health, is too proud to accept charity, and "Red" and his cowboys have difficulty in thinking up ways to get around the matter.

When Allers meets the sheriff's brother and kills him in self-defense, the influence of the officer is so strong that it is almost impossible to save the prisoner's life. While he is in jail his wife becomes a mother, being taken care of by "Jimmy-Hit-the-Bottle," an Indian cook at the Saunders ranch. The little family is reunited and sent on its way rejoicing and the Saunders crowd are mighty well satisfied with their good work.

"The Fly God" is not a remarkably finished piece of screen drama; but it is full of kindly feeling and is acted in the proper spirit by Roy Stewart and the rest

"THE PAINTED LILY."

Alma Rubens as an Unwilling Vampire in Triangle Photoplay of the Underworld.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE law of contrast is used cleverly in "The Painted Lily," a five-part Triangle picture, story by Catharine Carr, directed by Thomas N. Heffron. Alma Rubens, the star, appears as the innocent daughter of a simple old florist and in the earlier scenes makes a lovely picture, surrounded by roses and blossoms of different hues. Mary Fanjoy by name, she fascinates a gambler, who sees in her beauty the lure by which he can attract and hold patrons to his gaming tables. Believing Cecil Grey to be an honorable man, Mary accepts his proposal of marriage and after a brief honeymoon is told what is expected of her. She refuses until Grey informs her that the marriage ceremony was not legal and he will tell her father the truth unless she consents.

Hating the life but willing to endure anything for the sake of the gentle old florist, Mary continues to assist her husband until the police raid the gambling house. A former pal of Grey's, a thief who helped him commit a robbery and murder, turns up, and the two men force Mary to pass herself off as the daughter of a blind woman in order to secure her money.

The woman lives in the country. At her home Mary meets a young chap who lost his last penny in Grey's gambling house and is now working as a farmhand. Grey is killed while trying to rob a bank, but before he dies admits that he lied about the marriage—Mary is really his wife. Tom Burton, the farmhand, is deeply in love with the florist's daughter, and there is every indication that she has a happy future awaiting her.

Unless the spectator is inclined to analyze closely several of the situations, "The Painted Lily" will prove good entertainment. Alma Rubens is equal to every one of her scenes, and is effectively supported by William V. Mong, Jack Richardson, Dorothy Hagar, Francis McDonald, Albert Lee and Gene Burr.

The production is of the best Triangle standard. C. H. Wales was the photographer.

"THE GHOST OF ROSIE TAYLOR."

Mary Miles Minter Makes Best Record on Adaptation of Bacon Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

BY FAR the best vehicle in which Mary Miles Minter has appeared, to the writer's knowledge, is "The Ghost of Rosie Taylor," a Saturday Evening Post story by Josephine Daskam Bacon. The production, which is in five reels, was made for the American Film Company by Edward Sloman and will be released on the Mutual program July 8. The production is full of interesting detail and carries an atmosphere of mystery with a slight touch of melodrama.

Miss Minter takes care of her opportunities, not with the finish of a great actress but with her usual charm and youthful spirit. Playing opposite her is Alan Forrest, with George Periolat playing the double role of father and uncle. Kate Price also appears in the cast doing a good bit of character work as the Irish landlady whose heart rules her head.

As the story runs, a young girl who has been educated in France with only her father and the neighbors for companions, is suddenly left an orphan, a catastrophe which is quickly followed by the loss of the fortune left her by her father. Her next misfortune, which is father to a number of complications, leaves her at the New York docks stranded after being brought to America as nursemaid by a family who find no further use for her after landing. An envelope picked up in the park and addressed to Rosie Taylor, who turns out to be dead, contains a note and the key to the door of a certain wealthy home where Rosie has been employed at intervals.

The orphan girl, driven by her hunger, takes the key, enters the house whose mistress has gone to the country for the week-end and proceeds to take Rosie Taylor's place. The son of the house, left at home, finds her and reports her as a burglar. Installation in a reformatory and a thrilling escape bring us to the final reel, where she is recaptured and brought face to face with her father's brother, with whom he had broken family ties. The anticipated wedding of the son of wealth and the orphan forms the close of an entertaining picture.

"SHARK MONROE."

Paramount Presents William S. Hart in Picturesque and Admirably Directed Story.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT LOOKS as though Mr. Hart has in him the material for a fine director. He is making himself as thoroughly informed as his time and opportunities will allow about details of production other than those expressed by the actor. Probably no influence is more responsible for whatever apathy and distrust the public has shown than a certain shallowness of the average director who expects to cover with adornment such weaknesses in story construction as lack of originality, faulty logic and absence of suspense. Mr. Hart gets his stories from a man who knows how to write for screen presentation and is a creative artist, though not without his faults. Sullivan makes a serious error in designating "Shark Monroe" as a man of childish simplicity, when he develops as a deep and subtle thinker in the course of events. He might better announce no characterization in advance—let it speak for itself, as well as soft pedal on "the bashful morning sun kissed the rosy cheek of dawn" in a story of character evolution midst a rude environment.

The author of "Shark Monroe" is strong in his conversions of human nature, sure and almost unerring in evolving the type Mr. Hart likes to play. He places the man of coarse manners and primitive impulses under dominating contact with a refined woman and permits a natural outgrowth of scenes and situations to let in light on the darker mind of the two, the humanizing delicacy, cleanliness and refinement of true womanhood, as in the present case. He does it without repetition by means of new adjustments, new complications in the eternal chess problem of the comedie humaine, and this stamps Sullivan as a writer of unfailing resource, who, with more time at his disposal, would turn out some masterly screen stories. It would be to his personal advantage, as to that of his stories, if he was given a few months on each for some editing and perfecting afterthoughts.

Hart's acting in this story of man's regeneration through love of a fine woman was a fault he is gradually getting rid of, that of centering revelation of thought and feeling on his impersonation alone. The play is benefited by the opportunity he gives his support, especially Katherine MacDonald, who uses effectively every inch of film space alloted her to impress the difficulties and embarrassments of her situation as the sister of a drunken brother and the forced wife of a brutalized man, whose finer nature she rouses. The story is made effective through fine types and by wonderfully picturesque work in illustrating the subtitles by suggestion. With feeling the real soul of this beautiful new art, these aids to it help to enrich the whole product, as do the well-balanced pictures of life aboard ship and in the wild open. One of the latter is a perfect composition, and the whole effect is made delightful through attention to the picturesque.

"THE HOUSE OF GOLD."

Emmy Wehlen Appears in Society Melodrama with Surprise Near Finish.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

THE Metro release for June 17, "The House of Gold," is a society melodrama in five reels, featuring Emmy Wehlen, with Joseph Kilgour as the "heavy," the leading male role. Director Carewe, in keeping with the title, has provided an artistic production with especially fine interior scenes. The first part of the subject, following conventional society lines, is inclined to be lacking in action, although there are some effective scenes, particularly where Kilgour crushes with his foot the cardboard model of the home which the star's fiance is to build for her.

The concluding reels are more melodramatic and there is considerable action, including a good fight in which Kilgour, who plays a dual role, is supposed to be struggling with the other character that he is portraying, and there is a genuine surprise when the wife discovers that it is not her husband but his twin brother who has been murdered. The finish is handled in a not altogether convincing manner, where the young couple are united after disposing of the villain husband by having him fall from a balcony to the ground in a fight with the hero.

The story deals with a young woman who through the lies and machinations of her mother and of a wealthy suitor marries the wealthy man, believing it will save her lover from prison. She becomes disgusted with her husband's debauches and disregard of conventions. The lover returns, and later the husband disappears after a struggle with his twin brother who escapes from an insane asylum, in which the brother is murdered. The wife is tried for the supposed murder of her husband, but acquitted, and is just about to be married to the hero when the husband reappears in the guise of the twin brother and meets his death in a struggle with the hero, enabling the couple finally to find happiness.

the unhappy wife, and Joseph Kilgour does find work in two widely divergent roles, that of the wealthy but dissolute husband and as the insane brother. "OPPORTUNITY."

Viola Dana Has Attractive Role in a Clever Comedy—Supporting Cast Excellent.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

A BRIGHT, clever comedy of a farcical nature is "Opportunity," the five-reel Metro release for July 1. The picture is an adaptation of a magazine story by Edgar Franklyn, and Viola Dana is starred in a role that provides her with excellent opportunities which she uses to good advantage.

Mary Willard, athletically inclined, goes to a prize fight dressed in her brother's clothes. The seat next to hers is occupied by Anthony Fry, a successful business competitor of her wealthy father. Fry has just been reading a poem based on the idea that opportunity knocks once at every man's door. He determines to offer an opportunity to the "boy" who falls in with the scheme. Fry takes Mary to his home and things begin to happen. In one scene he reproves her and starts to lead her out of the room by the hair, when her wig comes off and her sex is discovered. Through the suspicions of a "defective detective," coupled with the fact that Fry's friend is a newlywed, and his wife returns unexpectedly, various complications ensue, which, of course, are finally straightened out, Fry and Mary seizing the "opportunity" which has so unconventionally brought them together.

As Mary Willard, the talented player, has one of the most pleasing roles of her career, and her work is excellent. The production is well handled, and there are a number of good laughs. The supporting cast is especially good, and much of the humor is contributed by Hale Hamilton as Fry and Edward Abeles as his friend Bowler. Other prominent members of the cast include Frank Currier as Mary's father, Frank Lyons as Fry's valet, Joseph Burke as the detective, Sally Crute as Mrs. Bowler, and Elsie MacLeod as Mary's maid.

John H. Collins is the director, and he deserves credit for the manner in which he has handled the production. Taken altogether, this picture should provide agreeable entertainment for the majority of motion picture theaters.

TWO O. HENRY STORIES.

"Sisters of the Golden Circle" and "The Brief Debut of Tildy."

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

"Sisters of the Golden Circle."

AN excellent combination of human interest, humor, pathos and action makes "Sisters of the Golden Circle" one of the most entertaining of the O. Henry series produced by Broadway Star Features. It is in two reels and was directed by Kenneth Webb, who has produced a picture in which the different ingredients are skillfully balanced and which closely follows the story from which it is adapted.

Two newly married couples are seated on opposite seats on top of a Fifth avenue "bus." One couple is from a small Missouri town, while the male member of the other couple is a crook who has decided to reform. The two brides exchange confidences, and when detectives attempt to arrest the crook, he makes a getaway, while the other bride passes her husband off as the crook. A merry chase through the park follows, landing in the police station where everything is satisfactorily adjusted. The bride explains that she did it as it only meant an hour's discomfort for her husband, while the whole happiness of the other bride depended on the escape of her guilty better half.

The picture is enacted by an excellent cast including Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres as the small town couple, with Frank Kingsley and Alice Terry as the city couple. Almost the entire action takes place on a bus going up Fifth avenue, New York, and in Central Park. The scenes are well handled and convincingly done.

"The Brief Debut of Tildy."

This is a pathetic picture in two reels adapted from a story by O. Henry and produced by Broadway Star Features. The theme deals with a girl employed in a cheap restaurant. None of the male customers ever look her way, while the other waitress is the recipient of many attentions.

One day one of the customers who has lost his job and imbibed too freely hugs and kisses her. She is so elated she cannot keep her secret; takes various steps to beautify herself, and sees visions of future happiness. After a lapse of a few days, the customer reappears and apologizes for his disgraceful conduct, and departs leaving the poor waitress almost broken-hearted.

Alice Terry does an excellent bit of work as the forlorn waitress, while Betty Blythe is good as the attractive one. William Shea is well cast as the gruff restaurant keeper.

"THE GOLDEN WALL."

World-Picture Features Carlyle Blackwell in Pleasant Old-Fashioned Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel World-Picture is an adaptation by Clara Beranger of an old French novel and was directed by Dell Henderson. The story is an enjoyable one, reverting back to the days when heroes and heroines were wont to suspect one another of fortune hunting. This of course still occurs, but is not made so much of in modern novels. The theme is elaborate here for the most part in the midst of a beautiful country estate, abounding in pleasing settings which have been made the most of.

Carlyle Blackwell appears as Charles, Marquis d'Aubeterre, a young French nobleman. He comes to America, with nothing but a title, to make his fortune. But he has no idea of marrying money, as the thought is repugnant to him. He becomes manager of a millionaire's estate and a love affair follows with Marian, the daughter. He rescues her dog from drowning and attracts her, but she has been informed by the governess of her younger sister that Charles is a fortune hunter.

The chief dramatic scene occurs in the tower, where the two have been locked in by a drunken man. The girl denounces the hero, claiming he has tricked her, but he climbs down a rope part way and then jumps to a nearby tree. The girl is later released. In the final scenes the hero learns that he is not really poor and the girl insists she has been cut out of her father's will. So they wed after all.

Evelyn Greeley appears as Marian, Madge Evans as the younger sister, and Jack Drumier, John Hines, Kate Lester and George MacQuarrie have other roles.

"TO HELL WITH THE KAISER."

Metro Presents Screen Classic's Production Which Personally Conducts Kaiser to Hades.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is an abundance of entertainment in this seven-act Screen Classics production, "To Hell With the Kaiser." It was built for entertainment purposes, running the entire gamut of the war, and cleverly presenting both the grave and gay. The somber part comes first, and it is an expose of Hohenzollern ruthlessness not soon to be forgotten. It is another picture that will make soldiers for Uncle Sam and add to the note of sincerity that has been recently apparent in the Kaiser's prayers. The comedy comes with the second part of the number and is fairly riotous at times. This grows naturally out of the American end of the story and it would be hard to put together a better blend of humor and patriotism dealing with such grim subject matter.

In this connection, it may be said that in this production the serious scenes have not been interfered with by the humor, which is commendable, as it is a mistake to get too close to travesty in treating of the war itself. Much of the later humor occurs as part of an American soldier's dream.

The title speaks for itself. It echoes the public sentiment of the moment, but may mislead some people with the idea that it applies to a strictly burlesque production, which is not the case. The opening reels go very seriously into both the history of the German court, dating back to June 15, 1888, and the first years of the present war. The Kaiser's desire for world power is brought out, together with his personal arrogance, his cruelty to his mother and his contempt of anything that interferes with what he esteems his divine right.

Historical facts are used as a background for the fore part of the story, but there has been no attempt to stick to actual incidents. At the same time the observer feels that the intrigues of the German court and the early Belgium atrocities have in no sense been overdrawn; he feels that the murder of the clergy, the rape of women, the shattering of homes and cathedrals if anything but dimly approximates the truth. Some of the scenes are horrifying, but have been presented with commendable restriction as to painful details.

The plot itself concerns an American scientist and his two daughters in Europe at the time war breaks out. Mr. Monroe and Alice are in Berlin and Ruth Monroe is in one of the first Belgium towns raided. The latter is sacrificed to the lust of the Crown Prince himself, a rather absurd feature it seemed, and the father is afterward murdered in cold blood. Alice Monroe remains in Berlin to plan vengeance. The close of the story is fantastic in the extreme, almost too much so, in fact. Alice shoots the Crown Prince, adding still another to his alleged deaths since the war began, and she then sends information by secret wireless which leads to the capture of the Kaiser by American troops. The final scenes picture the Kaiser in his descent to hades.

Laurence Grant carries off the acting honors of the piece. He appears both as the Kaiser, whom he resembles greatly in his own natural self, and as Robert Graubel, an actor employed by the Kaiser to impersonate himself upon occasion. This gives opportunity for some interesting double-exposure scenes. Olive Tell has the part of Alice Monroe, which she plays with distinction, and Betty Howe is no less pleasing as the ill-fated sister. Earl Schenck gives a proper touch to the simpering but cold-blooded Crown Prince. John Sunderland plays the American hero. The impersonation of Von Hollweg by Carl Dane is particularly good and there are others of Von Hindenburg, Von Tirpitz, Count Zeppelin and General Pershing, of varying excellence.

The production as a whole affords ample opportunity for patriotic outbursts from the audience. There are no actual battle scenes, but thrills are furnished in other ways. The appearance of a whole field of aeroplanes in action is a notable instance.

June Mathis wrote the scenario and George Irving directed.

"BRITAIN'S BULWARKS."

Pathe's Series of Official British War Reels Maintains High Standard of Interest.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS tenth number of "Britain's Bulwarks" pictures a visit of King George to the Grand Fleet. It gives a splendid idea of the great fighting force as it lies in certain waters of the North Sea. King George is shown on an inspection trip, particular scenes being taken on board H. M. S. Queen Elizabeth, affectionately termed "Big Lizzie" by the men.

On this visit the king is seen meeting Admiral Beatty and staff. He also shakes hands with innumerable sailors, meets some of his old schoolmates and is pictured knighting Vice-Admiral Falenham. Glimpses are shown of the full fleet lying in readiness for the call to action. The farewell of the sailors to the king makes an impressive sight.

This entire series is crowded with interesting information regarding Britain's conduct of the war. It reveals much that was for a long while maintained in secret. The former numbers have shown the work of mine layers, mine sweepers and all sorts of smaller craft. But the series has not been restricted to the Navy. It has pictured many scenes along the French front, where the British troops were pictured on the march, in battle or at other work or play. It is a compilation of views that is not only vitally interesting at the present time, but will have strong historical value.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE CITY OF TEARS (Bluebird).—A five-reel story of a delicate, sympathetic sort containing a great deal of cheerfulness and good humor. Carmel Myers and Edwin August play the leading roles. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Famous Players-Lasky.

SANDY (Paramount Feature), July 1.—Taken from a story by Alice Hegan Rice this five-part picture has Jack Pickford for the hero and Louise Huff as his sweetheart. Sandy is a Scotch boy who comes to Kentucky and wins his way to success. It is a pleasing picture. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE KID IS KLEVER (Fox), June 30.—A lively five-reel number written by Randolph Lewis and directed by Paul Powell. It features George Walsh at first in his own person at a moving picture studio, and later as Kirk White, a young college man, who goes to South America and gets mixed up in a revolution. The subject makes good light entertainment. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

TANGLED LIVES (Vitagraph), July 1.—James Oliver Curwood is the author of this five-part photoplay which has a melodramatic plot and is well acted by Harry Morey, Jean Paige, and the supporting company. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

W. W. Hodkinson Corp.

ONE DOLLAR BID (Paralta), June 24.—J. Warren Kerrigan is the star of this five-part picture, which has an original theme and is capably acted. Ernest C. Warde was the director. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE HOUSE OF GOLD, June 17.—Emmy Wehlen is featured in this society melodrama of a girl who is forced by her designing mother by means of lies into an unhappy marriage. Joseph Kilgour appears in a dual role, and there is a genuine surprise near the finish. The early part of the story is slow moving, but it livens up in the last two reels.

OPPORTUNITY, July 1.—This five-reel Metro production in which Viola Dana is featured is a bright and entertaining comedy with good situations and a number of laughs. The star appears disguised as a boy throughout the greater portion of the picture, and amusing complications of a farce comedy nature ensue when a young man endeavors to make the supposed boy seize the opportunity to make a man of himself.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 32 (Mutual), June 19.—Interesting items of this issue include athletic games enjoyed by our troops; Indian chiefs attending convention at St. Paul; soldiers and kin attending mass; a commander arriving at Salonika in an aeroplane, closeup of Marechal de Legis and the tank which he drove into battle, and in which he was surrounded by the Germans for 48 hours; members of Congress staging a baseball game, and scenes with the Americans in France.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 33 (Mutual), June 25.—Among the pictured events of this issue are shown Schuman Heink singing to the troops in California, including some excellent closeups of the famous singer; a golf competition at Washington; bridge building by army engineers; photographing the recent eclipse of the sun at Denver, Col., with a huge camera 22 feet long, and Flag Day parades in different parts of the county.

HER SPOONEY AFFAIR (Strand), June 25.—An amusing little comedy featuring Billie Rhodes. This clever little actress is especially charming in this number, which pictures the love affair of a young couple who met by accident in an art gallery. The aunt of the girl helps her to work a scheme whereby she tests the young man's love for her, the young woman impersonating her aunt's maid. He promptly focuses his attentions on the pretty maid, and finally is taken into the secret.

THE GHOST OF ROSIE TAYLOR (American), July 8.—An entertaining five-reel production featuring Mary Miles Minter. The story by Josephine Daskam Bacon forms one of the best vehicles that Miss Minter has had for the display of her talent. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere.

HER ENGAGEMENT RING (Strand).—A Billie Rhodes comedy what will please the ordinary audience. The plot is not deep set or unusual, but gets by with considerable spirit. Two young men in love with the same girl buy diamond engagement rings exactly alike. The first one to propose becomes the victim of a frame-up by his rival, who mails to number one a note written to him by the girl telling him that all is over between them, and enclosing the ring. The close of the picture finds the villain in sore straits when his marriage to the girl is interrupted by her first sweetheart.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 34 (Mutual).—Interesting items of this number are orphans enjoying an outing at Cincinnati, Ohio; scenes somewhere in France showing big guns in action, annual bicycle races at Chicago; latest surf costumes at Alamedo; honoring the "Blue Devils" for heroic action in France, and nurses ready to sail for the front.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 35 (Mutual).—Interesting items of this number show the result of the crash of a troop train with a circus train; an open air swimming pool at the cantonment at Fort Bliss, Texas; baseball autographed by President Wilson sold for $5,650 to Robert F. Fitzsimons at Chicago; Boy Scouts at Baltimore learn the art of warfare; closeup of Lieut. Fonck, whose total in enemy machine destruction is 42; French cathedral wrecked by Hun shells, and a 100-mile auto derby at Chicago in which Chevrolet won.

AN EX-CANNIBAL CARNIVAL (Outing-Chester).—Amusing and interesting scenes from the Fiji Islands showing how modern has become this spot where once the white man feared to roam. The dances of the Fiji Islanders and of their sisters, the Samoans, are entertaining. The reel also includes the copra industry, and gives splendid views of the gathering and preparation of the cocoanut for its destiny. Having seen this picture no one will doubt that civilization has reached the Fijians.

KAIETEUR (Outing-Chester). — This number of the Outing-Chester pictures, which has been reviewed in a former issue of this magazine, is an unusually well-photographed scenic which illustrates in thrilling and interesting style the ascent of the river leading to the great falls of Kaieteur in British Guiana. The picture is well subtitled and interesting throughout.

MISS INFORMED (Strand), July 2.—In this number an attempt is made by the friend of a young married couple who get in wrong with the young man's papa to bring about a reconciliation. The pretty young woman in question gets hold of the wrong man and rather messes things up in the first place, also putting her lover to considerable disadvantage. The story, of course, ends happily. The comedy in this number is fair.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE DEATH SWITCH (Pathe, June 30.—Episode No. 17 of "The House of Hate." This is one of the most interesting instalments of this well-sustained serial. The chief incidents concern the likeness of Pearl to a girl about to be electrocuted. She calls at the prison to see the girl, and their identities become mixed in a mystifying way. Pearl, it seems at the last, has been electrocuted, but that supposition is naturally wrong, and gives a chance for a new twist at the close.

ANNEXING BILL (Astra-Pathe), July 7.—A five-reel subject of the light, humorous type by Edgar Franklin. This features Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale. The plot concerns a young man who refuses to propose to a girl he loves because she has just inherited a million. She makes an effort to get rid of the unwelcome money, and the result brings out an amusing story with several twists in it. Reviewed in last week's issue.

AN OZARK ROMANCE (Rolin-Pathe), July 7.—This burlesque comedy number is very good. Harold Lloyd visits the Ozarks, where he has some funny experiences with a mountain girl and her eccentric family. The episodes in the cabin are laughable, and have enough of real life about them to make them doubly entertaining.

BRITAIN'S BULWARKS NO. 9 (Pathe), July 7.—This instalment pictures a visit of King George and Queen Mary to the French front, during which they inspect the "black arts" of war such as flame throwing, the curtain of fire, tanks in action, and other modern methods of fighting. Sir Douglas Haig and King Albert, of Belgium, also appear in this interesting number.

BRITISH EAST INDIES (Post Film—Pathe).—A travel number picturing the native life in Trinidad. This gives a very intimate and entertaining idea of life in the East Indies. It shows the natives building houses, cutting hair, shaving, cooking, washing, and in other activities. Interesting views of juvenile life are also included.

KICKING THE GERM OUT OF GERMANY (Rolin - Pathe). — A laughable comic featuring Harold Lloyd, assisted by Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. Harold has a dream in the trenches during which he goes to Berlin to rescue a Red Cross maiden from the Kaiser and his gang. The dream is uproariously funny as pictured, and the subject on the whole a strong one.

Petrova Picture Company.

TEMPERED STEEL (Petrova Picture Co.).—Written by George Middleton and directed by Ralph C. Ince this five-part story of the stage is interesting, and Madame Olga Petrova is excellent in the leading role. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 29 (Universal), June 19.—A golf contest at Washington, D. C.; beach scenes at Venice, Cal.; Flag Day exercises at national capital; scenes from the French front, and cartoons by Hy Mayer are among the subjects pictured in this diversified number.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 59 (Universal), June 22.—A large number of interesting and instructive topics are treated in this number, which includes the launching of a 9,000-ton ship; establishment of new recruiting bureaus; Canadian soldiers in outdoor games; flying for the Red Cross, and scenes taken with the U. S. Marines.

IN DISGUISE (Universal), June 24.—Episode No. 13 of "The Lion's Claws." This serial keeps up its notable interest, and ranks with the best yet produced. In this number the mysterious natives again attempt to kidnap Beth. Rej Hari travels to Kadar garbed as a begger, and comes near losing his life, but makes a sensational escape! Lady Mary succeeds in clearing Captain Johnson's name.

THE MORTGAGED WIFE (Universal).—A six-reel number written by Frank Howard Clark and adapted and produced by Allan Holubar. Dorothy Phillips plays the part of Gloria Carter, whose husband turns her over to another man as security for a fifty thousand-dollar note. The story is highly improbable, but at the same time interesting, and has a dramatic conclusion. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE BUTLER'S BLUNDER (Nestor), July 1.—A comedy number, by W. Warren Schoene, featuring Eileen Sedgwick, Milton Sims and Ralph McComas. The butler sees the frequest visits of a man collecting clothing for relief purposes. He informs the jealous husband, who goes on a rampage, shooting wildly and without effect. The action in this is farcical and not particularly funny, the story not having a great deal of point to it. An average offering.

THE BORROWED BABY (Nestor), June 24.—A comedy by Tom Gibson featuring Gale Henry, Wm. Franey, and Lillian Peacock. The first two represent a childless couple, and Franey visit a baby show, where he gets into trouble over a widow's child. The baby show is amusing in itself, and the number, as a whole, has sufficient novelty to make it an appealing bit of nonsense.

QUICK TRIGGERS (Western).—A two-reel Western subject by Douglas Bronston featuring Neal Hart, Gypsy Hart, Eileen Sedgwick, and others. The events occur in a small Western town, where bad blood exists between the cowboys and a gang of rustlers. The plot is a trifle conventional, but holds the interest well. The scenes are picturesque and attractive, and the action entertaining throughout. The number, as a whole, is quite strong.

PHONEY PHOTOS (L-KO), July 3.—A two-reel comedy number, by Edwin Frazee, featuring Rena Rogers, Stanley Laurel, Neal Burns and others. The action takes place at a girls' school and concerns the efforts of two young men to marry the same girl. One of them succeeds by palming off a colored girl on his rival in a double elopement. The action if of the nonsensical, farcical sort, and while not extremely laughable, has numerous funny spots. The number is one of about average strength.

NAKED FISTS (Western and Railroad Drama), July 6.—A two-reel ranch story, featuring Neal Hart, Joe Rickson and Eileen Sedgwick. This concerns a half-breed ranch foreman who commits a crime. The hero is suspected, but clears his name after a number of exciting occurrences. An elemental plot with the usual love story.

BAD NEWS (Lyons and Moran Comedy), July 6.—Eddie Lyons appears as a reporter in this number, with Lee Moran as a cop. Eddie's photographs the cop flirting with a girl and publishes the picture, but the girl happens to be a daughter of the newspaper publisher. This is a good light plot, capably handled, though the close is not strong.

HELL BENT (Universal Special), July 6.—This six-reel Western number features Harry Carey as "Cheyenne" Harry. It was written and produced by Jack Ford and contains a pleasing combination of humor and thrills. Neva Gerber, Vester Pegg and Joseph Harris are also in the cast. Reviewed in last week's issue.

HER BODY IN BOND (Universal).—A five-reel subject, featuring Mae Murray, Kenneth Harlan and Al Roscoe. This begins with a pleasing prologue in which the principals appear as Pierrot, Pierrette and Harlequin. Later comes the modern story, in which the villain tries to win the love of Peggy Blondin from her husband, who is ill in the West. The story is a strongly built one of the emotional type. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE PAINTED LILY (Triangle), June 30.—Alma Rubens has a congenial role in this five-part picture which has been cleverly directed by Thomas N. Heffron. The story was written by Catherine Carr, and deals with the underworld. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

THE FLY GOD (Triangle), June 30.—A "Red" Saunders story, this five-part picture is full of kindly feeling and humor. Roy Stewart plays "Red." The play was directed by Cliff Smith. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

World Pictures Corporation.

TINSEL (World Pictures), July 8.—A five-reel subject of the smart society type featuring Kitty Gordon, Muriel Ostriche, Frank Mayo, and others. The story, based on a narrative by Fred Jackson, is very entertaining and splendidly presented. It is a good example of the society story with an inoffensive sex interest. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

THE AGONIES OF AGNES (Marie Dressler Comedy), July 8.—A two-reel comedy of the burlesque type featuring Marie Dressler. This starts off well, but later the humor contains too much coarseness to be good. The subject is one that suffers from broad horse-play which never becomes really laughable.

SOME JOB (World-Fay Tincher Comedy).—This second two-reel comedy of the Fay Tincher series is a great improvement over the first release. Fay appears as an actress whom force of circumstances compels to act as waitress in a small-town hotel. Her adventures here and at the army cantonment are amusing. The marching of the men into the ocean gets a laugh. Fay winds up things by catching some German spies.

Stock Actors in Vicious Brawl.

Although actors were in times gone by listed as "strollers and other vagabonds" and forced to have their ears pierced, today they are highly valued members of any community in which they may elect to live. Therefore, consternation and amazement were registered throughout the entire Metro Sixty-first Street studio, when two actors, each in the support of a prominent star, so far forgot themselves as to allow a feud of long standing, occasioned no doubt by some petty professional jealousy, to get the better of them and come to blows.

One of the big moments in "L'Occident," Mme. Nazimova's current Screen Classics, Inc. production, was being photographed when a piercing shriek, followed by frantic cries for help brought every one running to the disgraceful scene. Thomas Agonistes and George Spelvin were in what, to the appalled onlookers, appeared to be a death grapple.

Fearless members of the several companies rushed in and finally separated them and now George Spelvin, the Metro parrot, is kept securely locked in his cage, while Thomas Agonistes, a leader of the Maltese gang, has been relegated to the engine room.

The Commodore's Curiosity.

J. Stuart Blackton's production plans include a little experimenting to prove to his own satisfaction whether the box office value is in the star's name or the play.

He has long been convinced that "The Play's the Thing" and first to be considered, but he also agrees with those who claim that a big name has its effect on the box office line.

He does not believe, however, that a star can hold up a poor play.

TO PROVE OUR ASSERTION

That the Convention Numbers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD enjoy a lasting reference value, we offer the following testimony of Mr. Chas. Bass, President, Bass Camera Co., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

I have received your letters announcing your special issue and have decided to take half page space the same as I did last year. You will be surprised to know that about a week ago we received an inquiry in letter form from a party out of town, who inquired for our price on a new moving picture camera of a certain make. Attached to his letter was our half page ad. which appeared in your convention number of July 21st, last year, and which had been clipped from that issue by the writer This fact makes me feel all the more certain that advertising in special issues has an added pulling power.

Now! Wouldn't you like to know that the medium in which you have bought advertising space is not going to be scanned casually and discarded?

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD WON'T be discarded—it will be kept as a reference guide.

Forms close Monday, July 8th.

No change in rates for the Special Issue.

"ANNEXING BILL."

Pathe Presents Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in a Spirited Astra Production by Edgar Franklin.

Cast.

Enid Barwell.....Gladys Hulette
Billy .....Creighton Hale
Geo. Frayne.....Mark Smith
Mrs. Frayne.....Margaret Greene

Directed by Albert Parker.

The Story: Billy, a young lawyer, is in love with Enid Barwell, an impecunious art student. It is reported that Enid's maiden aunt was drowned and that Enid being her sole heir, has inherited a million dollars. When Billy hears of this he says that he will not marry Enid. So Enid, who is very much in love with Billy, decides to hand over the money to a friend's husband who has been most unsuccessful in investments. As the transfer of the money is about to be completed, the aunt appears. Then it develops that the woman who says she is the aunt is an imposter. How the tangle is straightened out and true love comes into its own is ingeniously depicted in the climax.

Feature Gladys Hulette as Enid Barwell and Creighton Hale as Billy.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Tricky Photoplot Speeds Interest in a Million Dollar Legacy to Surprise Finish.
When Millions Interfere With True Love Amazing Results Ensue.
Faint Heart Nearly Misses a Million Dollars and True Happiness.
How An Unexpected Million Nearly Upset Dan Cupid's Campaign.
Photoplay of Original Plot Teems With Entertainment Interest.
Novelty in Plot Construction Sustains Interest to Happy Ending.

Stunt Suggestions: Try "She Wanted to Lose a Million Dollars" as a catchphrase for your newspaper work. For window work ask in bold lettering: "Do You Want to Get Rid of a Million Dollars? See 'Annexing Bill' at (house and date) and Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale will tell you how."

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color. Also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

Released July 7.

By the time the boat has reached England, Schuyler is so firm in the vampire's web that he forgets all about his wife and child, and goes with the temptress to Italy. They return, and despite all obstacles the vampire clings to her victim until he is no more. His death only makes her smile.

Feature Theda Bara as the vampire and Edward Jose as John Schuyler.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Revised Version of the Great Drama That Made Theda Bara First Among Vampires.
Intense Melodrama Based on Kipling's Famous Vampire Poem.
Big Moments in Great Melodrama Will Thrill and Excite Emotion.
Theda Bara First of the Vampires Presents Revival of Her First Triumph.
A Rag, a Bone, a Hank of Hair—and Theda Bara, Empress of Vampires.
Theda Bara, Empress of Vampires, Acclaimed the World's Greatest Screen Queen.

Stunt Suggestions: In all advertising recall the original success of this production, and add that it has been retitled and edited. Use the "Kiss me you fool" for a catchline in your newspaper work, and print it up on cards in bold type, with the advertisement in small six point at the bottom well away from the line. Get these out a week or ten days in advance and make a liberal distribution. If you can arrange it use red lights and crimson hangings or drapes for the lobby. At least make a plentiful pictorial display.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby display, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheet and mats. (Mats can be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City. Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.)

"TINSEL."

World-Pictures Presents Kitty Gordon, Supported by Frank Mayo and Muriel Ostriche in a Story of a Woman Who Knew All the Types of Men.

Cast.

Princess Sylvia Carzoni.....Kitty Gordon
Ruth Carmichael.....Muriel Ostriche
Jefferson Kane.....Frank Mayo
Richard Carmichael.....Bradley Barker
Bobby Woodward.....Ralph Graves
Stephen Roche.....Geo. De Carlton
Dickey Flemming.....Tony Merlo
Denise.....Marie Nau

Directed by Oscar Apfel.

The Story: Divorced from her first husband and widowed by the death of her second, the Princess Sylvia Carzoni demands the custody of her daughter by her first marriage. Ruth has been brought up in the belief that her mother is dead, but learns the truth and persuades her father to permit her to go, leaving behind her youthful admirer, Bobby Woodward. Sylvia shows Ruth the fashionable world and the young girl very nearly falls into the trap laid for her by Jefferson Kane, a multi-millionaire, but is rescued by her mother, who explains that she has sought her daughter's education that the child may be spared the errors of her own youth, due to inexperience, and come to appreciate tinsel at its real value.

Feature Kitty Gordon as Princess Sylvia Carzoni and Frank Mayo as Jefferson Kane.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Kitty Gordon's Back Again With Stirring Society Photoplay.
Proving That Money Cannot Make Up for Lack of Love.
Photoplay With Everything You Want in Screen Entertainment.
Story of a Woman Who Knows All Types of Men.
Would You Want Your Daughter to Know All About the Wicked World?
All Mothers and Daughters Should See This Photoplay.

Stunt Suggestions: The synopsis in the press sheet gives some splendid leaders which may be reproduced on cards, in the program and newspaper advertisements, such as "A young sinner makes an old saint,"etc. Play up these lines to pique curiosity but not in such a manner as to suggest that the play is too sensational. There are four or five good lines. Make these the basis of your advertising campaign, playing up the star and her support.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Free advance poster. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Two-color heralds. One and two-column cuts. Slides. Press sheet.

Released July 8.

"ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS."

Greater Vitagraph Presents Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres in a Charming Story by O. Henry.

Cast.

Eddie Gillian.....Edward Earle
Margaret Hayden.....Agnes Ayres
Lotta Lauriere.....Florence Deshon
Old Bryson.....Templar Saxe
Mrs. Murphy.....Anne Brody

Directed by Kenneth Webb.

The Story: Eddie's wealthy uncle dies and leaves him only $1,000 because of his behavior. It is stipulated in the will that he must give an accounting to the executor as to how the money is spent. Eddie goes to Margaret Hayden, who was his uncle's ward and who has received a bequest of only $10, for advice. Although she loves him she declines to give him help because of his fascination for Lotta Lauriere, an actress. Lotta refuses to accept a present from him to cost his inheritance on the ground that her admirers do not place a limit of $1,000 on gifts for her, so he gives his bequest to Margaret, telling her that his uncle had left each an equal amount. At the lawyer's office where Eddie has gone to make his accounting, he is told that according to a codicil to the will if the expenditure be prudent and unselfish he is to receive $50,000 and a deed to the uncle's will, otherwise Margaret is to be the beneficiary. Realizing the comforts the money would bring to Margaret, Eddie tells the lawyer that he lost his inheritance gambling. But the lawyer sees into Eddie's scheme when Margaret, who is summoned to the office, tells him about the $1,000, and the story ends with Margaret and Eddie sharing equally the uncle's fortune.

Feature Edward Earle as Eddie Gillian and Agnes Ayres as Margaret Hayden.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Vitagraph Pictures Another O. Henry Story of Human Nature and Real Life.
Love and Dollars Fail to Mix in the Emulsion of Happiness.
Money Means Nothing in a Genuine attack of True Love.
O. Henry's Great Story of the Simple Life Truly Reflected.
Popular Story by O. Henry Translated Skillfully to the Screen.
How a Speeder and Spendthrift Halted When Romance Signaled.

Stunt Suggestions: The O. Henry series is now so well known that you have only to hitch up to the previous productions to get your sale. Make reference to the series in all advertising. Use a good display of paper, and decorate the lobby with stills.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.

Released July 8.

"OTHER MEN'S DAUGHTERS."

William Fox Presents Peggy Hyland in a Play With One Moral and Many Thrills.

Cast.

Shirley Reynolds.....Peggy Hyland
Shirley's father.....Eric Mayne
Shirley's mother.....Elizabeth Garrison
Lola Wayne.....Regina Quinn
Lola's father.....Riley Hatch
Trask.....Frank Goldsmith
Richard Ormsby.....Robert Middlemas

Directed by Carl Harbaugh.

The Story: Shirley Reynolds is in a convent. Her mother calls and tells her she has secured a divorce because of her husband's acts. Shirley goes to her father's studio and finds a gay party. A girl called Lola Wayne is dancing to the applause of the men and women around Shirley's father. Lola's father enters. Seeing the degradation to which his daughter has fallen he plans to strike Reynolds by dragging Shirley down. A stirring series of events follow. Shirley gets out of many traps, brings her father to his senses, reunites him to her mother and begins a romance of her own.

Feature Peggy Hyland as Shirley Reynolds.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Convent Bred Girl Battles to Win Her Father from His Dissipated Associates.
Great Moral Battle With Father and Daughter Contesting Forces.
Stirring Drama of Human Interest Pictured in Convincing Scenes.
Thrilling Representation of Gay Life in Most Great Cities.
Striking Contrasts Between Convent Life and Social Gaieties.
Powerful Human Play Acted and Screened With Extreme Artistry.

Stunt Suggestions: Plan your newspaper work with catchlines along the lines of "From a Convent to the Swamp of Souls," and play up the situation of the man who seeks to lure an innocent young girl to revenge his own daughter's degradation. Don't play the situation up too strongly, but present it clearly. You will have to sell this through your newspaper and throwaway work, so concentrate on that.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheet and mats (mats can be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City). Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

Released July 7.

"TANGLED LIVES."

Greater Vitagraph Presents James Oliver Curwood's Newest Story With Harry Morey and Other Blue Ribbon Favorites.

Cast.

John Howland.....Harry Morey
Peter Hyde.....Albert Roccardi
Paul Westcott.....George Majeroni
Lola Maynard.....Jean Paige
Hilda Howland.....Betty Blythe
Cora West.....Eulalie Jensen
Colonel West.....Charles Kent

Directed by Paul Scardon.

The Story: Cora West, wife of Colonel West, sees in Mrs. Howland's infatuation for Paul Westcott, a young bachelor, a chance to ingratiate herself with Mr. Howland, an architect, with whom she is in love. Cora embraces him, but Howland repulses her. Colonel West, seeing his wife in Howland's arms, thinks that she has deserted him and commits suicide. When Lola Maynard, a destitute young girl, is attacked by thugs, Howland goes to her rescue and offers her the shelter of his home, but Mrs. Howland refuses to agree, so the girl is taken in by Peter Hyde, an aged scientist and friend of Howland. Cora invites Howland to a lawn party and shows him his wife and Westcott in embrace. A fight ensues and Howland is repudiated by his wife and arrested. While he is in prison Mrs. Howland secures a divorce, and upon his release Howland hears that she is to marry Westcott. He goes to Hyde's laboratory to secure a weapon with which to kill Westcott, but a tragedy is averted by Lola and Hyde, who drug him, for the latter has planned to avenge his friend. But when Hyde reaches Westcott's home he hears that a bolt of lightning has exacted the toll of retribution, having killed Westcott and blinded for life the woman he was to marry. Howland and Lola find happiness in each other's love.

Feature Harry Morey as John Howland and Jean Paige as Lola Maynard.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Silly Flirtation by Two Married Women Leads to Disastrous Results.
Truly the Devil Finds Plenty of Work for Idle Minds and Hands.
Fate Meets Heavy Handicap in Untangling Disastrous Situation.
Photoplay of Excellent Purpose Develops Excellent Entertainment.
Sociological Problem Play Teaches Beneficial and Moral Lesson.
Gripping Photoplay Maintains Interest Through Exciting Sequences.

Stunt Suggestions: The author is favorably known to photoplaygoers, so use his name in equal prominence with the stars. The story is best advertised through newspaper publicity and the paper supplied by the company. It does not offer much material for stunts.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.

She is surprised to hear that Rosy Taylor has been dead for a long time, and, puzzled as to the identity of the housekeeper, Mrs. Du Vivier has her brother, Jacques Le Clerc, look into the matter. As a result of his investigations Rhoda is taken for a thief by Jacques and arrested. But she escapes and returns to Mrs. Du Vivier's house and dons one of the pretty gowns left by the owner for her mysterious servant. In this attire she is mistaken by Jacques for his sister and he kisses her. This launches a romance which reaches its culmination in the discovery that Rhoda is heiress of her millionaire uncle, Joseph Sayles. Of course Le Clerc wins her after some pains.

Feature Mary Miles Minter as Rhoda Eldridge Sayles and Alan Forrest as Jacques Le Clerc.

"NO MAN'S LAND."

Metro Presents Bert Lytell and Anna Q. Nilsson in a Spirited Version of Louis Joseph Vance's Novel of the Same Title.

Cast.

Garret Cope.....Bert Lytell
Katherine Gresham.....Anna Q. Nilsson
Henry Miller (otherwise Heinrich Mueller) .....Charles Arling
Mrs. Emily Brayton.....Mollie McConnell
Sidney Dundas.....Eugene Pallette
Pembroke Van Tuyl....Edward Alexander

Directed by William S. Davis.

The Story: Garret Cope is in love with Katherine Gresham, but her aunt, Mrs. Brayton, wants her to marry Henry Miller, a scientific investigator, whose real name is Heinrich Mueller. In a card game Mueller kills Pembroke Van Tuyl and by contriving with Sidney Dundas succeeds in having Garret accused of the crime. While Garret is in prison Katherine yields to her aunt's demands and marries Mueller. Dundas becomes conscience-stricken and his confession results in the release of Garret who, with Appleby, a secret service operative, cruises to an island in the Pacific known as No Man's Land. There Garret meets Katherine and learns that Mueller is supplying ammunition to the enemy. Mueller, notified of Garret's presence, instructs his Celestial servants to stab the intruder as he sleeps. Garret, who has overheard the plot, captures the Chinaman as he approaches, gags him and places him in bed. A second Chinaman appears and taking the one wrapped in the blankets for Garret, kills him. Garret is saved from death at the hands of Mueller by the arrival of American sailors who had been summoned. Mueller and his clique are made prisoners, and Garret and Katherine sail for home abroad an American man-of-war.

Feature Bert Lytell as Garret Cope and Anna Q. Nilsson as Katherine Gresham.

Stunt Suggestions: Here is a war story without the usual battle scenes. It should prove a novelty. Play up the fact and also feature prominently the name of the author. To emphasize the fact that this story is not located in the theater of battle, draw a map of the Pacific with the American shore line and indicate the location of the supposed island. Work with the booksellers on window displays. In all of your work labor to make the prospective patron realize that this is something better than another of those stories with a war background.

"SANDY."

Jesse L. Lasky Presents Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in a Story by Alice Hegan Rice, Author of Lovey Mary, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch and Other Fiction and Screen Successes.

Cast.

Sandy Kilday.....Jack Pickford
Ruth Nelson.....Louise Huff
Judge Hollis.....James Neill
Mrs. Hollis.....Edythe Chapman
Dr. Fenton.....C. H. Geldart
Annette Fenton.....Julia Faye
Aunt Nelson.....Louise Hutchinson
Carter Nelson.....George Beranger
Ricks Wilson.....Raymond Hatton
Aunt Melvy.....Jennie Lee
Jimmy Reed.....Parkes Jones
Sid Gray.....Don Lykes

Directed by George Melford.

The Story: Sandy Kilday, a Scotch lad, comes to this country as a stowaway in search of his fortune. Upon his arrival in New York he meets Ricks Wilson, a man of doubtful character, and they go into the peddling business. Later Wilson suggests that they go to Kentucky to play the races and Sandy gleefully accepts for he knows in that state lives Ruth Nelson, whom he met on board the ship when he was taken from his hiding place and disgraced before the passengers. In Kentucky Sandy becomes the adopted son of Judge Hollis and three years later he meets Ruth at a country fair. Ruth has a dissipated brother who causes her much anxiety and his escapades are the means of introducing numerous dramatic thrills in the story, in which Sandy and Ruth are the central figures. Sandy is arrested for resisting the officers of the law when an attempt is made to burn alive a man accused of murder, and whom Sandy knows is innocent, but finally order comes out of chaos and all ends happily.

Feature Jack Pickford as Sandy Kilday and Louise Huff as Ruth Nelson.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Exciting Scenes Incident to Thrilling Phases of Life in Old Kentucky.

Louise Huff Shares Stellar Honors With Jack Pickford in Splendid Photoplay.
Absorbing Story of a Gritty Boy Who Won Out Against Adversity.

Stunt Suggestions: Make the usual arrangements with the book stores. Play up the fact that this was the last picture made before Jack Pickford enlisted in the Naval Reserves. Dye straw blue and use it to frame stills of the story with "Sandy," a story of the blue grass country, and the house and date line. The blue straw can also be used to decorate the lobby with the same allusion to the locale of the scenes. If you can borrow a local trotting or running horse use it for street work with a blanket carrying the announcement of the story.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.
Released July 1.

"OPPORTUNITY."

Metro Presents Viola Dana in a Story by Edgar Franklyn Originally Appearing in the All Story Weekly in Fiction Form.

Cast.

Mary Willard.....Viola Dana
Anthony Fry.....Hale Hamilton
Henry Clay Willard.....Frank Currier
Johnson Bowler.....Edward Abeles
Beatrice Bowler.....Sally Crute
Robert Hitchins.....Joseph Burke
Wilkins.....Frank Lyon
Felice.....Elsie MacLeod

Directed by John H. Collins.

The Story: Anthony Fry is a strong believer in the theory that opportunity comes once to every man. He and his friend, Johnson Bowler, attend a prize fight, and Fry's theory is given such a severe jolt when one of the fighters in the preliminary bout fails to live up to his advantage that Fry remarks to Bowler he will give the opportunity of a lifetime to the man who takes the vacant seat in the box nearby. Mary Willard, a lover of the "manly art of self-defense," dons her brother's clothes and thus attired goes to the fight and takes the seat referred to by Fry. Fry approaches Mary, who, dressed in men's clothes, resembles a kid, and the others, believing that he is annoying the boy, proffer their help. This precipitates a free-for-all fight, but in the melee Fry, Bowler and "the kid" escape to the hotel where Fry has bachelor apartments and where Mary becomes involved in many humorous and exciting entanglements. But in the end the situation is cleared up and Fry learns to his surprise that Mary is the daughter of Henry Clay Willard, his competitor in the liniment manufacturing business. Fry and Mary, who had meanwhile fallen in love with each other, see the opportunity of a lifetime and plan an early marriage.

Feature Viola Dana as Mary Willard and Hale Hamilton as Anthony Fry.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Unique Adventure of Reckless Society Girl Leads to Surprising Conclusion.
Popular Serial Story Furnishes Gripping Photoplay.
The Screen Put to Engaging Use in Revealing Charming Novelty in Photoplot.
Oddity in Photoplot Provides Ideal Screen Entertainment.
Surprising Finish to a Society Girl's Reckless Adventure.
Seeing This Photoplay Is Getting the Most Out of Rare Opportunity.

Stunt Suggestions: There are many angles to this story that can be played up for advertising, the girl's interest in prize fights, the amateur detective and his "trunk mystery" and the kidnapping of the supposed boy. Play up all of these in your newspaper stories and advertisements, making a special story of each. Perhaps the local librarian can help you to a copy of Ingalls poem. Have a verse or two copied for a lobby display and announce that the story is suggested by the poem. Above all, lay stress upon the fact that it is a fast-moving comedy. Divide your window work, playing up the boxing with the dealer in sporting goods, detective stories for the book seller and the trunk mystery with concerns handling trunks.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten-minute novel. Slide. Heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10 sepia, 11x14 sepia, 22x28 colored. Cuts.

Released July 1.

"THE FINGER OF JUSTICE."

The Arrow Film Corporation Presents the Story of a Pastor's Powerful Protest Against Politically Protected Privateers.

Cast.

Noel Delaney.....Crane Wilbur
William Randall.....Henry Barrows
Yvonne.....Jane O'Rorke
Mary.....Mae Gaston
Edith.....Leota Lorraine
Betty.....Beulah Booker
Louise Bradley.....Belma Whitman
Mrs. Bradley.....Jean Hathoway
Flip, Randall's protege.....John Oaker
Jack Randall.....Jack Lott

Directed by William Chaudet.

The Story: William Randall, the political boss of a big city, permits vice to flourish as he profits greatly thereby. Noel Delaney, a minister who is known as the fighting parson, wages war against the "system." His sermon, which is published in all the dailies, fills Randall and his coterie with terror. Mary, the sweetheart of the minister during his college days, who disappeared and had fallen under the evil grip, decides to aid the pastor, and is taken into the home of one of the church workers. Flip, one of the underworld gang, lures Betty, Randall's daughter, to one of the dives. Her identity is unknown to him. Mary sees her and informs Delaney, who rushes into the dive, and rescues Betty. Randall enters, recognizes his daughter, and in a fight with Flip he is killed. Mary is redeemed, and Delaney's vigorous fight against vice has so aroused the city's wrath that the "system" meets its death.

Feature Crane Wilbur as the Rev. Noel Delaney and Mae Gaston as Mary.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Great Sociological Question Developed in Convincing Sequence by Entertaining Photoplay.
The Way of the Underworld Revealed Under Pitiless Light of Exposure.
How a Clergyman Fought the Powers of Evil With Weapons of Righteousness.
Evil in Conflict With Righteousness Meets Unfailing Defeat.
How the Other Half Live Revealed in Convincing Photoplay.
Sociological Problem Discussed in Photoplay Revelations.

Stunt Suggestions: Use the alliteration in the subhead for a lobby announcement with a single deep initial "P" for the six words. Use startling catchphrases such as "It might have been your own daughter" to head your newspaper and street publicity. Make a web of thread or tape for lobby or window display with pictures of pretty girls caught in its meshes. If you can add a large spider, so much the better. Advertise that all stage struck girls should see this picture. You may be able to interest some local minister in the film and get him to use the theme for a text for a sermon, or you can make an elaborate campaign with the anti-vice society if your town boasts one. The story can be worked either as propaganda or sensation. The former treatment is to be preferred.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheet, two three-sheet, one six-sheet, one twenty-four sheet. Cuts. Press book. Slides. Heralds. Lobby display 8x10, 11x14, 22x28.

"THE CLAWS OF THE HUN."

Thomas H. Ince Presents Charles Ray in the Story of an Unintentional Slacker Who Found Danger Even at Home.

Cast.

John Stanton.....Charles Ray
Virginia Lee.....Jane Novak
Alfred Werner.....Robert McKim
Muriel Charters.....Dorcas Matthews
Godfrey Stanton....Melbourne MacDowell
Mrs. Godfrey Stanton....Mollie McConnell

Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.

The Story: John Stanton has long desired to enlist, but his mother, who is ill and fearful, exacts a promise from him not to enlist because she could not resist his departure. He is called a slacker by his friends and when his sweetheart, Jane Novak, treats him coldly he is in despair. In his father's safe reposes the formula of a high explosive entrusted to him by the United States Government, and Stanton learns and frustrates the plot of several German spies to obtain possession of it. When Stanton's mother comes to a full realization of Hun espionage in this country and of the necessity of combatting enemies abroad as well as at home, Stanton is permitted to refute the charge of being a slacker by enlisting.

Feature Charles Ray as John Stanton and Jane Novak as Virginia Lee.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Dramatic Episodes in Patriotic Photoplay Furnish Invigorating Inspirations of Loyalty.
German Spy Plot Mingled With Romantic Adventure in Thrilling Photoplay.
How a Pacifist Father Was Turned Into a Fighting Loyalist.
Lessons in Loyalty to Pacifist Fathers and Mothers.
Excluded from France Loyal Chap Starts His Own War at Home.
Claws of the Hun Clipped by Loyal American in Realistic Photoplay.

Stunt Suggestions: This picture, while striking, does not offer much opportunity for stunting and can best be sold through newspaper work and appeal to the general interest aroused by the situation in which the hero finds himself. Adopt a controversial tone and ask if it is right for a man to stay home because enlistment might mean his mother's life, but work hard along those lines with newspaper work, circulars and even form letters asking an opinion.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Released July 8.

"A GOOD LOSER."

Triangle Presents the Gripping Story of Two Men Who Love the Same Woman and a Third Who Thought He Did.

Cast.

Harry Littlejohn.....Lee Hill
Doctor Jim.....Arthur Millett
Evelyn Haselton.....Peggy Pearce
Jack Monroe.....Dick Rosson
McCoy .....Graham Peter
"Long William".....Pete Morrison

Directed by Dick Donaldson.

The Story: Harry Littlejohn, seeking his fortune in the west, contracts pneumonia and is nursed back to health through the efforts of "Doctor Jim." He and the physician spend much of their leisure together and with Jack Monroe form an inseparable trio. The Doctor goes east to visit a dying friend, who chances to be the father of the girl Harry loves and who has half promised herself to him. But Harry is making slow progress, and she falls in love with the physician. It is a shock to Harry to find that the bride of his best friend is the woman he himself loves, but he keeps silent. Jack shoots him and is about to shoot the girl when Harry kills him. Doctor Jim, through misunderstanding, thinks that the positions are reversed and beside Jack's dead body vows to punish his slayer, only to find that it was Harry who had given his life in defense of Evelyn's honor, a good loser to the last.

Feature Peggy Pearce as Evelyn Haselton and Arthur Millett as Doctor Jim.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Love Works in a Mysterious Way to Bring Happiness Out of Discontent.
Faithful Heart Waits Long for the Blessing of Requited Love.
Engaging Story of Man's Devotion Finally Rewarded.
Weak Woman Saved from Folly by Strange Meanderings of Fate.
Stirring Drama of Love and Devotion Brought to Happy Ending.
Gripping Drama of Thrills and Excitement Skillfully Acted.

Stunt Suggestions: Get the music store to make a display of violins with a card reading "If your girl won't say 'yes,' learn to play the violin and win her. See how Jack Monroe won Dr. Jim's life in 'A Good Loser' at (house and date) and you'll see how it works." Use sensational catchlines for the newspaper advertising such as "Physician vows to 'get' man who saved his wife from shame."

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle Magazine. Press sheet.
Released July 7.

"SHARK MONROE."

Thomas H. Ince Presents William S. Hart as a Seafaring Man in a Story of Alaska and the Seal Fisheries by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Cast.

"Shark" Monroe.....William S. Hart
Marjorie Hilton.....Katherine MacDonald
"Big" Baxter.....Joe Singleton
"Onion" McNab.....Bertholde Sprotte
Webster Hilton.....George McDaniel

Directed by William S. Hart.

The Story: In a waterfront saloon "Shark" Monroe, a man of brutal passions and master of the schooner, "The Gull," meets Marjorie Hilton and her intoxicated brother, Webster. Webster has spent all their money in drink, and Monroe gives them passage to the north, where Marjorie meets "Big" Baxter, a trafficker in women, who aids her brother. Believing him to be sincere, Marjorie welcomes his attention, but later when Monroe, who knows Baxter's real designs, hears that she is to marry Baxter he interposes himself as a bridegroom to save her and takes her to the next camp. There he tells Marjorie that the ceremony was not legal, and she is about to leave when her brother, who had been informed of the trick, and Baxter appear. A fight ensues and Monroe allows himself to be beaten by Webster. Monroe kills Baxter for his repeated insults and is leaving when Marjorie avows her love. Taking her in his arms, he says that when they call a minister he will be a genuine one.

Feature William S. Hart as "Shark" Monroe and Katherine MacDonald as Marjorie Hilton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: "Bill" Hart Abandons the Plains to Become Hero of Thrilling Sea Story.
How a Human Icicle Was Melted by a Winsome Woman's Smiles.
Hardy Mariner Reduced to Submission by Winsome Womanhood.
Battle Royal Between Sturdy Manhood and Woman's Wiles.
Ever Popular William S. Hart in Entirely New Characterization.
Hero of a Hundred Prairie Adventures Turns to the Sea for Photoplotting.

Stunt Suggestions: Play up the name of the star and the fact that this story presents him as the captain of a Hell ship, a new character for this star. For a window display get a few feet of heavy cable, an inch or more in diameter and place on a card with the line "She lashed him with this and he fell in love with her. See how it all happened to Big Bill Hart in 'Shark' Monroe at (house and date)." Another effective window stunt would be to use Hart's face framed in toy boats or cut-out pictures of ships with the statement that Hart has gone to sea. Make a special deal with the fur store to display stills showing sea scenes and a card explaining that the Hart picture shows how the seal skins are obtained.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.
Released July 8.

"EVERYWOMAN'S HUSBAND."

Triangle Presents Gloria Swanson in the Story of a Woman Who Made Her Husband a Means to An End.

Cast.

Edith Emerson.....Gloria Swanson
Frank Emerson.....Joe King
Mrs. Rhodes.....Lillian Langdon
Jonathan Rhodes.....George Pearce
Della Marshall.....Lillian West
Reginald Dunstan.....Jack Livingston

Directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton.

The Story: The domineering attitude of Mrs. Jonathan Rhodes toward her husband makes his home life so unpleasant that he seeks, unknown to his wife and daughter, Edith, the comforts of real home atmosphere in the apartment of a mistress. Shortly after Edith's marriage to Frank Emerson, an aggressive business man in the silk trade, the dominance of her mother is reflected in her actions, with the result that Frank establishes a relationship with Della Marshall. Edith begins to see the fallacy of her method of "managing" a husband upon the death of her father, when it is discovered that he sought happiness in the home of another woman because of her mother's overbearing manners. Frank's partner, Reginald Dunstan, falls in love with Edith, and through his scheming she learns of the relations between her husband and Della Marshall. The situation reaches a climax in the country home of the Emerson's, where the screams of Edith, who is struggling in the arms of Dunstan, attract Frank, who has been seeking pleasure in the company of Della Marshall and who has just become cognizant of his weakness. After ordering Dunstan and Della Marshall from his home, Frank and Edith begin life anew.

Feature Gloria Swanson as Edith Emerson and Joe King as Frank, her husband.

Stunt Suggestions: Advertise that on a stated date you will have a story of particular interest to henpecked husbands and domineering wives. Do not offer any further information for a few days and then add that the story is this release and give some of the details, withholding the climax and explaining that how it worked may be seen in the play. Get out some small cards with "If your wife is the boss——" in large type and following with "bring her to see 'Everywoman's Husband' at the (house and date). It will help you." Add in another line of large type, "If you're the boss" and in smaller letters, "make her come and see it." The same idea can be used for a throwaway. Decorate a lobby frame or special panel with a few flatirons, a rolling pin and similar household weapons. Letter in "'Everywoman's Husband' knows what these mean, but come in and see the play. It's worth while."

"THE EMPTY CAB."

Bluebird Presents Franklyn Farnum in a Mystery Story That Has An Ending You Cannot Guess.

Cast.

Henry Egbert Xerxes..Franklyn Farnum
The Girl.....Eileen Percy
Ramsey, the city editor..Harry DeMoore
"Big Ed".....Frank Brownlee
The Bartender.....Harry Lindsey
The Detective.....Fred Kelsey

Directed by Douglas Gerrard.

The Story: Henry Egbert Xerxes is the son of the proprietor of the Times, and his first assignment as a cub reporter was the rounding up a gang of counterfeiters. The only clue to the clique that the city editor gave him was that the Red Dog Inn was their rendezvous. Coming out of the office building he sees a girl, whom he recognizes as the young lady who tried to pass a counterfeit coin earlier in the day, being dragged into a taxicab. He follows in another car, but is surprised to find in overhauling the taxi that it is empty. Undaunted he trails a tough looking character to a lonely country house where he locates the girl who was pulled into the taxi. He aids her to escape after subduing a number of toughs. Hurrying back to the office he writes a vivid account of the affair, but is astonished to find the next day that not a line of it appears in print. At his father's office he is told that the hold-up and its attendant results were nothing but a trick to break him into the newspaper business.

Feature Franklyn Farnum as Henry Egbert Xerxes and Eileen Percy as the Girl.

Program and Advertising Phrases: How a Cub Reporter Scored a "Scoop" That Was Never Printed in His Paper.

Stunt Suggestions: Possibly the bank can lend you some counterfeit coin. If it cannot, take any doubtful looking money and make a window display with a card: "These are some of the coins passed by a gang of counterfeiters Henry Egbert Xerxes undertook to run down as his first assignment on his father's paper in "The Empty Cab." If you want to be mystified clear to the climax, see this story; (It's a Bluebird, with Franklyn Farnum) at (house and date)." In your newspaper work announce that this is one story where the audience does not know how it will end. Do not reveal the surprise in your announcements and do not admit patrons during the showing of the last reel.

Dr. Anna Gates.....Carey Hastings
Jimmy.....Stephen Carr
Le Grande.....Iva Shepard
Walter McLean.....Frank Crayne
Sadie, the big soprano..Harriet McConnell
Scatchett.....Marie McConnell
The Master.....George Moss
Pecardo, a bandit.....John Hopkins

Directed by John B. O'Brien.

The Story: Harmony Wells, an American girl, goes to Paris to study the violin. With her money gone she is compelled to seek quarters in the pension house. There she becomes acquainted with Dr. Peter Byrne, an American surgeon studying abroad. The doctor falls in love with Harmony, but she places her career above love, and refuses his offer of marriage. Jimmy, the doctor's little crippled patient, is dangerously ill, and the boy asks Harmony to play for him. Realizing that his end is near, Harmony notifies his mother, a famous dancer, who deserted her husband and child for a career, appealing to her to come. But she arrives too late. Some time after the funeral and just about the time that Harmony is to make her professional debut she meets Jimmy's mother in the graveyard. The mother gives Harmony advice regarding the comparative values of careers and love. Sensing that genuine happiness does not at all times lie in popularity, Harmony rushes back to Dr. Byrne, who is about to return to New York, and tells him that she has decided to become his wife.

Feature Doris Kenyon as Harmony Wells and Hugh Thompson as Dr. Peter Byrne.

Stunt Suggestions: Make the usual drive on the library and book stores and try for the literary societies if you have any. Advertise well in advance with special paper and newspaper specials, teasing the latter with "How Long is the Street of Seven Stars?" varying with "Where Is ——?" "Who Lives on——" and similar phrases. Decorate the lobby with groups of seven gold stars, or use a dummy lamp post with "Seven Stars" painted where the street name should come, with a fist pointing into the house. The plot will give plenty of material for press stories, and Mrs. Rinehart's name should be played up.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one and three sheets. One style each six and twenty-four sheets. Slides. Two styles each one and two column cuts. One three-column cut. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Mats. Press book. Music cues.

"A SUCCESSFUL ADVENTURE"

Metro Presents May Allison in the Story of a Little Southern Girl Who Had Pluck and Initiative.

Cast.

Virginia.....May Allison
Perry Arnold.....Harry Hilliard
Lionel Houston.....Frank Currier
Col. Daniel Houston...Edward J. Connelly
Rose Mason.....Christine Mayo
Aunt Louise.....Kate Blancke
Henry Dubois.....Fred Jones
Judy.....Pauline Dempsey
Joshua.....Anthony Byrd

Directed by Harry L. Franklin.

The Story: Both Lionel and Daniel Houston, brothers, love Virginia. She marries Daniel, and Lionel, angered, leaves for the North, where he acquires a great fortune. Daniel's money dwindles, and his wife dies when their daughter, Virginia, is born. Years later Virginia tries to effect a reconciliation between her father and his brother in order that her father might get the handsome bequest left in the will of an aunt on condition that he resume friendly relations with Lionel by answering the latter's advertisement for a cook. At his home she meets and falls in love with Perry Arnold, whom her uncle has adopted. Rose Mason feigns an affection for Perry to obtain for Henry Dubois, whom she expects to marry, the code book used by Lionel in communicating with his brokers regarding deals on the stock market. Virginia not only frustrates the attempt to secure the book, but also succeeds in her efforts to re-establish friendly relations between her father and uncle. The picture closes with Perry and Virginia planning an early marriage.

Feature May Allison as Virginia and Harry Hilliard as Perry Arnold.

Program and Advertising Phrases:

Cupid Finds a Way Through Man's Stomach to Soften His Heart.
Pretty Romance Contains Snappy Sensation to Heighten Interest.
Love and Adventure Mingle in Victorious Attack of General Cupid.
Delightful Love Story Tinged With Sensational Adventure.

Stunt Suggestions: For a side angle offer a price for the receipt for the "Jumbellya" Judy prepares for Houston, or offer a prize for the best Southern recipes. In newspaper work advertise this as a departure from the usual type of languishing Southern girl. Use lithographs for window work.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten-minute novel. Slide. Heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10 sepia, 11x14 sepia, 22x28 colored. Cuts.

"THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN."

Perfection Pictures Presents Grace Valentine in Louis K. Anspacher's Highly Successful Stage Success, with a Notably Good Cast.

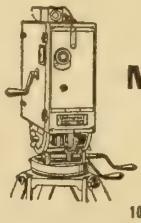
Cast.

Caroline Knolleys.....Grace Valentine
Miss Emily Madden.....Mildred Manning
Hildegarde Sanbury.....Catherine Tower
Susan Ambie.....Edna Hunter
Mrs. Murtha.....Adelaide Barker
Agnes Murtha.....Mildred Rankin
Hubert Knolleys.....Frank Mills
Lawrence Sanbury.....Victor Sutherland
Michael Krellin.....Paul Panzer
O'Brien.....Mike Donlin

Directed by William Humphrey.

The Story: Mrs. Caroline Knolleys while traveling in Switzerland starts a flirtation with Lawrence Sanbury, a young artist, and later when back in New York Caroline tries to continue it. Sanbury begins to develop an infatuation for Caroline and although Mrs. Sanbury, whose work consists of ameliorating the conditions of the poor, observes it she refrains from registering an objection for fear that her husband will lose the patronage of the wealthy woman. A dinner is given at the Sanbury home and two of the guests are Emily Madden and her fiancee, Michael Krellin. Caroline refuses to sit at the table with Emily on the ground that Emily is her husband's mistress. But her husband, who holds his former mistress in high esteem, exacts a retraction of the statement and Caroline leaves the house.

Feature Grace Valentine as Caroline Knolleys and Victor Sutherland as Lawrence Sanbury.



Program and Advertising Phrases: Interesting and Vividly Gripping Story of a Woman Who Refused to Be Subdued.

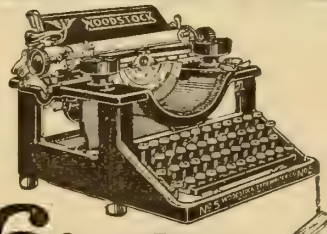
Thrills and Sensations Lend Increased Interest of Gripping Plot.
Plot-writing Revealed as a Science in Gripping Photoplay.
Human Characters in Logical Situations Provide Gripping Photoplay.
Great Stage Success Brought to the Screen in Vivid Representations.



Stunt Suggestions: Make the greater portion of your appeal through the newspapers, giving emphasis to the fact that this is one of the real successes of the stage. Point out that it is a play that made even the New York veteran first-nighters sit up and take notice. Make a plentiful use of paper and try and post at least one twenty-four. Use the dictionary definitions, neatly lettered on cards, for your lobby display along with the stills.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one and three sheets. One style each, six and twenty-four sheets. Heralds. Press book. Two styles each single and double column advertisements. Slides. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28.

Simplex

"Have a heart"

Don't expect your Operator to do the impossible

"SEND THE Simplex TWINS TO HELP YOUR OPERATOR"

They say the Operator can make or break the show.
Maybe that's so.
We know he can break it.
But he can't make it if the Machines haven't got the stuff in them.
True, he does his darnedest; you've got to give him credit for that.
We have a lot of respect for him.
Also a lot of sympathy.
That's why we plead for the Operator at the top of this page.
And, speaking of the picture: may it come true.
Whatever helps your Operator, helps you.

The Operator welcomes the Simplex twins. With their help he knows he wins.

Sure Fire Helps to Success

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO., publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and CINE MUNDIAL, the leading trade papers devoted to the Motion Picture Industry, are also publishers of the only library of practical text books dealing with the cinema art adapted to the every-day needs of those already engaged in the business or about to engage in it.

These text books, six in number, have been written by men carefully selected for their proven knowledge of the subjects to be covered, being almost without exception veteran members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S editorial staff; entirely without exception these men are at present actively engaged in the motion picture business—they are not dreamers or theorists.

Each text book has been written to provide real help to the individual who reads it—consistent with the unswerving policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—a genuine "Dedication to Service."

THE LIGHT THAT GIVES MAXIMUM DEFINITION

SILVERTIP

THE NEGATIVE CARBON THAT INSURES PERFECT PROJECTION

The National Silvertip combination gives:

1. A strong, penetrating light. This light source has the highest intensity of any of the known illuminants used for motion picture projection.

2. Absolutely steady screen illumination free from flickering shadows. The small diameter of the Silvertip prevents the arc from wandering, thereby eliminating the flicker and negative shadows.

3. Pure white light. The light of the National Silvertip arc is an exact duplicate of daylight and brings out clearly the gradation of tone in the picture.

NOTE: Silvertips are for Direct Current only.

FOR ALTERNATING CURRENT PROJECTION

To obtain maximum screen definition on alternating current use White A, C. Special Carbons.

No change in equipment necessary.

4500 CINE-MUNDIAL 4500

4500 What?—4500 Monthly Readers —and Growing Ever

Such is the circulation achievement as it stands on our books this July 1, 1918. For three years our total of readers has mounted upward, ever upward, and just now new plans are being worked out which will literally add new thousands to the list.

At times last year we printed a total monthly run of over 7,000 copies (including those sent gratis for missionary purposes) and on one occasion more than 8,000.

Unless all signs fail to materialize these circulation records will be surpassed in 1918

"The SINKING OF THE LUSITANIA"

Winsor McCay's Blood Stirring Pen Picture ---------- the World's Only Record of the Crime that Shocked Humanity.

In this one reel is more human drama—more excitement—more pathos—more to look at and more to think about—more to thrill over and more to talk about than there is in any ten ordinary features of seven reels each.

Give your people this supremely wonderful reproduction, absolutely accurate to the uttermost detail and they will never forget the picture—nor the place where they saw it. Book it as you would book another "KAISER."

"To Hell With the Kaiser" Strikingly Presented at the Broadway

Having returned from our vacation at 6:30 we were requested at 6:40 to go to the Broadway Theatre at 8:30. We liked "To Hell With the Kaiser" even better than Atlantic City. The title needs no explanation. It means just that literally, and they are doing it very satisfactorily on the screen. Would that the story were written in the past tense instead of in the future.

The picture was shown Sunday night for the first time, and it is doubtful if the old Broadway has held such a crowd since the days of the "Midnight Sons." Every one was there and every seat was filled. The stage boxes were fitted up like two little private hells. During the performance they were concealed by red velvet draperies, but in the final scene, where Mr. Hohenzollern returns to that particular bourne, these curtains are drawn back and flames leap and dance in front of a background that is truly infernal. We thought that a realistic touch would have been to have Lawrence Grant, in his Kaiser's make-up, pushed down into this yawning furnace. It wouldn't have hurt him, because it wasn't real fire, but it looked hot enough to be an excellent substitute when heatless Mondays come again.

Lawrence Grant gave an interpretation of the Kaiser that was remarkable for its subtlety as well as for its uncanny physical resemblance to the world's best hated ruler. He is the best Kaiser we have seen. In fact, he is so good that we wouldn't be surprised if no one ever spoke to him again. He plays a dual rôle, but the other man is a villain, too, an actor person who impersonated His Satanic Majesty when William himself wished to take a vacation. In that way Mr. Hohenzollern could direct one set of atrocities while his double directed another.

Olive Tell never looked so pretty as she did as "the girl," an American who is residing in Berlin with her father. When the story opens she is just leaving the convent in Belgium, where she has taken her younger sister. Betty Howe is the sister who remains in Belgium and is later attacked by the Crown Prince when the village is sacked.

The story does not pretend to be a history of the war, and the only things that are true are the atrocities which are committed by the Germans. These are always bound to be true. But it is intensely interesting and extremely well done. It is war melodrama at its best.

The man who portrayed the Crown Prince gave an excellent performance. He was so obnoxious that every one was delighted when he, too, got his deserts. Olive Tell shot him through the heart because he insisted on making love to her. The picture is released by Metro.

REMARKABLE FILM.

Scenes from "To Hell with the Kaiser" promise Unusual Film Achievement.

SOME of the scenes of "To Hell with the Kaiser," the seven-act film drama to be presenetd at the Broadway Theatre to-morrow night, were revealed at a private showing yesterday to an audience made up of press representatives and persons directly concerned with the picture's premier.

The emphatic Americanism that speaks through the title of the picture has found expression in all of these scenes. The author, June Mathis, did not write her scenario on lavender-tinted paper, nor did the director, George Irving, forget that he was visualizing the greed and lust of the Potsdam gang that set out to get possession not only of Europe but of the United States. "To Hell with the Kaiser" is not a pacifist tonic. It is a patriotic epic.

With the introduction of a love story the picture mingles the author's fancy with the facts of history. The war lords of Germany, presided over by Wilhelm of Hohenzollern, are shown planning the conquest of the world. To each is allotted a nation as a reward—the United States, reserved for the last, intended for the crown prince. The now historic incidents are shown in which Wilhelm tore up the treaty of Belgium, declaring it to be only "a scrap of paper," and acknowledging to the world that he disregarded all honor and decency. The sacking of Belgium, the burning of convents and the violation of nuns and young girls are indicated in a way that makes the blood boil with righteous indignation.

The adventures of an American family from the plot around which the romance centers. Prof. Monroe has perfected a wireless invention which the kaiser is trying to obtain, but which he refuses to yield except to his own government. The professor secures his passports, and goes to Belgium to get his youngest daughter, Ruth, only to find her dying as the result of an assault o nthe convent by the crown prince and his men. He is shot down when he protests, and Alice, the older daughter, devotes her life to avenging her sister. Making use of her acquaintance with an actor, who is hired to impersonate the kaiser, to keep his person safe from the crowds, she is introduced to the crown prince, and through him brings about the capture of the kaiser.

A fleet of aeroplanes of the allied armies is shown in full battle with the enemy air fircé, making one of the most thrilling scenes ever shown on the screen. The kaiser is abducted by Alice and the American aviator, Dodge, and taken into the presence of Gen. Pershing. Later, his appearance in the depths of hell is shown, and with the passing of his base soul, peace once more smiles upon the earth.

Scenes in the trenches are shown which will be of intense interest to every American community which has given sons to the great cause of humanity. The acting of Lawrence Grant as the kaiser, Olive Tell as Alice, Betty Howe as Ruth, Frank Currier as Prof. Monroe and John Sunderland as Dodge deserves special mention, though all the cast is good.

Quality Pictures or Closed Theatres

THE 14,000 and more motion picture exhibitors of America owe a great deal to those producers who have put character and quality into their product.

If you, as an exhibitor, sought to build a permanent place for yourself in your community or section by depending upon sensational, poorly made and unhealthy pictures, you soon would be a bankrupt.

After all, there are only two kinds of motion pictures: The kind that build solidly, continuously and permanently. And, the kind that sap the reputation of your house; that undermine public confidence and liking.

There is either a big place in this industry for a quality company like Goldwyn, or no place at all. And the presence on the Goldwyn books of more than 5,000 active accounts reveals clearly the nation-wide exhibitor approval of Goldwyn.

Our productions and stars made their first great appeal to the women and children of America. They instantly increased the matinee patronage throughout the nation. They rapidly extended their vogue to the male patrons of the screen and to-day they have created in Goldwyn the strongest name and reputation value in the motion picture industry.

For the coming season, Goldwyn's stars and their screen-plays represent a concentration of Power. The power of Production. The power of Star Personality. The power of the coherent, well-told Story. The power of great Technical Achievement. And the power of the fair and equitable Sales Policy of the Goldwyn organization.

The Trade Press has its say on a dangerous practice

Moving Picture World

JUNE 15, 1918

Attention was called by J. D. Williams in an article published in these columns last week to the injustice of releasing old pictures (re-issues) under new titles. The practice deserves all the opprobrium heaped upon it by Mr. Williams and it is our inclination to emphasize all that he said. At the very least it is misrepresentation; a form of unfair trading upon the popularity of a name made popular by a competitor and one not followed by those who have a regard for the best form of business ethics. Not only that, for it serves to cheapen and to discredit, unnecessarily, the fame of the name upon which this unfair trading is carried on, so that in the end not only is the value of that name discredited, but the pictures which are issued under counterfeit titles are discredited likewise.

Without a dissenting voice.

We used the word "unnecessarily" in the foregoing paragraph because we believe that it is unnecessary to change the name of an old picture in order to re-issue it. If a picture made some time in the past is good enough to re-issue there is no occasion to change its name—the picture is its own recommendation—and a change of name is misleading and an insult to the intelligence of those who pay to see it. Briefly, the releasing agent who changes old titles to new is going out of his way to discredit his own business. An old picture that is good may be frankly put out as a re-issue and will be welcomed as such as an old friend by all who have seen it before; it will be as well received by those who have never seen it because it is good and because they have heard of it in terms of praise. But if it is re-issued under a new title with new sub-titles it is a deception, and its appearance will be resented by those who discover the fraud.

If the releasing agent insists in thus unnecessarily revising an old picture there is still less reason why the exhibitor should continue the fraud upon his audience. If the picture is good enough to go on his program there is no reason why it should masquerade under a false name. The exhibitor who lends himself to frauds of this sort discredits his house in the eyes of his patrons. Not that alone, but he aids in depreciating the value of the name of the player upon whom the fraud is practiced as well. No exhibitor who seeks to deal fairly with his patrons will be a party to such fraudulent practices.

Wid: Are You Square With Yourself?

It's no trick to be a crook!

Anyone can collect considerable coin if they care not how they do it.

Any boob can run a house for painted ladies and get rich . . . but very few people think that much of money.

Frightfulness aimed at the future of the great stars.

Do you keep your own cards on the table when you check up yourself?

Is it good business to cheat, no matter how you camouflage it, in dealing with the people who furnish your bread and butter?

Sooner or later they'll get you!

Re-issues of good films . . . like return dates of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "East Lynne" on the speaking stage . . . are one of the surest sources of real revenue for the fair-minded, square-shootin' showman. Just because some feller who has tried to get "his" quick without worrying about "how," makes it possible for you to slip something over on your gang, is no reason why you should fall.

Always remember that the folks who spend their money with you hold you accountable. They know little, and care less, about who makes the film or how it's sold.

The Pied Piper of the screen—the idol of the world's children. Why murder his good name?

They only know that you show it and that they pay their money to you . . . and don't overlook the fact that they have an idea that you are gettin' rich even though you may be barely breakin' even!

Showing old films under new names isn't square-shootin'!

Using the old names in small type on the advertising, in order to have an alibi when someone kicks, isn't goin' to keep that irate cash customer from remaining "sore," no matter what explanation you may give 'em. If the stuff is good and worthy of playing again it's worth showing on the square, under its original title.

If it's worth while and has made friends, there are still enough in your community who have never seen it, and enough who will be willing to see it again, to check up into real business if you are showman enough to get 'em in.

The whole problem centers upon two points: First, are you willing to try to grab without worryin' how you get it . . . which means a real loss of self-respect? Second, it's generally bad business to deal "stacked" cards . . . because sooner or later they'll "get" you!

Exhibitor's Trade Review

JUNE 15, 1918

Speaking of re-issues:

Why change the name of a picture, on re-issue, that succeeded once under its own name?

J. D. Williams of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has said most of the things worth saying on this matter.

But here are some other interesting sidelights.

Royalty may travel incognito, but a good picture should be known for all it's worth. Its name is one of its assets.

Aliases are all right for criminals, but a good picture has as much right to its name as a good woman.

If a picture is worth re-issuing at all, it is as good under its original title as the day it was released.

If it isn't a good picture—why re-issue it?

Sound business judgment and a sense of fairness to exhibitors and public are against it.

The re-issue will be the salvation of this industry before normal conditions prevail again. And the concern that, consciously or unconsciously, vitiates its value, is hamstringing itself as well as hurting its fellow-concerns.

Motion Picture News

JUNE 22, 1918

First, we believe that re-issues under new titles—unless the old name is published with at least equal prominence—is very apt to mislead the public.

Misleading the public will serve to destroy its valuable confidence in the motion picture and the industry abck of it.

People don't say this to the exhibitor—they tell it to their friends.

The existing statutes may define this style of advertising as fraudulent.

You can't gag a deceived patron. He's Sore!

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., 6 W. 48th St., New York, N. Y.

Wid says: "Any Boob can run a house for painted ladies, and get rich . . . but very few people think that much of money."

Furthermore, and of great importance, it is obvious that new pictures of famous stars cannot profitably be produced if old pictures are allowed to compete with them under what the public construes as a new name and therefore a new picture.

This, it is equally obvious, is destructive of the industry's normal and necessary development.

The re-titled re-issue attacks the life of the most gallant figure of the screen.

Secondly and with equal emphasis, we point out that this controversy does not apply whatsoever to pictures properly re-issued.

Picture Play

THE HART REISSUES

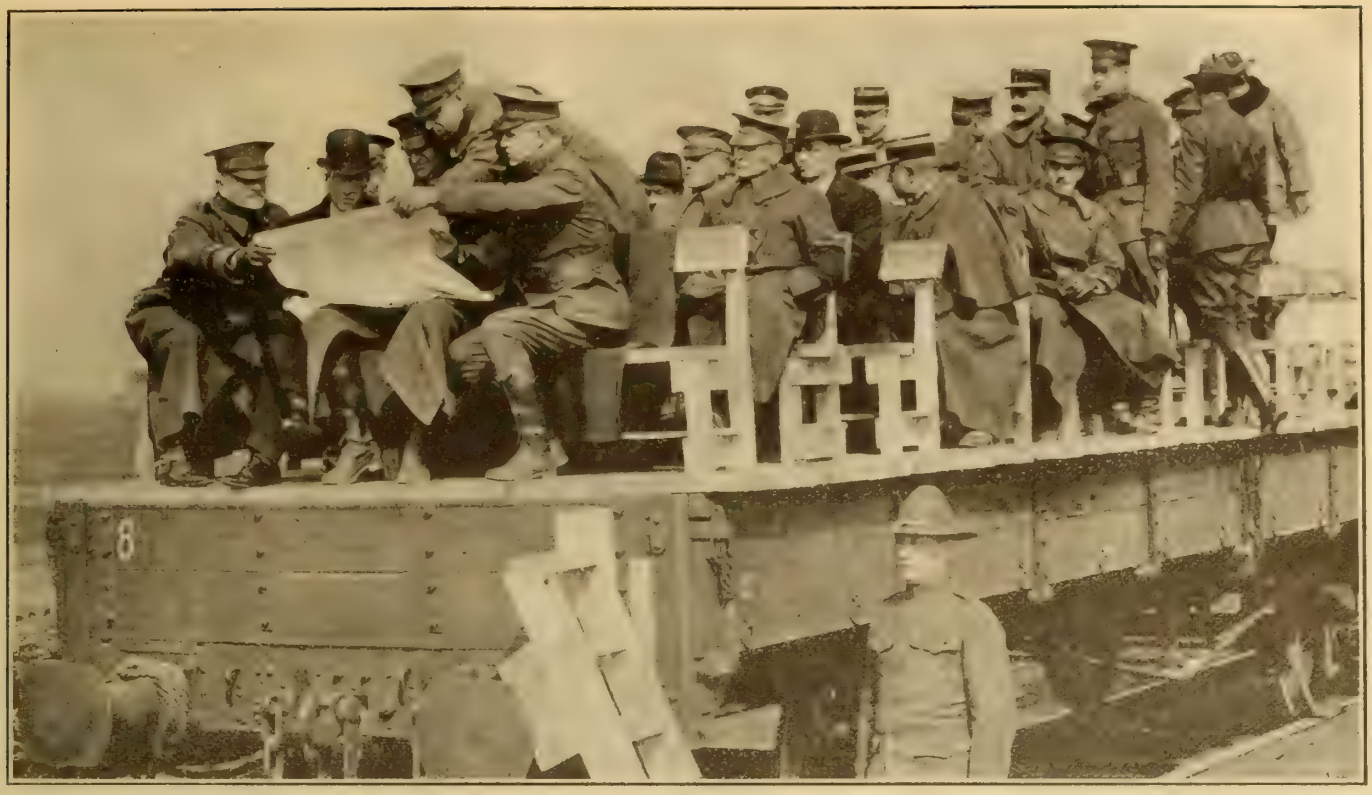
William S. Hart has published a strong letter asking exhibitors not to book certain productions being sold by "The W. H. Productions company," with which he has no connection. Hart asserts that these are old pictures, being sold under new names, and that the public, seeing them advertised, thinks the pictures are new ones. The public, of course, suffers. So does Hart.

We know nothing of the merits of the controversy. We do know that Hart does not object to the Triangle re-issues, which are not renamed. His newest pictures, of course, are Artcraft's.

It does seem, however, hardly fair to change the name of a picture, once it has been produced.

If it is legitimate, however, we have stepped in to protest out of turn. We apologize. But if it is all right to do this with pictures, why couldn't a publisher put a new binding on O. Henry's "The Four Million," and sell it as O. Henry's "The Heart of New York?"

It's the same thing, isn't it?



He'll never find a home here.

Nailing a Slander:

Re-titled re-issues are not and never have been handled by First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchanges as was intimated in a recent advertisement in the M. P. News.

The "First National" is out to protect the reputations of the great stars who are largely responsible for the popularity of Motion Pictures and will continue to agitate the question regardless of whose pocketbook it affects.

WANTED

Salesmen - Representatives

There are twenty men in the United States whom we want to become associated with us.

These men are fighters—they have moral and physical courage—they have keen sales experience and mental calibre sufficient to earn $5,000 to $10,000 per year.

They are not looking for a "job"—but for a place in a sincere, rapidly growing organization that is striving to make the Motion Picture Business a worth while industry.

These men will come with us because they believe that we are destined to stand head and shoulders above all others.

The men we choose will be given the same incentive to work as if they were in business for themselves, therefore we must be sure of their integrity and sense of responsibility toward the exhibitor whom they must serve in their connection with us.

Politics, favoritism, unsettled conditions—cannot interfere with their success and progress in our organization.

O. HENRY STORIES

Motion Picture News July 6, 1918

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

FOR several weeks members of the Advisory Board have been discussing the question of long and short features. To a considerable extent this dealt in theory, but at the Rivoli this week S. L. Rothapfel is proving that a presentation can be put over without one of the so-called features and that the audience will be delighted with the result.

Of course, the Marine flying pictures made under the direction of Lieut. Rothapfel form the featured part of the program—and they are wonderful pictures as you will hear later—but there was only a few feet more than three reels of these. The only other picture besides the scenic, the baseball picture and the animated was a two reel O. Henry story. And let us say here now that the applause that greeted this picture at the end has been equalled by few of the longer features that we have seen presented at either of the Rothapfel houses.

It certainly proves so far as audiences are concerned at the Rivoli that the length of the picture counts for little, if quality is there. "I never consider length in buying a picture," said Mr. Rothapfel several weeks before he had arranged this bill and the current presentation proves that this does not have to be considered provided all of the other elements are incorporated in the bill. And it proves, if possible, even stronger than any other presentation that we have seen the necessity of the combination of music and the picture to get the best results—and that the music is essential to every sort of picture.

And aside from any question as to how long feature pictures should be, exhibitors will do well to arrange such a bill as this now and then. It is a decided relief from the usual performance and your patrons will appreciate it as an added spice to their amusement diet.

O. Henry at the Rivoli

NEW YORK'S newspaper critics showed a surprising willingness to depart from the stereotyped style of daily review in treating of S. L. Rothapfel's experiment with a diversified program of short subjects at the Rivoli last week.

In particular it is pleasing to note that they accorded the two reel O. Henry subject which shared honors with the exclusive marine picture—treatment similar to that accorded the usual lengthier feature.

We of the industry might expect this as a matter of course. But there has always been doubt expressed as to the general public's willingness to accept anything less than a full evening's entertainment as a "feature." In the reflection of that public's views given by New York's papers there is cause for congratulation to Vitagraph and Manager Rothapfel.

PICTURES MADE TO YOUR ORDER

WITH the organization of the Affiliated, exhibitors for the first time are really to have a voice in production.

More than that, part of our productions are to be made to your order. Like all other dealers, you, at last, can choose—dictate, if you please—the kind of product you want, and the price you will pay.

Through your National Director, you decide upon the cast, story and direction—in advance of these productions.

Upon the completion of the picture it is reviewed by the National Directors, to make certain that it lives up to specifications. Should it fail, you are no more obligated to take it than you are to pay for a suit of clothes that doesn't fit you.

Already three big special productions are being made to your order. Others are in course of preparation

When you compare the rentals of these pictures with the prices charged for productions of equal merit, you will understand better why the co-operative booking plan of the Affiliated has swept the country

Ambassador James W. Gerard Honors Virginia Pearson

Ambassador Gerard Compliments Virginia Pearson on Her Stirring Patriotic Speech.

AT the recent dedication of the Israel Orphanage Asylum, 274 East Second Street, New York, Virginia Pearson was selected by popular vote to deliver an address to thousands of her admirers on the East Side. The applause which greeted her appearance again proved the popularity of this world-renowed dramatic artist who stands second to none. It gave thousands of men, women and little children not only the chance to see but to hear their beloved idol.

Her unquestioned genius as a screen artist, her many charitable deeds of kindness, her lovable democratic American methods, have won for her a place in the hearts of the people which she amply deserves.

Miss Pearson's speech on this occasion was one of fervor, pathos and humor. It was given with a charm and force of character which called forth the sincere approbation of Ambassador Gerard to whom America and the Allies owe so much. Nathan Straus, that benefactor of mankind and saviour of little children, also paid tribute to this gracious woman.

Fresh, crisp, and crackling with the last minute news of the moving picture industry. In the hands of every moving picture man in New York and adjacent territories the same day it comes from the presses and at hand for every moving picture man in the country a few days later to guide him in the conduct of his following week's business. A greater flexibility than ever before in our mechanical handling enables us to accept trade announcements up until the very last minute for dissemination throughout the industry.

And remember, there is none of the "hit-or-miss" policy in the conduct of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. What some other publications in the same field maintain it is impossible to do, we are doing constantly as a mere matter of service to our advertisers and readers—and we don't find it even difficult. It is little things like this that explain that great degree of confidence which the picture trade generally are constantly expressing in this leading trade paper which was born with the industry and has grown up with it. For authentic information in all branches of the moving picture trade you owe it to yourself to read the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. To the present business which you cherish and to the future which you hope it will have you owe it to support the one trade publication in the field which has never swerved from its determination to build the moving picture industry of the future upon a sound, high principled foundation and thereby accomplish "the greatest and most lasting good for the greatest number of people."

Publicity—What Is It?

Wide Discussion of a Highly Speculative Subject by the Leading Motion Picture Publicity Men—Many Interesting and Instructive Opinions Expressed.

The Beginnings of Motion Picture Publicity.

By JAMES L. HOFF.

WHEN any man sits himself down before his typewriter and clicks off the flat statement that "Mr. So-and-So was absolutely the first to do this or that" he is planting seed for a fine crop of come-backs, but in this life everything goes in epochs, so the writer declares at the outset that he is dealing with things pertaining to the present epoch of the motion picture, which after all is the only one worthwhile and that consequently leaves no chance for any pre-Edisonite picture man to butt in. Having thus effectually laid the troublesome ghost of any neolithic cinematographer which might raise itself to confute this statement the croix de plume, or the nom de la bull, of the picture business, if that please you better, is handed to Robert H. Cochrane, then, as now, attached to the establishment of which Carl Laemmle is the head, the first man to write "publicity" for pictures.

Lee Dougherty,
First Publicity Man for the Biograph Company. Also the last and only one.

It was back in 1906 that Mr. Cochrane entered upon the career that brought him to where he is now, and he started in by causing Mr. Laemmle to declare in Gothic type, "I am the greatest man in the film business." Well do I remember the copy that came into the office of a western amusement publication carrying that statement. It was the beginning of a definite and determined effort to popularize a motion picture man—and it succeeded.

Prior to that time motion picture publicity consisted of printing the lists of titles of pictures this, that or the other film importer or manufacturer had for sale at so much a foot. Sometimes the advertiser would add a few lines of description to give the expected buyer an idea of what it was about, but Mr. Laemmle was the first man to hire an out-and-out publicity man to tell the trade that he knew more about films than all the rest. That man was Bob Cochrane, a Chicago advertising agent.

Several years ago an advertising expert wrote the words "Keeping everlastingly at it brings success." Laemmle and Cochrane are the answer.

It was a long time before any other company, either manufacturer or renter, undertook anything like a definite campaign of advertising or publicity. Get the distinction: Advertising is conceded generally to mean display announcements which are written by an ad writer; publicity is considered to be text matter that is written by a press agent. The display is paid for and the publicity is not. The press agent's claim to usefulness was in his ability to get lots of "publicity" for nothing, and many of them still hold their jobs on the strength of the quantity of space they can grab from the guileless editors of trade and other publications each week. But publicity men have mostly developed into something better than mere space grabbers, as you will quickly gather when you read what some of the leading picture publicity men say of themselves and their work in the succeeding pages.

It was Miles Brothers, the leading film renting company, and located in New York, that was first to follow the lead of Mr. Laemmle in the employment of a publicity man. That was in 1907, and H. A. Spanuth, now a producer of pictures, held the job for a long time for that firm.

Ben Schulberg,
First Publicity Man for Famous Players.

Manufacturers, too, began to see the necessity of publicity. J. Stuart Blackton wrote occasionally an item of news for the Vitagraph company. Frank J. Marion and later Lee Dougherty wrote bits of information concerning the Biograph company productions. Edison had a number of writers of special stories, and could always get space in the daily papers when he wanted it. Epes W. Sargent also did some work for Vitagraph and Lubin. Whatever else was printed was picked up by the reporters of the several amusement papers existing during the early days of the picture business.

The seeming slowness of the picture makers and dealers to publicize their product was not altogether due to lack of initiative on their part. It was the lack of a medium of publicity. The daily newspapers could see nothing in the business. No one believed that it would last. With the exception of two the amusement publications did not reach the class which was interested in pictures, so there was almost no place to print news about pictures. The first break in this situation was made by Vitagraph and Pathe when those companies joined to publish the first house organ of the trade, "Views and Films Index"; but of course that paper was made up of the announcements of those companies only. After it, however, came the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, and then the campaign was begun.

The bulletin was the first definite form of publicity adopted by the manufacturers. It was a small sheet, varying from 6 inches by 8 inches to the size of a letter sheet, and carried an engraving from a scene in the picture and a description of that picture. The Edison company enlarged upon this idea by issuing a beautifully printed and illustrated booklet of its releases twice a month. Little items of news about Edison pictures and players were included in this publication, which was the idea of L. C. McChesney, advertising manager of the Edison company.

This idea was adopted quite generally by the manufacturers, and for some time constituted the greater part of their publicity.

About this period the Vitagraph company engaged Sam Spedon as its advertising manager, and he was among the first, if not the first advertising managers employed by any picture manufacturer. From that time on publicity commenced to establish itself in the business. Pathe engaged a publicity man named McCowan, followed later by H. C. Hoagland. Under Mr. Hoagland's direction Pathe publicity took on proportions. William Wright, sales manager of the Kalem company, conducted most of the publicity for that concern. Ben Schulberg started writing publicity for the old Rex company, and on the record he made there he was appointed publicity man for the Famous Players company when that concern was organized by Adolph Zukor.

Sam Spedon,
Who Organized the Advertising Department for Vitagraph.

When the Motion Picture Patents Company was organized something of a publicity campaign was started. Frank Winch was first engaged, but soon gave way to Chester Beecroft, who held that position for some time. The work was discontinued owing to the aversion of the president of the company to publicity of any kind.

Some time later Mr. Beecroft was engaged as publicity man for the General Film Company, but the policy of secrecy eventually put a stop to his activities there.

During this period the most persistent campaign of publicity was conducted by the Imp company, under which trade name Mr. Laemmle conducted his manufacturing business. Bob Cochrane was the man behind the gun, and for the first time motion picture players were featured in public print. It was Imp publicity that made Mary Pickford famous. About the same time Vitagraph began to feature Florence Turner and Maurice Costello in its publicity, together with other of its leading players, and a new angle of publicity was started.

H. A. Spanuth,

Real picture publicity was developed mainly by the so-called independent manufacturers of the early days. The Patents company and its affiliated interests were opposed to giving any news about their players, and very little was printed concerning their plans, all of which information was necessary to a well-rounded publicity campaign. This gave the independents a great advantage and told in their favor in the final analysis.

Publicity on a large scale was introduced probably for the first time by the Mutual Film Corporation. When it was organized a house organ called the "Mutual Observer" was issued, which was edited by H. J. Streyckmans. This was later changed to "Reel Life." Under the direction of Philip Mindil a news service to daily and weekly papers all over the country was started, and much valuable information about Mutual pictures was printed. Arthur James succeeded Mr. Mindil in the conduct of this campaign, and finally Terry Ramsaye, who now holds the position, took charge. It was while Harry Aitken was president of Mutual that the first use of magazine space for motion pictures began.

Joe Brandt
For Some Time Publicity Manager of the Universal Film Co.

With the advent of new companies, which multiplied at this time, the ranks of the publicity men increased, and as many of the new-comers were theatrical press agents theatrical methods were introduced. Harry Reichenbach came into the game with the Jesse L. Lasky Photoplay Company and gave the trade its first press book from his experience of several years with theatrical producing companies. Mr. Reichenbach was afterward with the All-Star company, then to Metro, the World Film and several others. Arthur James went to Metro after he left Mutual, and is still conducting the publicity of the Metro company. Leander Richardson followed Reichenbach at the World Film and remained until the time of his death, when Lee Kugel, an experienced theatrical promoter, joined that concern and is now in charge of the publicity department.

Probably the first posters used were put out by Pathe for the "Passion Play," which appeared in the early days of motion pictures. Afterward Vitagraph was the first to issue posters with each release. E. G. Hedden of that company had charge of this work and got quite artistic effects with a combination of block designs, type and zinc half-tones from scenes of the play advertised. For a long time old stock posters, made at some time for theatrical productions and left on the shelves of the lithograph companies, were dug up and "stripped" with picture titles and so made to serve the demand of the theater managers for posters. Of course these posters seldom, if ever, fitted the scenes of the picture they were adapted to, but they served.

The first definite poster service made to fit the picture was known as the "A. B. C." poster, made in Cleveland by a man named Brewer. A. B. C. posters were all one-sheet in size and were sold direct to the exhibitor. From this beginning posters for pictures developed rapidly to the present proportions.

The popularity of individual players with the public and the desire to make others popular led the picture makers to issue large quantities of photographs and photographic reproductions by various processes for general distribution. Engravings were furnished to newspapers in large numbers to accompany stories about the play and the players. Thus the work of the picture publicity man became a real and highly important job, conducted for the most part by men of experience and knowledge of the business.

Mabel Condon
The One Successful Woman Press Agent.

What motion picture publicity is and should be is discussed in all its diversified phases by our contributors in this issue. All of them are well and favorably known to the trade. The importance of their efforts is not to be lightly esteemed. They are the men who have animated the trade body and given it expression.

It would be impossible to mention all who have, at one time or another, wielded the typewriter in behalf of some struggling or successful motion picture company for their name is legion and space will not encompass them all. It should be mentioned, though, that woman, God bless her, has at least one successful press agent in the world of pictures. Her name is Mabel Condon, known from coast to coast. Miss Condon has never represented a regular producing company, but her efforts have been particularly active in behalf of the individual players.

Six Axioms on Publicity

By Arthur James.

1. Sixty per cent of the show business, and ours is a show business, is publicity.
2. Point out to me the exhibitor who knows how to advertise his pictures and I'll introduce you to a success.
3. General magazine advertising for motion pictures is an interesting method of throwing money out the window.
4. Expensive advertising plan books, with gold embossed covers and thick creamy paper, held nobody but the printer.
5. The local newspaper is the direct contact medium, and for motion pictures is unquestionably the right thing to use.
6. Unless the exhibitor is willing to advertise his show nobody can save him.

Beginning of Motion Picture Press Agenting

By Robert H. Cochrane

First Picture Publicity Man, Now Universal Vice President, Tells How He Started All the Trouble—Says Publicity Is Improving

WHEN I first took up publicity and advertising work in the moving picture field some ten or eleven years ago, I had easy going, because, as someone said the other day, I was the first advertising man in the business.

It is not such easy going today because the industry numbers among its members some of the most brilliant advertising and publicity men in the country. In fact, I do not know of any business in which the advertising shows such cleverness, both in idea and display.

Robert H. Cochrane.

About ten years ago, when I got my first glimpse of moving picture trade paper advertising, I was struck with the fact that it was years behind the times. In those days we used to see full pages devoted to the mere announcement, "Films to Rent," with not a word about the films, the actors, the quality of the goods or anything in the way of a selling talk. The advertisers did not speak of advertisements; they spoke of them as "cards."

With a virgin field of that sort in which to work, I said to Mr. Laemmle on the first day that he and I entered into partnership: "Not a single man in the business is doing any real advertising. If you will let me handle the publicity and advertising in my own way I can make you the best known man in the picture business."

"I'll not interfere," replied Mr. Laemmle.

"Will you stand for anything I do or write?" I asked.

"Anything," he replied. "The whole thing is in your charge. I rely on your judgment and your promise to handle the advertising in a way that will make it profitable."

In all my advertising experience I had never found a client like that. Many of them had promised to let me cut loose and smash precedent to pieces, but they had lost their nerve. But, to the everlasting credit of Mr. Laemmle, he stuck through thick and thin and stood for many things that I would not have signed with my own name.

He was game. I made statements over his name that at times threatened to make him appear ridiculous. I started off with the most blatant statements I could think of. The advertisements were worded in such a way as to make him appear pugnacious and vain, insufferably vain—anything to arrest attention. One of the first announcements said in effect:

"I, Carl Laemmle, am the most important man in the film business. I know more about films than anybody. I know what your exhibitors need better than you do. I know how to interest the public better than you do, and I will teach you how to do it. All this will be part of my service."

Week after week we hammered away with this sort of drool. We used cartoons. Then we began to employ some of the best artists in Chicago and New York to make drawings to illustrate the ads. We published a series of ads boosting Florence Lawrence and next Mary Pickford and King Baggot and other players as fast as we added them to our staff.

Such crazy advertising coming into a field in which the most sensational announcement had been "Films to Rent" had a good deal the effect of a bombshell. At first it was laughed at and ridiculed. Then, as the former kings of the industry began to see that the Laemmle business was growing in a sensational manner, they began to rear up on their dignified hind legs and say that such methods were a shame and a disgrace. After that they cast about for advertising men and publicity men to boost their goods in the same fashion. They wanted some "shame and disgrace" of their own.

It was fun. It was never work. It was simply circus stuff, but it was applied to a business that was behind the times as far as advertising was concerned, and it worked. It stood the acid test in that it brought results.

Then came the big fight with the old film Trust. We attacked them week after week, proving to the exhibitors that we knew what the old trust was trying to do and showing them how to protect themselves.

We won the confidence of the exhibitors and hundreds of them took sides with us when they were risking their very bread and butter in doing so. I have always said, and I still say, that the old trust could have licked us to a finish if they had employed the power of publicity as much as we did. Instead, they took the stand of "dignified silence." Never in the history of the industry was there a time when a good advertising man could have accomplished so much for his employer as the advertising manager of the old trust could have done if he had been given a free hand. But he was all muffled up with "dignified silence"—and everybody knows the result.

I believe we were the first to start the plan of furnishing the newspapers and magazines with studio items and stories, as well as photographs or cuts of the various actors. At any rate, I know we had a good stiff battle before we could convince the editors that the public would be interested in that sort of news. One after another they saw the light, until now only the practically dead newspapers refuse to recognize the fact that the public is eager to read screen news.

Present-day publicity methods are a vast improvement over those of a few years ago, but there's still room for improvement and it is coming fast. A recent discussion carried on in the columns of the Moving Picture World shows that not only the film publicity and advertising men, but the moving picture editors of various newspapers are becoming aroused to the fact that we are all still guilty of weak methods.

For example, every moving picture studio is fairly alive with genuine news. If a newspaper man were turned loose in any live studio he could gather columns of good hot stuff. One trouble about the newspaper man, however, lies in the fact that as soon as a picture company employs him for this purpose he becomes imbued with the corporation spirit instead of the newspaper spirit. The result is that he soon becomes converted from a reporter into a publicity man and colors his news in too rosy a fashion. This has happened to us many times in spite of the fact that we give our publicity men carte blanche to handle the news in a news fashion.

Ever since I gave up the active work of handling the publicity and advertising personally my instructions to our publicity men have been to cut loose and handle the real news in their own way, the only restriction being to avoid making any statement that the company cannot back up. This works out better in theory than in practice, but it is improving all the time. It is not only the publicity men who are improving in this respect, but the corporations themselves. And it has been harder for the corporations to learn the lesson than it has for the publicity men.

Fortunately for me, Mr. Laemmle was born with an advertising sense. He knows the benefits of advertising and has demonstrated his knowledge of its benefits by the money he has invested in it. If our advertising campaigns had not had his hearty support, if he had lost his advertising nerve, if he had been afraid of doing new things, or if he had not made scores of brilliant suggestions, the advertising would have fallen as flat as hundreds of campaigns that have been ruined in all lines of business because the advertising man did not have the proper backing.

The "Up Forward" Publicity Man

By Fred Schaefer.

THIS being one of the rare occasions when the MOVING PICTURE WORLD solicits more copy from the publicity pen it is like being invited to a feast. In fact, it amounts to a direct bid to make a little after-dinner speech on paper. We shall try to make it cheery and optimistic and profoundly helpful.

The leading thought in a motion picture publicity purveyor's mind often is: "Where am I heading?" More plainly, he asks himself: "Am I going to step up forward, or am I going to get off?" Generally he is such a versatile chap that he could get off and probably do better. But everything else being equal I should advise him to stay on and move up forward.

Fred Schaefer.

What makes him hesitate about things is the apparent nerve-racking mortality among motion picture propects. They come on in waves and the next moment there are winrows of still forms, and yet the conflict rages and things continue to happen.

Probably he see three classes of motion picture producers of contrasting methods.

The first is the casual kind of producer, who figures only upon the cost of his negative. All which comes after that finds him unprepared.

The second provides both for the cost of production and for the positive prints needed to afford physical circulation of his picture. But somehow he stops here.

The third has gone ahead, knowing exactly what it will cost for his production and his positive prints, and for marketing and advertising besides. He has a broad conception of his objects and of the conditions that prevail in moving a product. Incidentally, this man may spend more money than another, but he will waste less.

The last named man is far-seeing. He knows where he will finish. He is like the occasional individual who builds a house within the estimate—who has begun by putting everything into the specifications.

Half of the tragedies of motion picture adventuring no doubt are due to the errors in production, but the other half easily can be blamed upon lack of margin allowed for merchandising and publicity. All the money has been spent upon the picture, and when the added expense of properly marketing it is encountered the house of cards tumbles. In many cases it is at once evident that the returns cannot justify the total cost that will be involved, and the production is either sacrificed for less than the amount already invested or a desperate attempt is made to realize by dint of recapitalization and feverish promotion, whereas in the first place a competent survey of the entire route to be traveled would have insured the whole venture reasonable chances of profit.

One may ask what all this has to do with a publicity man and his activities. I hold that a publicity man is only nominally useful unless he can look upon a motion picture project comprehensively and profoundly; be able to advise the inexperienced or to hold his own with the expert. Indeed, if he has seen the inside of production and comprehended it and has cooperated in sales campaigns and delved in distribution practice, accumulating thus a priceless knowledge to add to his more ornamental gifts, such a publicity man is a gem. Such a one can pilot a venture from origin to fruition and make every move count. Such a one becomes ripe for high office. He is different from those who can do no more than take the fag end of a bank roll and ease its last moments.

It is merely an argument in favor of deep, serious study of the motion pictures business by its publicity staffs which I am urging. The publicity man's opportunities are unlimited and brilliant for improvement, for amassing practical kowledge and for applying it. The probability that he is more often than not underrated, the possibility that in this industry he has sometimes to see his best inspirations neutralized or ignored, does not matter. If he profits by the immense facilities for learning all those unnumbered lessons which others persist in not learning he will get on. The picture magnate of tomorrow will be the man who can guide or handle intelligently the capital that waits to be assured of normal existence in the industry—the capital that is coming in to stay.

In fact, I want to predict that the magnate of tomorrow will be the publicity man of today; and I dare say that, true to form, he will be very much averse to talking a great deal about himself.

Function of Advertising in Distribution

By Terry Ramsaye

Mutual Director of Publicity Discusses Policies and Methods—Discourages General Advertising of Brands

LET us consider some primary facts. There are two kinds of motion picture advertising.

A—Advertising to sell film to the exhibitor.

B—Advertising to sell seats to the public.

It is principally about the Class A, or distributor to exhibitor advertising, that we are concerned here. I am seeking to make clear to the exhibitor, and any others interested, not what he should do but rather what is being done to and for him in advertising.

Now let us sub-divide our Class A advertising, the advertising in behalf of the producer and distributor. Looking into it further we find:

1.—Advertising to present the merchandise, the picture.

2.—Advertising to make the picture appear a success—a sort of post mortem jubilee intended to foster immortality.

3.—Advertising addressed apparently at the exhibitor or the public but in fact intended for the banker and investor, to keep up a front and maintain credit and borrowing power.

4.—Advertising to keep a star happy, or to promote a president or a general manager or other official in influence.

5.—Advertising just to be advertising, because everybody has the impression that a picture concern ought to do a lot of advertising.

Contrary to many hasty opinions, all of these classes of advertising enumerated, except the fifth and last, are usually amply justified commercially.

Terry Ramsaye.

The motion picture did not become a business until it began to advertise. It is a better business today because it is a vigorous, perhaps often violent advertiser.

Something like six years ago a big advertising agency sent me to a very high official of a then dominant factor in the motion picture industry to mildly suggest to him that advertising might help his business. He listened about half a cigarette and, then looking me coldly in the eye, remarked:

"Young man, advertising is fandangle and a luxury which we can afford but do not need. If we should advertise and should get more business we would be much distressed. Let us not waste any more of each other's time."

This big man was sincere. He is now exceedingly well unknown and his concern is a commercial ghost.

Competitors arose who did advertise—any anybody today in the picture business can write the rest of this paragraph for himself.

For the purpose of advertising to present the pictures to the exhibitor's attention—No. 1 in our schedule—there are four commonly used media; the trade paper, the direct broadside or circular, the local newspaper and the billboards.

The obvious absurdity of using costly billboards and newspaper space to reach the relatively few exhibitor readers is glossed over most frequently by an attempt to make the space appear to be devoted to the establishment of brand value in the public eye, among ultimate consumers. But the everlasting final fact is there, that the advertiser is using the space with the single aim of inducing the exhibitor to pay rental for film.

Upon the evidence now available no advertiser has yet been able to make motion picture brand value stand up in the attention of the public or exhibitor to a profitable degree. If anybody steps up to point a disputing finger at certain brand names I shall be forced to point back at the stock quotation and dividend records.

This is not a failure of advertising, but rather a fact of manufacture. Motion pictures can be branded but they can not be made to a brand standard, at least they have not yet been so made.

If picture brands had important value big stars and special productions could not dominate the market. The name of the star is the nearest thing to a brand in the picture business, but stars have a way of slipping out from under brand control.

Picture patrons do not call up the box office and ask if you have a Burr Oak brand feature. They want to know "Who have you got on to-night?"

Also it must be admitted that billboards and newspapers can have but small and indirect part in the selling of motion pictures to the exhibitor. I do not mean to decry either the billboards or the newspapers as media—they have a big basic value to the exhibitor, and beyond doubt the newspaper is the best existing medium for exhibitor advertising, the advertising which sells seats to the public.

With thus disposing of two of the media sometimes used—less frequently now than formerly—we have left two other avenues to the exhibitor's attention, the trade paper and literature mailed direct.

Direct literature is not just now as fashionable as it was two years ago. There is a prevailing notion that the motion picture exhibitor has gotten and still gets so much of this matter that he has adopted a practise of ignoring it all in self-defense. Experiment and investigation by the advertising experts of many concerns indicate that this notion is probably well founded. A piece of direct literature sent out in 1915 to 20,000 exhibitors drew the astonishing total of 3,000 replies or inquiries. A similar broadside, probably much better as advertising copy, prepared by the same man, mailed to 14,000 exhibitors in 1917 drew a total of twenty-five replies.

I am not sure the second one was wasted, since the proposition is said to have sold well, and the circular may have had a considerable introductory value, but most assuredly it was not the sensational success that the 1915 circular was. Probably the time is near at hand when the direct broadside can profitably go to work again for a while.

This leaves us with the trade paper to discuss. The trade paper, much debated and ofter berated, remains as the only medium which has been a consistent and continuous performer for the motion picture advertiser.

Probably every exhibitor whose business is worth considering reads one trade paper at least and dips into several on occasion.

It is certain that any proposition which is intelligently set forth in the advertising pages and editorial columns of the trade press becomes instantly known throughout the industry and to all exhibitors, in a degree very significantly related to its news value.

All real advertising is news in a sense. No other business has as much news in it as the picture business.

Every trade paper which presents the news of the business and gives service to any considerable number of exhibitors is a good medium—just as good as its exhibitor-reader circulation, which is probably very close to its paid circulation.

The exhibitor who reads a trade paper is interested in his business. His business is likely to be worth having. The advertiser may get some of that exhibitor's business if the advertising tells a plain effective merchandising story about a good product.

The problem is a much simpler one than a great many buyers of space ever suspected. Experience is slowly proving this and bringing an improved appearance in the advertising sections of the trade press.

Every once in a while some exhibitor takes his pen in hand to write to the advertising department of some picture concern to remark that a lot of money is being wasted in "colored inserts" in the trade press, or to offer a similar advertising criticism. The exhibitor feels that he is paying for the advertising. He is—assuming that the distributor-advertiser does business at a profit. However, commercial experience has proven that in any competitive line of merchandise whatever, the manufacturer-distributor who refuses to advertise seldom achieves a volume of business which permits a maximum of value in the product.

A good product calls for good advertising.

The distributor of pictures who is bashful in his advertising is likely to have something of which he is not extremely proud.

The distributor's advertising is to him as the lobby to the theater. If the show inside is not up to the screen test neither the lobby nor the advertising can long get the money. But that is no argument against using them if the goods can be delivered inside.

The picture concern which inspires good advertising made of good printing on good paper is more likely to offer a worthy screen production than the company which makes its announcements on pages which look like a shipping clerk's stencil.

Advertising Feature Subjects

By Robert Priest.

ADVERTISING a feature compares favorably with the preparation of a meal. A chef, with the same raw material as another cook, will serve a meal fit for the gods, whereas the other will merely "get by" with a meal. This is only another way of repeating the old truism: "Every man to his trade." The meanest advertising man, provided he has made a study of his business, will prove more effective with his "copy" than the brightest college graduate who is unfamiliar with the art.

Robert Priest.

The world is full of mediocre press agents, as it is full of ordinary workmen in every art, science, industry and profession. That is why we acclaim the expert when he springs into the limelight. Frequently a live-wire press agent, backed by a wide-awake foresighted manager or producer, will launch a campaign that startles even the old-timers. One does not have to tax the memory very severely to recall several spectacular instances attesting this fact.

We all remember features that started off like a house afire and then degenerated into a mere flash in the pan. That is what may be termed short-sightedness in the matter of exploitation. One might just as well save his money as to dab a little bit here and a little bit there in a half-hearted amateurish way. That is, so far as getting any big returns or any substantial results are concerned. Generalities or flash advertising never made anything popular or created a demand for it.

Every student of the motion picture knows more than one feature that would have "gone over" equally as big as "My Four Years" or "Tarzan of the Apes" if their management had been foresighted and game. And on the other hand, we can easily assign the reason why conspicuous success was achieved by other features. For instance, J. J. McCarthy and his constituents staked their last dollar and every ounce of energy on the premiere of "The Birth of a Nation" and their foresightedness and sportsmanship are what achieved the unparalleled success. The two-dollar picture had to come—but who suspected it? Try to think of some other manager who would have had the nerve to put "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theater at two dollars a ticket. I know some pretty big theatrical managers who thought the people who were trying to put this particular feature over at two dollars were fit subjects for the observation ward. But after the first night—

Look at "Bill" Parsons and Harry Reichenbach; they put "Tarzan of the Apes" over, not because it was "Tarzan of the Apes," but because they were foresighted and game. Just now the town, and in fact the whole industry, is talking about "Cecilia of the Pink Roses." Why? Not because it is "Cecilia." Whoever put that feature over worked like the staff of Cosmopolitan Magazine. There was an extraordinary instance of wonderful variety dovetailed to a pyramiding base and it had the effect of creating the demand sought.

Advertising is not so terribly difficult as one might lead you to believe. Think about it for a minute. Where is the director who would begin the production of a feature without a scenario or a working plot? That is all that is required for a successful publicity campaign. Figure out in advance what you want and must have and then follow your schedule. It is as simple as one, two, three. But first know what you want and what you are aiming at and then select your cast (?) writer, artist (for creating designs), and a "head" to place the copy.

Don't envy the other fellow—if you haven't initiative—imitate him. We have several good models in the film industry.

How Shall I Advertise Pictures

By Arthur James

Metro Pictures' Publicity Director Advises Simple, Strong Effects With Maximum of Smash and Minimum of Copy

PUBLICITY is not a business, it is a profession; it is not a science, it is an art, and it begins and ends with an understanding of human nature. With motion pictures the publicity problems are peculiar and especial because the screen itself is the greatest advertising medium in the history of the world.

In securing publicity for motion pictures the task is one of interesting and inducing the public to come into the theater. After that the pictures are their own greatest advertisers, and no newspaper or group of newspapers can compare with the screen itself.

Arthur James.

There never up to date has been any successful advertising or publicity for brands of pictures with the exception of two types of comedies. There is no such thing today as a standardized show in a picture house and, therefore, the star system has been in vogue. The best that exhibitors have been able to do is to establish a reputation for their houses in the matter of the class and type of pictures shown because no brand name, exclusive of the show itself, will fill a theater. The problem of the exhibitor, therefore, lies in the exploiting of a show as a show, booming its merits and acquainting his public with the nature and quality of the goods he has to present.

To begin with, I do not believe that the public is seriously interested in the name or personality of a manufacturer or distributor of motion pictures. There is a trade interest, but not a public interest. Some interest attaches to the personality of the director, if he be a very great director, but the rest of the interest lies in the play itself and the persons who perform in it.

My suggestion, therefore, to all exhibitors is to forget entirely to mention the personality of the head of the manufacturing or distributing concern and use the space to better purpose. Personally, I never have been called upon to sound the praises of any business individual in authority in the two great companies I have been privileged to represent, and I have the greatest sympathy for those good men and true, my brothers in a great profession, who have been required, under penalty of complete disfavor, to toot eternally about President Snifkins or General Manager Bullthrow as gigantic figures in the mighty industry of motion pictures. I have been unusually favored by an association with business men who were too hard-headed to care about the empty sounding of their personal praises.

There are several simple rules which all publicity men who know their business are bound to follow. Chief of these are strength and simplicity in advertising both to the trade and to the public. Originality is a gift the gods bestow, but striving after simple, strong effects, with a maximum of smash and minimum of copy is a thing by which the everyday man can secure reasonably satisfactory results.

Another simple rule is to avoid hackneyed and meaningless phrases, originating in the advertising agencies, such as "service" and the like. Perhaps the word service meant something once upon a time, but it has come to be the hallmark of the trickster or the incompetent.

Another rule is the avoidance of needless waste in the matter of accessories to advertising. One of these is the so-called plan book, sales book or campaign book. Of any ten of these put out today by motion picture companies at least eight are precisely alike except in the matter of cover and type. They constitute a tremendous waste of money in a given year and could well be replaced by less elaborate and more practical forms of advertising matter.

Good cuts for newspapers, both in illustration and in advertising, are essential and unless they are really made to conform to the standards of showmanship they should be thrown away. Posters, lobby display, neighborhood and newspaper advertising are the four basic necessities once the show with box office possibilities is booked. Long runs are desirable because they admit of proper advertising and if the production is worth while they justify the expenditure. Plain, practical advertising is to be desired at all times and never should the show element, the especial point of lure for the public, be overlooked. No national advertising campaign can make a show locally successful. The people of a community must be appealed to and nothing else matters.

General magazine advertising of motion pictures, because of the fleeting-here-today-gone-tomorrow element of motion pictures is a shocking waste of money that must be charged into the rental prices to exhibitors. The really well circulated motion picture magazines and the local newspapers are the only practical media for our business under present conditions.

I am not against any decent medium of advertising, but I do oppose those avenues which pile up the costs and make motion pictures more and more expensive to the exhibitors. This money should be spent in production, in scenarios and in talent that will make everybody leaving the theater satisfied and anxious to come again.

It is impossible to cover in one article the different methods by which pictures may be presented, or to dwell at any length on lobby displays, because both are as varied as the ingenuity, imagination and industry of the exhibitor or the publicity department that co-operates with him. It is possible to point out that unceasing energy is essential to publicity success. If you have a motion picture to offer to your public don't make the mistake of figuring it will "get over anyway." Get back of it, push it, drive it, work for it and with it with might and main, and remember that advertising is the life and health of your game.

Doping It Out for the Papers

By P. A. Parsons

Publicity Manager for Pathe Exchange, Inc., Says "Have Something to Say and Say It Quick"—Also Advises Study of Mediums

FIVE and a half years ago, when the writer first came with Pathe, the newspapers and general magazines who devoted any space at all to motion picture publicity could almost be counted upon the fingers of one hand. Today their number is legion. The appetite of the public for motion picture publicity, like Shakespeare's bug in the rose, has grown with what it feeds upon. Motion picture publicity has jumped from the swaddling clothes stage to the paraphernalia of manhood. It is recognized as essential to the successful conduct of the business. It has been found that it pays handsomely. It is not too much to say that without it the business could never have reached its present importance. Therefore it goes without saying that the proper conduct of a publicity and advertising department should be a matter of solicitude since upon its efficiency depends so much which is vital.

P. A. Parsons.

The motion picture business, like the dragon's teeth of old, seemed to jump from nowhere, full armed and in the panoply of might. Having no traditions of long standing of its own it had to hew its own way and make them. In publicity there is little doubt but that it followed more or less the exploitation methods of the stage. Too frequently valuable time and space was devoted to the old "lost jewels" style of publicity. The picture was lost sight of in the exploitation of the star. The business still suffers from the effects of this type of publicity. It was fine for the star. It shot salaries up from two figures to four and five, but it put the emphasis in the wrong place. The star became greater than the picture. The tail wagged the dog.

Motion picture publicity, like ancient Gaul, may be divided into three parts—trade paper, newspaper and magazine, with a further subdivision of the latter into general magazines and fan magazines. The same cut-and-dried story will not do for all these publications. Trade paper publicity as I see it should be "sales" publicity. It should be prepared and written with the needs of the exhibitor in view. He should be informed as to the picture exploited from every angle. He is to sell the picture to the public. He should be given information which will help him to sell it. Therefore the "selling points" of the picture should be brought out. Press agent slush as such deserves little or no place in a trade paper. It may flatter some one's vanity; it may add somewhat to the total linage to the publicity man's credit, but it does little to sell pictures, and that is the prime mission of the trade publication—to sell. Every picture worth while has its selling points. Therefore it is the publicity man's first duty to dig out those selling points and make them known. A biography of the star's Pomeranian does not help sell the picture. The best of the trade magazines recognize that fact, and with their "exhibitor's helps" strive to aid the exhibitor in putting over the picture with the public. The right kind of publicity for the trade magazines is along those lines—"exhibitor's helps"—and this without prejudice to the real news that comes along pretty regularly with every live organization and which every trade magazine is glad to get and print.

Time was when the same stories that were sent to the trade magazines were sent by the same mail to the newspapers. Here was a horrible waste of paper and postage. The motion picture editor of a newspaper was in those days a person to be pitied. Upon him fell the duty of reading reams of drivel to find the kernel of news. Newspaper publicity should be specially prepared with the needs of the newspaper in view. The long story which can land is the exception. The newspapers want short stuff, snappy and to the point, and so written that it does not have to be rewritten. Newspapers will print what is palpably a "press agent's yarn" provided that it is clever and worth reading. First-class feature stories of considerable length will frequently land, but they must merit the space; and at Pathe we have found that the way to get them across is to make them "exclusive," with a good art display, specially selected and truly illustrative of the story. By following such methods the writer remembers with satisfaction getting across a full-page story on Pearl White with some thirty Sunday newspapers of importance, illustrated with pictures specially taken in accordance, with a regular "scenario continuity" carefully planned out beforehand. "Have something to say and say it quick" is a good motto to have in writing publicity for the newspapers. Furthermore one's newspaper list should be carefully studied. Many papers give little space to photoplay publicity; others devote much. Hit or miss methods will fail. The newspapers should be classified according to the kind and amount of material which they want, and the publicity material should also be classified in accordance with this list. Time and trouble expended upon this will be well repaid, as the clipping returns will show.

The "fan" magazines require material which differs in almost every respect from that sent to the trade papers and newspapers. As they are important and decidedly worth catering to each of them should be studied to meet their requirements. Specially taken photographs, clear-cut and snappy, gossipy interviews of real interest, exclusive articles on subjects worth while, "personality stuff" which is different—one will find these in the "fan" magazines, and such should be the character of the material furnished. Truly it is a far cry from the old days when the same old bunk went to every publication regardless of its nature and requirements!

As for advertising motion pictures, here again the method should be adapted to the medium. Every one has a different idea as to what constitutes good advertising. Advertising is not yet a science since it does not follow exact laws, but its essentials are generally understood. The back numbers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD of several years ago strikingly illustrate the distance we have traveled in our trade paper advertising. Bombast, exaggeration, superlatives and a certain crudeness of appearance were the rule in those advertisements of a few years back. Compare them with those of today with their finished appearance, their fine art and, to a certain extent, their moderation.

Almost every company has a certain style to its advertising which makes it individual. Probably each of us thinks his own the best. At any event the individuality of content and treatment shown by the advertisements of each company makes the advertising pages a treat and a source of unfailing interest. In pictures we advertising men have had to blaze our own trails. We have a constantly shifting product to advertise, unstandardized and to a large extent untried. Each week sees a new problem of merchandising as new pictures are put upon the programs. Each picture must more or less stand upon its own merits. Unlike Colgate's products, Ivory Soap and other much advertised commodities, which are the same today as they were months ago, and therefore are bought by the public with confidence—motion pictures made with the same star, directed by the same director, produced by the same concern from stories by the same author, will vary greatly in quality. Therefore past advertising counts for little. We must virtually start "cold" with each new picture.

The nature of the business is such that trade paper advertising is not, in its final analysis, the direct producer of sales, but an aid to sales. It makes it easier for the salesman to dispose of his merchandise. Exhibitors are busy men with little time to read. The writer believes that "brevity is the soul of wit" in trade paper advertising, and that the brief, punchy message, with an art display that will seize the eye, is the summum bonum of such advertising.

Obviously advertising to the public is an entirely different proposition, but who of us would be so rash as to attempt to say what is best in advertising motion pictures to the public? Many men, many minds, said the philosopher. There would be no surer way to find the truth of that statement than to discuss the best methods of whetting the public's appetite for motion pictures by paid advertising. There is little doubt but that such advertising is more and more proving its utility, and that the time may come when with standardized pictures we may create a demand, expressed at the box office, for certain advertised brands and put our pictures upon the same basis as tooth pastes, soaps and shoes. Certainly the largest concerns in the business now enjoy the first requisite of successful national advertising—namely, a wide and enviable distribution, without which national advertising could not pay. Pathe has made considerable use of the newspapers in advertising its pictures and with satisfactory results. We have been careful to "gait" our advertising to the public we are reaching and to the medium we employ. Pathe is also making considerable use of billboards, and recently has gone into the Saturday Evening Post. As a result we are helping the exhibitor sell our pictures. National advertising is not merely coming; it has arrived, but there is no doubt but that present efforts will appear small in comparison with that which the future will bring forth.

In summing up our chosen and well loved profession it may not be amiss to say this: That in no business is it so essential for a man to be not merely abreast of the times, but ahead of them. Conditions are constantly changing. The advertising and publicity man should not merely change his methods with them, but ahead of them. The fate of a number of film concerns at one time rich and famous but now forgotten illustrates the penalty attached to lack of progressiveness. The laggard has no place in a swiftly moving business like this.

"I, Me, Myself"

By G. W. Landon,

Advertising Manager, Nicholas Power Company, Inc.

CONCERNING the subject of this sketch let it be said that the first two initials of his triple-barreled name are the same as those of the "Father of our Country." This handicap alone were insurmountable for a publicity man if it were not balanced by the fact that he is a blood relation of the man who was termed "the biggest liar in the United States"—Melville D. Landon, better known as Eli Perkins.

He was projected upon life's screen at a very tender age; and being bare-footed and scant of clothing he feels that he was "framed" well, if not good; so he has never been a screen favorite.

His career? A checkered one—from dry goods to motion pictures. The former used to be bad—the latter?

His age? He's sensitive. For the rest, he's not very long for this world—only about 62 inches—is convivial and a finished speaker. He is certain of this because once when making a speech at the Pleiades Club some one was heard to say at its termination. "thank Heavens, he's finished."

George W. Landon.

Is rich in clubs which keep him poor: being one of the incorporators and the oldest inhabitant of the Pleiades Club, a charter member of the Writers, a member of the Twilight Club and an alumnus of Grammar School No. 68 of Harlem, New York City, where he was born.

He has been back on the job for nearly a year as advertising manager for the Nicholas Power Company. He feels it a compliment to be there on which he hopes to make good and at the same time justify the faith of those who put him there.

Money Wasted In Picture Publicity

By John C. Flinn

Director of Publicity and Advertising of Famous Players-Lasky Says Publicity Must Have Something Behind It that Can Deliver the Goods

PUBLICITY is not the eighth wonder of the world, all evidence to the contrary notwithstanding. It works within certain prescribed limits and by a very definite lot of rules, despite the fact that it is based on elements of human psychology. Publicity can do a whole lot in this fast-stepping world, but taken by itself and without the backing of the knowledge that has been formulated concerning it, it is as valueless as a dried orange peel. Publicity must have something to be public about and it must have behind it the philosophical understanding of how to get public about that fact.

But most of all publicity must have something behind it that can deliver the goods. That fact has been found out in the world of business in all sorts of lines. It is being found to hold particularly true of the motion picture business.

John C. Flinn.

There are a lot of things about the motion pictures that are worth publicity—a lot of things that advertising can help. And there are a few things that advertising can help for only a very limited space of time. Let's grant at the outset that we have something to shout about. The exhibitor must certainly convince himself of that fact before he has got even a start on the road to exploiting his business. If he is luke-warm about his wares, at any stage of the game, he may be able to camouflage his half-heartedness into enthusiasm, but the deception is sure to work out wrong in the end.

There's a lot of good money wasted on publicity and advertising in every business, and the motion picture industry is not an exception to the rule. Money is wasted on exploiting pictures that will not stand up to the test. Honesty in advertising a picture is as essential as in advertising a watch. There must be a guarantee back of the advertising in both cases. In the case of the pictures, that guarantee is in the mind of the man who is shouting his wares. He knows he has a good thing to advertise and it acts as a complete guarantee of good faith. That is what Famous Players-Lasky tries to put behind its pictures—the guarantee of good faith in its stories, its stars, its settings, its directors and its sincerity to achieve an ideal in pictures.

Money is wasted in not knowing how to exploit a picture. Money is wasted in over-exploitation where it is not necessary and money is wasted in under-exploitation where a little more pressure would have done the trick.

Not every one knows the difference between good and bad advertising. The successful publicity expert is a combination of natural ability added to a lot of experience, for there is nothing more valuable in motion picture publicity than experience.

Every motion picture company aims to help the exhibitor from the very outset. Some of them do it very successfully. Others are more of a hindrance than an aid, by asking the exhibitor to base his appeal to the public on absolutely wrong lines.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is continually paving the way for proper publicity for the exhibitor. Its entire publicity department is maintained for just that purpose. Its evident results in keeping the stars before the public, its exhibitors' service department, its service to the thousands of newspapers in the country, its free mats and cuts and stories, its house organ for the exhibitor, its 500 columns of publicity matter weekly in the newspapers of the United States, and above all, its big advertising campaign are first and foremost arranged, conducted and maintained with just one person and his prosperity in mind and that person is Mr. Motion Picture Exhibitor.

The exhibitor who links his own advertising in the newspapers to all this special exploitation work of the company whose pictures he shows simply arrogates to himself the benefits of this display, backed by a powerful organization. The exhibitor has not been slow to realize that this is the chord upon which he can play tunefully and continually. Every bit of advertising that appears, every printed photograph of a star or scene, every line of reading matter sent out by this organization and every individual in the country who has learned the distinction between Paramount and Artcraft pictures and "just movies" is directly beneficial to him.

He must of course go further—he must let it be known in every way by lobby display, by the medium of his screen, in his programs, in his mailing list, by words of mouth and by advertising, that he is showing the pictures whose trade-mark the public his come to look for.

But all this aid would be a hollow mockery, if the producing company was not backing up its advertising by giving exactly what it claims to give. Famous Players-Lasky feels that the exhibitor need not worry over that point. There has never been a time in the whole history of the industry when greater care, expense and skill have been brought to bear upon productions—and the names of the stars whose services are enlisted speak for themselves.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has unbounded faith in the exhibitors of America. It has seen the business develop from its humble beginnings to its present magnitude and has noted with gratification the growth of the showmen in a parallel degree.

That this faith in the exhibitor is reflected by the faith of the exhibitor in the producing company is both a matter of congratulation for the present and an inspiration for the future.

You can attract a lot of attention by standing on a street corner and pointing toward the blue sky, but what's the use? Why not have something definite to point at—a little information is thankfully received.

Campaign Books for Motion Pictures

By Nat Rothstein

Universal's Advertising Manager is an Authority on this Feature of an Advertising Campaign —Has Issued Many Beautiful Examples

WRITING advertising campaign books for serial pictures is very easy. All you need is some paper, a pencil and a ruler. Time is unnecessary, at least it isn't much of a factor in the Universal Advertising Department, for ad campaign books must be produced in the time that we sandwich in between our regular daily duties, which has averaged around fifty pages of display advertising every week, together with other advertising work that reaches a total surpassing the product of any advertising agency in America with equal equipment.

Nat Rothstein.

But it is a labor of love. It means the helping of the exhibitor over the rough spots to success. It smooths the way by making things easy, simple, clear, concise and resultful.

The average exhibitor is not an advertising man. Those who do possess the advertising instinct don't have the time or don't understand the physical production of good ad matter, therefore Universal advertising campaign books for serials have filled the gap between just ordinary results and extraordinary results on serial pictures.

More money is spent to help the exhibitor put over his serial for the proportion he pays for his goods than is spent for dealer helps in any other line of business. For example: A shoe dealer buys, say, $3,000 worth of goods. All he receives from the shoe jobber or manufacturer is a few electros of the latest styles in footwear. There is no such thing as a consistent completed line of follow-up ads. In Universal serial ad campaign books the exhibitor finds a completed highly efficient series of teaser or advance ads, followed by a smashing opening ad for the day he shows his first episode—then he finds episode ads that he can use while his serial is running to boost it along. He finds an elaborate variety of players' cuts specially designed for the serial. He finds serial trade-mark cuts, any number of highly specialized publicity stunts, novelties, and other matter so arranged and so modestly priced as to allow him to take advantage of all the helps at very little expenditure of money, but with very good results.

Universal ad campaign books have actually done more to boost serials by helps these books contained than any single or combined factor in this end of the cinema business.

When the writer came to the Universal organization four years ago there never existed any such thing as an advertising campaign book. His long years of merchandising training stood him in good stead, for he at once applied the sound principles of merchandising by the printed page, thus enabling the exhibitor to see at a glance and to know what to expect, and besides enabling the film salesman on the road to make his call worth while, with the campaign book doing the advance work by paving the way.

Universal advertising campaign books have always been very elaborate with the costs running up into the thousands of dollars. Printed in as many as six colors, with reproductions of posters in miniature, it enables the exhibitor to see the matter he is to use exactly as it will appear.

Among the successful serials produced by the Universal to date are included the following. "Lucile Love," "Trey o' Hearts," "Master Key," "The Black Box," "Broken Coin," "Peg o' the Ring," "Graft," "The Purple Mask," "Liberty," "The Voice on the Wire," "The Gray Ghost," "The Red Ace," "The Lion's Claws," "The Mystery Ship," "The Bull's Eye," "The Brass Bullet."

On each of these serials advertising campaign books have been produced with complete and elaborate helps of every conceivable type. In the production of the campaign books the Universal has been instrumental in building the serial business directly through which other producers have profited as well as the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

By virtue of the elaborate matter turned out by the Universal, exhibitors have come to look upon serials with greater respect and with more seriousness than before the advent of these books.

That the principle of showing the exhibitor his goods on the printed page has been resultful is evidenced by the bookings on Universal serials all over the world. Universal serials today are being shown in every civilized country on the globe. In England reproductions in the exact colors and physical size of the campaign books printed in this country are made and used with effectiveness. It has awakened the English exhibitor to the value of good continued photoplays and the English public have and are responding.

These books contain anywhere from 36 to 68 pages of highly interesting matter, so logically arranged and presented as to tell the exhibitor the story of the merchandise being offered and containing such a generous measure of assistance as to make each book a veritable gold mine of useful, valuable and practical information.

In the production of these campaign books it required the exploration of new fields of ideas, and as the writer mentioned at the beginning, all it required was some paper, a ruler and a sharp pencil.

All that is necessary besides these physical properties is an inexhaustible brain, saint-like patience, and "stick-to-it-iveness" plus versatility and a few 36-hour days.

Be it known, too, that the producing of the ad campaign books has been "sandwiched in" between the production of over fifty pages of display advertising per week plus mountains of other necessary matter for the exploitation of Universal pictures.

But workers in the Universal ranks have always been known as hard workers and the Universal advertising department is no exception, rather the rule.

All matter that helps the exhibitor directly helps the producer. If the exhibitor makes money and prospers the manufacturer prospers. If the exhibitor slips, the producers must slip with him. One depends upon the other in the film business the same as in any other legitimate business, so whatever assistance can be rendered the man who buys the goods results directly to the manufacturer of the goods.

The Universal slogan has always been and will always be, "Help the exhibitor make money." If he isn't a showman, prepare ways and means to assist him in becoming a showman, for to the showman of the 24-carat variety the sale of meritorious productions is half the labor than to a man who lacks the knowledge and understanding of what constitutes really good money-making pictures.

By helping the exhibitor we are simply helping ourselves and means making the business of moving pictures a more stable industry for all concerned.

Pete Schmid

One of the Rising Young Publicity Men Who Was Developed by Pictures.

ONE of the most consistent and conscientious writers of publicity for motion pictures is Pete Schmid and his steady progress up the ladder of success is the best testimony to his ability that can be offered. Peter began his business career as a stenographer in 1907, and admits that he was glad to get six dollars for a week's toil. But that was in the dry goods line, so Pete got into the amusement business in a hurry where he first worked for the White Rats and the Actors' Union and then joined the staff of The Player, the official organ of the White Rats.

Pete admits that he was once bitten by the actor bug and for a time filled "club dates," doing a "single" singing act, specializing in comedy songs and yodeling after which he wrote and "plugged" songs for six months. When The Player ceased publication he joined the staff of another amusement publication as reviewer and editor of the motion picture department. Then came an offer to become publicity man for the Bosworth, Inc., a picture company, and he was started on his present career.

Pete Schmid.

Mr. Schmid's connection with Bosworth and the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company led to his engagement as publicity man for the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, whereupon it may be said that he had officially arrived. With Artcraft Pete had charge of the publicity for such stars as Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith, Douglas Fairbanks, Elsie Ferguson, George M. Cohan, Cecil B. De Mille, W. S. Hart and Geraldine Farrar—all big attractions.

When Artcraft was absorbed by the Famous Players-Lasky Company Pete went along and became a member of the publicity staff of the big corporation where he has charge of all the trade paper publicity. One of his most important assignments was the conduct of the Fairbanks million dollar Liberty Loan campaign from coast to coast. On a few hours' notice Pete jumped into this campaign, accompanied Fairbanks from New York to San Francisco, arranging the details en route. Thirty cities were visited and much space was obtained in the way of front page stories in the newspapers. Needless to say, the million dollar subscription was raised.

American Film Abroad Is American Publicity Abroad

By Paul H. Cromelin, President, Inter-Ocean Film Corp.

ALMOST pleasing fact to us of the film exporting business is that when we sell American films to a foreign land we are selling American publicity, too. We are selling American idealism, American physical prowess, American grit and stick-to-itiveness. We are not especially engaged in selling American publicity. But consciously or not, we do it. We send the call of clean living, open-minded, democratic America to whoever will hear. And it is not essential that the hearer know our language, for the language of the screen is universal.

Paul H. Cromelin.

We are told that countries which are at present enemy countries wait for the war's end to oust the American film from its world position. Idle hope! The publicity of idealism, of democracy, has "gotten across" too well to be succeeded in the world-public's heart by portrayals of might and ruthlessness.

The world-public no longer worships heroes because they are strong men.

It likes them because they are right!

Blame the publicity gospel of American films for this! Millions of illiterates the world over have been unable to read our President's messages, but with their eyes have grasped the American ideas of righteousness for which he stands—via the screen. Wilson and the motion picture are the two strongest American influences abroad.

Do not misunderstand me to infer that American films in the foreign lands are American propaganda in foreign lands. We are not using our position to "propagand." But we can't help publicize America with our films—publicize the splendid things she champions. There is a difference between propaganda and publicity, you see. A prominent South American told me recently that the American films showing through the length and breadth of his continent had done more to strengthen the feeling of good will toward us than all of the Pan-American congresses.

"Do you know why we espouse your cause down there, despite obligations of neutrality?" he said. "Well, it is because the movies have made us feel we know you well—your life and manners, your spirit of democracy which is akin to our own. You are close to us, in short, and we feel for and with you."

"Zit" Tells How It's Done

In a Telephone Interview Zittel, the Famous, Explains His Unquestioned Success as a Live Wire Press Agent

HELLO, Bryant, 9600? Let me talk with Mr. Zittel, please—Mr. Hoff calling."

"Hello, Hoff."

"Hello, Zit. The World is going to carry a series of interviews with noted press agents in the special publicity number and we would like a story from you, as the richest press agent in the business, on how you did it and how the other fellow can do it."

"Zit."

"Well, I don't know that you have picked the richest press agent in the business to start with, and I'm so jammed up that I haven't time to write anything, anyway. But I'll tell you what I can do. Put a stenographer on the wire and I'll dictate something to her right now.

"Ready? Well, here goes:

"Ninety-nine press agents out of a hundred are not getting anywhere because they are working too cheaply. They are being far underpaid, so how can they get anywhere? How can they expect to make themselves rich if they are just earning enough to get by?

"The day has long since passed for the press agent with his typewriter, cigarette and a hang-over from the night before. The successful press agent must be a man of big, constructive ideas, possessing an imagination and constructive genius capable of making money for his employer. To do this he must spend money.

"The fellow of narrow vision stuck away in a corner somewhere with his typewriter and a yearning ambition to sneak by some friendly editor with a stick or two does not fill the bill. His actual value to his employer is measured by that ambition. The ideal press agent recognizes that it is impossible to get something for nothing and wastes no time on the effort. He gets something for something! And he gets it where it will do the most good! He leads his employer into the profitable paths of publicity and he turns that publicity into cash through selling power. If he realizes this and his employer realizes it he is pretty likely to be paid what he is worth. If the employer doesn't realize it he'd better get a new employer.

"Boost your employer whenever you have the opportunity! Wherever you meet people bring his name into the conversation and dwell upon his good points. Verbal publicity is of equal importance as the kind that comes from printer's ink and in this way a good press agent can do much valuable work.

"The most common mistake of the average press agent is accepting too many clients at a small figure and doing too little for each, at the same time wearing out his welcome through repeated and continuous demands upon his friends for space. The temptation is to write yards of copy, whereas it is apparent that conditions are such that little can get by. Verbosity is the short, direct path to the waste basket.

"Work for one man, and work for him hard. Pick that man, don't take anything that comes along. Lots of things are impossible. Select a person or a proposition that is capable of being developed—something that should be notable but is not when you take hold of it. Map out your course and follow it; don't let him tell you the details. Does a surgeon accept every case that is brought to him? Does he risk his reputation by operating when he recognizes the patient as hopeless? Does he guarantee results when he does undertake to operate? Or does he permit the patient to dictate his methods when he takes the case in hand? Not at all. The rules that govern the surgeon are applicable to the press agent. I have made them my standard.

"Live well, dress well, act the part of the millionaire. Be your employer's equal; try to be his partner. Recognize the dignity of your position and live up to that dignity. Don't waste time trying to 'square' things in a gin-mill.

"Be independent. Never accept a contract, for the man who demands one admits his weakness by wanting to have his freedom tied up.

"You cannot 'bull your way' onto the billboards; why try it on the newspapers? Buy space. I buy my way through where I can, and if I cannot buy front covers or pictures, I will buy advertising pages in order to get what I want on a business basis. The papers that won't take my money on that basis I trust to the story and pictures I send them and to the good luck that they use it.

"Don't make the mistake of trying to show your employer how to save money. Teach him how to spend money and thereby make more money. He has efficiency experts and accounts to show him how to save. He employs you for your department because you know more about it than he does. When you make money for him he will never question the fact that it cost the initial investment. He will look over results and judge you accordingly.

"Don't use language that he cannot understand and, above all, don't put such language in his mouth. It makes him ridiculous in the eyes of his associates who know his measure in that direction. Ten to one he has employed you because you enjoy a better education than he. But don't force that fact upon him everlastingly, or he will hold aloof from you. More than half of your success is dependent upon the enjoyment of his entire confidence. You of all people must possess that. And you will not enjoy it long if you make him feel inferior. Because his command of language is not equal to yours is no indication that he is not a smart man, possibly much smarter than you in every respect.

"You will never get far tooting a horn that the public has grown accustomed to hearing. Find the unknown that should be heard. Both he and the public will appreciate what you have done. And don't imagine it is unethical to think well of yourself and of the services that you render. Often you can best serve your employer by keeping in the public eye yourself. And that goes in the face of the traditions of the press agents to the contrary.

"Plenty of folks will say: 'Oh, that is all right for Zit, with the power of the Hearst newspapers behind him.' True enough, but I had to make good just the same. I had to make good for myself and establish Zit before the power of the Hearst newspapers represented anything to or for me

"I am no newcomer to the motion picture. Twenty years ago I established a free moving picture show at Ehrich Bros.' Drygoods Store, Sixth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, New York City, with a daily change of program. Mr. Percy Waters will tell you that the service cost us only $35 a week, but that was something in those days with an untried experiment. We made it pay, and that is the purpose of all business.

"As an example of what can be done with publicity, I have doubled and tripled and quadrupled the earning power of a number of stars by the application of the principles I have advocated here, and they have never ceased to thank me. A man whose name is known throughout the world—a trademark of tremendous value—has never hesitated to credit me with the pioneer work that established that value.

"You cannot put over something without value. It is a waste of time to try. The quality must be there to accomplish results.

"Don't flit about. Enter employment with the idea of permanency, expecting to share in the prosperity you aid in creating and insist upon your rights in that direction. If circumstances cause you to quit, quit for keeps—don't make the humiliating admission that is implied by your return.

"How can you get rich? Ask someone who knows more about that subject. I have made a million and a half for one employer, but I am still on the job. But I guess I could worry along the rest of my days without it if I had to. But there is no use my indulging in further violation of my own rule against verbosity, so goodbye."

And the interview was at an end.

Rosenbaum Sees Great Possibilities

Old Theatrical Agent Tries "Movie" Publicity and Likes It. Offers Some Advice.

IN VIEW of the fact that I have only been in the movie game since last September I surely have the privilege of telling the moving picture industry all I think I know about how to get the best results in exploiting pictures. Of course, the fact that I spent seventeen years in the theatrical business as a press agent and manager has no bearing on the case.

When the moving picture industry as a whole begins to improve on the methods of showmen and begins to look ahead, instead of living for the day only, this glorious industry, and it is a glorious one, will begin to get the standing that it deserves. Just at present the two industries which should be so closely allied are about as close to one another as the Pacific and the Atlantic. Some day the brains of these two great industries will start to dig a canal that will join them together, and not until then will the film industry reach the pinnacle of success that its older ally has attained.

Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr.

There is quite a difference, to my way of thinking, in being a showman and merely an exhibitor. An exhibitor is a man who is satisfied to lay out a program, present it to his public and let it go at that. A moving picture showman is a man who places an environment around his picture and creates atmosphere enough to attract the theater-goer. Competition is so keen in the screen game that the man who sits outside his box office and waits for business to come will be wearing last year's shirts, suits and shoes for the next few years to come, but the fellow who studies his public, who does things differently than his competitor, is the fellow who gets results. There is no such thing as luck in business. Strong as this statement may seem, I am fully convinced that it is true. Taking advantage of present conditions is what is generally termed by the stagnant competitor as the other fellow's luck.

It is my contention that there is room in this glorious United States for every moving picture house now in existence. There is a reason, a big, vital reason, for the failure of the majority of houses. If I were to conduct a theater, before opening its doors I would have at least a week's rehearsal with my entire staff from the engineer up to the treasurer, teaching them the power of courtesy and attention to the public, for after all, every attache of a theater is merely a servant, and as such it is a duty to give to those for whom you are working every bit of efficiency that is in your system and usually you will find that where you go into a theater and are treated discourteously by the ushers or other menials the cause of this treatment is due to the fact that the head of the organization or manager is of this type. As a whole, I find that the men connected with the moving picture industry are more considerate of their fellowmen than the theatrical manager has been in the past.

When I started getting acquainted with the various editors of the trade papers I was treated so courteously that before I had attempted to deliver the goods for my firm I knew I was going to be very happy in my new work. If the exhibitor and the producer and exchange men would give the same co-operation to each other as the newspapers give to the publicity departments, all would be well.

There are more opportunities for a man in this business in one week than there are in the theatrical business in a year. All it needs is co-operation on the part of the exhibitor and producer to demonstrate this. In no other line of work is the press agent treated with such courtesy and respect as he is in the film industry. In my seventeen years in the theatrical business I have been usher, treasurer, manager, press agent and producer. Some of the stars whom I have had the pleasure of exploiting are Donald Brian, Richard Carle, Eva Tanguay, Nora Bayes, Dorothy Jardon, Mme. Dazie, Victor Moore, Bert Williams, Mollie King, Harry Kelly, the Dolly Sisters, Thomas Jefferson, John Emerson, Will Philbrick, Jeff D'Angeles, Mae Murray, Ina Clair, Jack Norworth, Billy Reeves, Frank Tinney, Anna Held, and last but not least, Billy West.

Great Values in "Stunt" Publicity

By C. L. Yearsley

They Are the Headlines of Amusement Advertising, Declares Advertising Man of the First National Exhibitors Circuit

STUNTS are the headlines of amusement advertising. They jolt the preoccupied mind of the public from its habitual channels of thought and focus attention upon the follow-up advertising which must accompany them in a well planned advertising campaign. One of the exhibitor's most difficult problems is to get people to forget their own business long enough to think of his. Stunts turn the trick.

There are stunts and stunts. To be effective advertising, a stunt must make people think consciously or subconsciously of the attraction it is meant to advertise. A stunt which attracts attention only to itself is wasted effort. Its only effect is to make people ejaculate wonderingly: "What t'ell?" Their minds trip over it, perhaps even resent it, and pass on.

C. L. Yearsley.

P. T. Barnum was a master of stunts. He once packed his first show, a dime museum, by the clever use of one man who wanted to earn the price of a meal—and five bricks. His once famous plowing elephants were another great stunt. Dig up his biography and read the story of his showmanship. The brick stunt will work again in any town in America.

The average exhibitor's best field for stunts is the lobby of his own theater—that is, if he operates a continuous house on a busy street. A roomy lobby so situated is one of the best advertising mediums in the world. Its possibilities are unlimited, but its true worth may not be realized if the poster boy, janitor or some other employee of equal mentality is delegated to "take care of the display."

The lobby is the show window of the theatre. Did anyone ever hear of a successful store whose show windows were trimmed by the janitor? Yet hundreds of exhibitors allow such minds to arrange their lobby advertising. They buy a set of frames of standard size into which the appointed functionary neatly places precisely the same kind of display matter the year round. Of course, such an arrangement is informative and people can find out what is "on" by examining the "display," but as for its reaching out and getting business—not on your life!

The window trimmer of a department store is a well paid person of some imaginative power who has nothing to think of but "selling the street." He usually co-operates with the man who writes the advertising. Exhibitors should realize that "selling the street" and press agency or ad-writing are two different trades. Hire some of a trained window trimmer's spare time, work with him until he gets the showman's angle and some picture sense and see if it doesn't pay.

Of course, a theatre of the first class does not have to "circus" its lobby. Such houses confine their stunts principally to the presentation of their programs. But ingenuity and good taste will accomplish wonders in the lobby of any theatre.

The powers of curiosity, suggestion, sentiment, humor, pathos—all these are at the command of the studious lobby advertiser. A woman's dancing slipper and an empty champagne bottle suspended by bright colored ribbons suggest things. Neither object is offensive. Both will get by the censor. A battered musket or baby's cradle properly used are symbols that generate thought.

These are mentioned simply as samples. Maps, newspapers and magazine clippings, letters and telegrams make attractive and convincing lobby advertising when cunningly used. The art of suggestion is as effective as the appeal to curiosity. Back of it all is the mysterious force known as psychology. Theaters have been packed by lobby advertising which at first glance seemed positively foolish and foreign until analyzed for its appeal.

A good lobby display requires the same careful thought that is expended on the copy for a full page newspaper advertisement. A stunt of some kind is the equivalent of headlines and illustration. Signs, show cards or photographs are relatively the descriptive copy which interests the reader sufficiently to induce him to buy a ticket. The whole makes up the advertisement.

The ideal lobby, like the show window, would be in effect a stage on which all sorts of goods might be displayed in attractive variety. There would be no permanent frames or fixtures. Its general appearance should present an ever changing picture. "Selling the street" requires thought. The problem is how to treat each subject. Repression should be studied in lobby advertising as in music or speaking. Stunts which shout should be employed only when necessary, for a lobby which is always noisy in appearance is sure to become a bore instead of an attraction. When a popular star is the attraction, stunts are seldom necessary. Good taste in the arrangement of posters, photographs, etc., makes their appeal stronger but in such circumstances having the star is the stunt. Save "circus" stunts for the times when they are needed and they will be more effective.

The theater is an oasis to which people go to find variety and relief from the daily grind. Good lobby advertising can be made a part of the entertainment. Comedy lobby advertising of comedy subjects is especially appreciated by the public and pays handsomely. The exhibitor who keeps his lobby alive creates the impression that his show is just as live. Passersby will come to watch it for new and interesting sights, sounds and smells.

Think what it is worth to a theater to have the people who pass it always on the lookout for "what's doing" in the lobby. Many exhibitors realize the value of good lobby advertising but many, many more think of the lobby as a job for the janitor and an entrance to the theater. It is really the most valuable advertising medium within the reach of many exhibitors and will pay for a lot more thought than it gets.

What Can Advertising Accomplish?

By Dwight S. Perrin

Publicity Director for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation Sees Large Results When Producer and Advertiser Get Together

WHAT can any motion picture producing or releasing organization do through the medium of advertising and a service department to enable the motion picture exhibitor to make an assured profit on the pictures he plays?

At every point of contact I have in the motion picture industry I hear men expressing varying degrees of bewilderment over supplying the answer to this inquiry. To answer this frankly and truthfully it may be necessary to hurt the feelings of a few persons; perhaps the feelings of a great many.

Personally I have been raised and trained in a profession that respects the people it serves. As a newspaper editor, and formerly as a newspaper reporter, I was trained to respect the feelings, the judgments, the likes and dislikes of the readers of the newspaper I served.

Dwight S. Perrin.

Any good editor or reporter knows how to get over his story or his points to the readers of his newspaper. And herein lies the great difference between serving or attempting to serve intelligently the exhibitors of America; of trying to give them without cost additional assets through which their motion picture productions may be brought more vividly before the public and as a consequence draw more receipts into the box office.

Fourteen thousand persons can read a powerful newspaper editorial and be affected and influenced. Fourteen thousand exhibitors of motion pictures can be reached and given profit-making assistance and material, but, even with this material in their hands, one would be amazed to find fifty out of this huge total making use of the things with which they are supplied.

If I walk into the store of a successful neighborhood grocer in a residential section of a large city, or into the store of the largest grocer in the average small town as the representative of Quaker Oats or Cream of Wheat I can at once gain the attention of the merchant by telling him that I can double his sales of either of these products.

The grocer is not only willing, but eager to have me offer to arrange his window displays and his center aisle counter displays. He is eager that I authorize a house to house canvass of the districts where his middle-class wage-earning trade lives to sample the homes of an available or prospective clientele with small packages of these foodstuffs. He is not only willing, but waits around to hear me get behind his counter and "talk" my products to his customers. As a result of his receptiveness he watches me, or some one even more skilled, increase his sales right under his eye. He takes all of the advertising matter within reach, and what he sees me do for my product even stimulates him and his clerks in his method of selling the other products in his store.

But apply these well known and long-tested methods of sales stimulation to motion picture showmanship and see what happens.

The average exhibitor of motion pictures feels contented with himself. He regards himself, without outside assistance, as being a good showman. He thinks that none of these men from New York or Chicago understand either him, his field or his particular house. He thinks that they know nothing of his public. He does not stop to measure his clientele on the yardstick of human nature. He does not admit that humanity measures up about the same regardless of geography.

In other words, the average American exhibitor resents instead of welcomes us and what we can give him.

His attitude towards what we provide and the additional elements of service for exploiting and advertising that we are willing to provide in a critical and negative vein. Recently even so well-established a manager of motion pictures as Charles G. Branham of the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, fired an illogical and inaccurate broadside at the accessories supplied him by the larger companies, complained technically of the "screen" on the electrotype cuts and in general rejected as unfit all of the material placed in his hands for the exploitation of his shows.

To show how ill-taken were his points on the accessories of the Goldwyn company, if he had them even faintly in mind, I want to point out the following facts:

The cuts supplied on Goldwyn accessories are 55-screen, the standard newspaper screen of the country. They are picked and made and examined under the supervision of an executive who is a photographer, router, etcher—an all-round engraver.

The newspaper matrices of the company are made from 55-screen cuts that have never been used in printing or electrotyping, thereby insuring impressions from surfaces which have not been mashed, worn or flattened by previous use.

The press sheets on each production are made under the direction of an executive who has operated some of the largest newspapers and monthly magazines America has ever known, in addition to owning a large newspaper personally. These press sheets are built to contain and do contain only the material that a careful and self-respecting editor would permit to be printed in his own newspaper; and the stories supplied are infinitely better written throughout than the average of any editorial page or any of the news columns in Mr. Branham's city.

The rotogravure one-sheets of the company are designed and laid out and inspected by a man in the Goldwyn organization who knows every detail of the rotogravure process and who incidentally was the editor of the pictorial section of the New York Tribune from the day of its inauguration as either the second or third pictorial section on any great American daily paper.

But expert service of this kind Mr. Branham rejects and complains of. It is a typical exhibitor attitude. Two hundred other exhibitors would have two hundred individual viewpoints. The individual local showman wants his own kind of exploitation. Lacking the mechanical resources to in any way equal what is given him and most of the time being beyond the reach of an organization to manufacture for him exploitation publicity which would in any way equal the material supplied him by one of the three or four larger companies, he rejects this material under a blanket indictment of producing or distributing company intelligence.

The trouble today in the motion picture industry does not rest with the producing or releasing companies in the matter of service and advertising assistance. It is to be found in the failure of so many exhibitors to absorb the materials provided by the producers.

The producers are willing to give—and do give at tremendous cost to themselves.

The exhibitors are not willing to receive. Of course, there are hundreds of alert and progressive exhibitors to whom this does not apply. They make effective and intelligent use of what they believe is best of what the producers supply. But somewhere in the circuit of producer-exhibitor cooperation there is a flaw.

Is this the producers' fault, or is it the exhibitors?

Must Satisfy the Showman

By H. J. Shepard, of the W. H. Productions Co.

As in the case of any other commodity which the public is buying, advertising plays a great part in the exploitation and final success of any motion picture production. And the final success of any picture does not lie in the success the production company or the exchange have made in terms of dollars and cents for themselves, but it lies in the praise and opinion of the public, in terms of their dollars and cents to the exhibitor. The exhibitor is nearest to the public. He knows his public, because he watches them night after night, knows what they applaud and what they dislike. He knows what to say to them, how to "reach" them. Every exhibitor would like to talk to each individual in his audience, or in his prospective audiences. But the exhibitor is a busy man, and, although he knows what to say to them, he cannot translate his personality on paper, because he is not an advertising man. His business is good showmanship, and he requires someone who can understand his suggestions and can use them effectively.

H. J. Shepard.

It is as important to the exchange or production company as to the picture itself, that the exhibitor should in some way convey to his audience something relating to his showing. The importance of this service to the exhibitor, through the exchange, is, however, often either overlooked or disposed of in a perfunctory manner, so that there may be something which the distributor when questioned can point to as "service" and ease his conscience qualms. A great deal of the publicity and advertising matter sent to exhibitors is amateurish and meaningless, too vague and too general. It is advertising, but not a tangible box office asset.

That advertising is as necessary a box office asset as the quality of the picture, the policy of the theater, even the cleanliness and ventilation of the theater, is evidenced by the number of high priced and exceptionally good productions that have been killed by this vague, meaningless sort of advertising and publicity matter. While, on the other hand, how many times have productions of a fair quality been box office successes merely by the proper publicity and advertising—the kind that gets to the head and heart of the public.

Every exhibitor is realizing more and more the importance of the proper kind of advertising service. He demands it of his exchange. But, again, exhibitors are not advertising men, nor have they the time to analyze the values of the "service" usually doled out to them. The majority of exhibitors, although they themselves may possess the true showman's instinct for the proper choice of advertising which will show results at the box office, have so many other details to look after outside of exploiting each production they book, that it is utterly impossible for them to create the practical advertising and publicity matter for themselves, which they may be certain will secure the results at their box office. Nevertheless, due to the inconsistent and impractical publicity and advertising matter eminating from a great number of the producing and distributing organizations, those exhibitors who desire properly to exploit the productions they book are obliged to devote a great deal of their limited time to the writing of their own publicity.

The distributors are realizing, too, that although the final success of any production is in the box office returns, that these returns are the outcome of, and successful in proportion to the method each individual exhibitor employs in exploiting his pictures. Production companies who know, for instance, that their product is good, that the box office punch is there, should compliment these superior productions by lifting their service above the mediocre to a level deserving of the quality of their productions. That is the finishing touch to the "reach" of a picture—these are the tracks along which the production must glide to the heart of the masses.

The advertising, however, must satisfy the competent showman and at the same time be so universally human that every distinct type of exhibitor may be able to utilize this advertising with as little call upon his time and thought as possible. Each subject must be given the same care and attention in preparation of advertising and publicity, whether it is a one-reeler or a five-reeler, as the direction, plot and photography of the production. These are the factors which build the foundation of solid confidence in an organization.

Publicity Should Inform

By Pierre V. R. Key

Foursquare Pictures' Man Insists that Advertising Must Be Addressed to the Exhibitor and Not Written to Jolly the Boss

THE editor called me on the phone and said in the commanding tones editors have a way of using: "Write me something about your ideas of publicity methods as applied to pictures. And get a move on; I want early copy."

Every man who has taken orders from an editor never fails to quake—even though he may have graduated from the early reportorial stage—when he is given a fresh assignment.

Pierre V. R. Key.

I will not lie about it, however. The invitation to go ahead and say something about motion picture advertising was not exactly unwelcome. My ideas may be neither startlingly new or epoch-making; at the same time they are mine and I entertain for them a certain affection. It is not unlike the feeling a man may have for his dog or horse—if he be fortunate enough to possess either.

But to get back to my subject, or into it, since we haven't yet started, I will begin by stating that, more than many other businesses, motion pictures need advertising. Of course I refer to that part of the machinery identified with production and distribution; for the exhibitors—God knows—must advertise or go supperless to bed, to make no mention of having probably skipped breakfast and lunch.

Having made a fine picture is certainly an achievement, and should give the person responsible for it a jingly twitching at his pockets that feels like money. But the successful producer, who is wise in his generation, will be found to resemble the smart storekeeper in a hick town who, when asked if he kept a certain nationally-advertised brand of soap, retorted with a grin: "No, we don't keep it, we sell it."

It's like that with the producer—and the distributor, too—who has a good picture. He doesn't keep it. Running it off in the projection room for his own pleasure, and that of his friends, never would increase the bulkiness of the bank-roll; and your astute producer and distributor is well aware of this fact.

As a newcomer to the motion picture field I quite naturally feel I have much to learn. Yet there are some methods, now practiced by those who dictate advertising policies of various concerns and individuals, which I think I will not attempt to learn. Because they start nowhere and end in the same place.

In my brief experience I have made a discovery; your average producer or distributor (both, if you please) is shrinkingly modest. He is like a violet, in this respect, on a lovely morning all covered with dew. He does not wish to see his name more than five times on every text page of each trade publication, nor in type larger than 48 point in such ads as he runs.

This lack of modesty, in the course of things, has developed the imagination of the press agent representing such modesty, who in his zeal to please the boss has completely exhausted the available adjectives in the English language, and, in some rare instances, invented new ones.

Frankly speaking, I regard swell-chestedness and superlatives as a pair of twins destructive, in the long run, to whoever uses them. Conceding that they impress, for a time, the ignorant or specious exhibitor, there is precedent enough to prove that they ultimately defeat the very purpose they are intended to further.

There is just one excuse—and only one—for publicity (by which I mean paid ads and articles of news or feature interest available for printing in the reading pages of a trade publication). That excuse is to acquaint exhibitors with facts (not buncombe) they want to know.

Foursquare Pictures, Inc., holds that view. George Backer, president of the company, is a stickler for facts and for consistency. He will not tolerate a misstatement concerning any Foursquare product; and no pecuniary gain could induce him to move a hair's breadth from his principles. Jacob Wildberg, our treasurer, is another man of the same sort.

Is it any wonder, with two such men behind me, that I find among my various duties in the Foursquare organization a genuine pleasure in the advertising and publicity department?

I won't deny that an ad must have its punch, or that a story intended for publication, a degree of readableness. But adjectives in ads and flub-dub press stories are a drug on the motion picture market—a combination that deceives no intelligent person and is becoming less read every week because of the species of dope employed.

I mentioned in a preceding paragraph that there is only one excuse for publicity of any sort about a picture which those controlling it want to book. That is to reach quickly as many exhibitors as is possible.

If we pause carefully to consider the function of advertising it is apparent that the speed of its operation is the real reason for its being. Were there an abundance of time for the purpose we could spread the information by word of mouth.

But time, where motion pictures are concerned, is more precious than in any other form of salable merchandise; which is the main reason why printers' ink is a necessity for the picture. Because once ready for the market the distributor (and the producer, unless he has sold outright the negative) must shoot, and shoot quick.

In preparing advertising copy I hold to the view that it should be highly informative. Pick out the selling point in the picture—the one the exhibitor will be interested in—and tell about it. Specific elements in that picture are the things to emphasize, not some general utterance about its being the "best ever." Even if the exhibitor reads such a statement he will not believe it. And above all things, be brief, illustrate the ad (if it demands illustrating), effectively, see to it that it is pleasing to the eye typographically and use plenty of marginal white space.

The results advertising brings are cumulative; therefore, I believe they should appear regularly and follow a definite line of reason—why purpose.

As for reading articles; if they be news there is justification for their publication; likewise, if they carry information which, though not strictly news, is of interest. But they should be written tersely, in a clear English style and without claiming everything in Christendom.

In few words: A press story should never be written unless there is something to say. Then it is well for the writer to give every publication one which differs in its phraseology from all others and to remember the geometric rule that "the shortest distance between two points is a straight line."

I might continue further in setting forth my ideas on the use of the daily newspaper, the nationally-circulated magazine and billboards—not to mention other valuable mediums—as measures to create patrons for the exhibitors who have booked pictures a distributor has to sell.

But the editor told me to write "about a thousand words," and editors, we know, have a diabolical faculty in wielding the blue pencil.

A Few Straight Tips

By An Old Timer

Picture Publicity Should Be Conducted on the Basis of Giving Box Office Value to Exhibitors

WHEN Henry E. Dixey some years ago produced "The Man On the Box" there was a line in the play that is a classic—"What's the use of lying when you're all alone?" The aptness of this truism occurs constantly in reading a film trade paper. It seems to be the object of so many publicity men to weave fanciful romances, apparently for the purpose of affording either amusement to the exhibitor or making a healthy looking "string" for the boss.

It isn't possible that the press agent thinks he is putting it over on the management of "Hilsdale's Palace Theatre." The manager of this theatre is no fool. He knows that although The Hilsdale's Home News (subscription $1.00 a year; outside the county $1.50, and no farm products taken in exchange) uses the press agent's bunk for space fillers, it will not bring patrons into his theatre. And it is this point that one must particularly observe in publicity—all copy issued should be of a constructive nature. The sort that will make more money for "Hilsdale's Palace Theatre."

Furthermore, there should be better co-ordination between the publicity department of film companies and trade papers. The aim of both should be to benefit the industry. To afford the exhibitor all information possible that should make it profitable for him to enter into contracts with producers for their output. So all publicity matter must have a news value.

To illustrate: Quite recently one of the large companies, through its publicity bureau, sent out a story concerning one of their stars, who, to give her art full sway, was compelled to eat a quart of pickles in order to make her bilious so that she could simulate seasickness in a picture. What earthly good is such a tale? What "damphool" would want to see this star because of this tale—unless he wants to see whether or not the press agent was lying?

Another favorite varn often used and which lacks value of any sort relates to "John Henry Ironsplitter." We are informed that he recently disposed of his patents for manicuring beer bottles and has formed The Exalted Motion Pictures, Inc. John Henry's press agent sends out a story that his boss is making a tour of the United States (from 42nd Street to Bronx Park on the subway). Mr. Ironsplitter wires back to the home office that the exchanges report a healthy condition of the potato crop and should bring big returns to the Exalted Company.

We are also acquainted with the weekly platitudes of our beloved centre pole of the industry, Jacob Bungstarter, who furnished the exhibitor with "weakly" drool of what the public will want a year after next in the way of pictures; what sort of stories are going to be the style for eleven reel features in 1942. That he stands for purity on the screen, at the same time calling attention to the box office value of "Was There a Mitigating Circumstance to Her Sin?"

All this rot leads to nowhere. We constantly hear the hue and cry that the motion picture industry is not given the consideration that it deserves as one of the biggest institutions in the United States. The reason is obvious. The heads of most of these concerns place themselves in such a ridiculous light, by means of piffling publicity, that the exhibitors, let alone the public consider these executives largely as jokes. And yet the publicity man continues to send out weird stories carefully "carbon copied" and curses his luck when he sees what he thinks should have been a page story, given a "three agate line" mention.

The press agent can perform a great service, not alone to the man that hires him but to the industry that supports him, if he will carefully study the policy and style of the different trade papers and write his news items with the individual touch that these papers desire. In this way he is sure to get a proper display for his items of interest and also be of service to the publication that generously accepts his copy.

It has been often said that the surface of the motion picture industry field has only been scratched. If this is true no one is more responsible than the press agent, who keeps patrons out of theatres by writing pure bunk about his company and its stars. Truth is stranger than fiction, why lie?

In dealing with the exhibitor, for he is the man the press agent should try to reach above all others, stick to the truth; tell him just what he is going to get with his pictures; give him information that he can use in his local papers to boost his box office receipts.

Any organization putting out a picture a week should have quantities of news concerning the making of the picture; matters of interest about the actors; valuable selling points for the exhibitor, or in other words, how to put the picture over.

This is valuable to all concerned and does not abuse the patience of the trade paper editorial staffs by handing out inane inanities.

Constructive news, making for bigger box office values for the exhibitors, should find a ready reception in the offices of trade publications.

The House Organ and Its Place

By Paul Gulick

Editor of the Moving Picture Weekly Tells How a "House Organ" Can Become a Valuable Advertising Medium

IN THE same spirit that the Packard looks down upon the Ford, the trade paper condescends to recognize the house organ. But inasmuch as the Moving Picture World has been courteous enough to offer its valuable space to an editor of a house organ it would be discourteous to pursue the analogy further along comparative lines. In spite, however, of the obvious tolerance, almost every one of the big manufacturing and releasing firms in the moving picture business has a house organ of its own, and when properly handled it is recognized as the most profitable and economical of all its sales media. On the other hand, it is freely admitted that it is not possible to make the house organ take the place of the trade journal as the sole advertising medium. Each has its own recognized place and function.

Paul Gulick.

There are three kinds of house organs, and all of them have been and are now being used in the motion picture field. First there is the internal house organ, directed solely to the salesmen and employes of a company; second, the intermediate or specific house organ, directed to the class or public which buys the product the company makes, and lastly, there is the purely external house organ directed toward the general public. The greatest mistake a motion picture manufacturing or releasing company can make is to try to have the same organ sound all three notes, or serve all three purposes. It can't be done. Almost every company has tried it and failed. Some companies have all three branches covered in three different kinds of house organs.

By far the largest and most useful class is the intermediate one, the house organ directed to the retailer or exhibitor. To be really successful, really a profitable and economical sales medium, the exhibitors' house organ must be confined strictly to this class. The very essence of the house organ is its mobility, so to speak, its adaptability to every circumstance, its utter freedom from the ordinary rules which obtain in the trade press of necessity, and which obtain in any second-class mailing proposition. For its higher mailing rate, the third-class book has compensations all its own, and with the new mailing rates in force after July 15 the disparity in rates will be more equalized than heretofore. The moment the house organ oversteps the exhibitor class, if it is directed to that class, it has placed limitations on its mobility which greatly hamper its usefulness and effectiveness. Sellers and buyers cannot be mixed in an equation to make them equal profits, and that is the end and aim of the house organ. The appeal must be direct and single-minded.

It is impossible not to become personal in an article such as this, for experience is the only standard by which success or failure may be judged. The history and present status of the Moving Picture Weekly, the house organ of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, may be interesting as illustrative of the general propositions set forth above. The Universal has never had a bed of roses; nobody ever scattered them in its pathway. From the time he organized the company, Carl Laemmle has had to fight for all he got, and has had to fight just as hard to hold it. His position and that of his associates was at all times that of men who fought against odds. Sometimes he fought for his very existence; sometimes his fight was the fight of the industry itself against combinations and men who sought to stifle it and him. The weapons in this struggle were not all on the table. The trade papers were not all of them unbiased, fair-minded and non-partisan, as the great majority of them are today. There were times when they would not publish statements for Mr. Laemmle, when they would not accept his advertising. The house organ, the old Implet, was Mr. Laemmel's answer, and R. H. Cochrane, its first editor, gave it a character, which it has striven to maintain in each of its subsequent dresses, of fearless, uncompromising candor and aggressiveness. Even before that term was invented, exhibitors came to look upon the Universal organ as an exponent of Pep. When it has fallen from that character in any degree, then the results are always noticeable.

One of the dominating features of the Implet, the Universal Weekly and the Moving Picture Weekly has always been the Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks. They form the keynote of Universal advertising, Universal publicity and Universal salesmanship. Thousands of exhibitors read them religiously every week and if a weekly comes out without one, as has happened once or twice, the editor hears about it instantly. With inspiration such as this, it would be a strangely passive editor who failed to carry out the pepful platform.

The Moving Picture Weekly has been all through the experience of serving two and three masters, but is now thoroughly committed to the "For Exhibitors Only" policy, though it had to give up many thousands of paid circulation in doing it. The single-minded policy enables every page in the book to conform to one of three uses: selling film, helping the exhibitor to make money on the film he buys, or building up the prestige of the Universal name. The Moving Picture Weekly has no other purpose. It has been demonstrated that it could make money. That was not its purpose, and it could never have fulfilled its purpose while making money. It finds its greatest purpose in helpfulness to the exhibitor and in carrying the universal message into every moving picture theater in America.

So much for the personal. Speaking impersonally, the house organ must never be allowed to become stale. It should be entirely new not only in material each issue, but in make-up and features. The trade paper has an advantage which is inherent in human nature in that it is paid for, and it is only human nature to try to get your money's worth out of what you pay for. To overcome that disadvantage the house organ must command interest by the snappiness of its appearance and contents. The cover is the first consideration, for if it does not look attractive it is quite likely to be laid aside till a more convenient season, which usually never comes.

Once the reader's attention has been aroused by the cover, it is the aim of the editor to have his material in a house organ so cunningly arranged that the reader will not lay down the book until he has finished it. No house organ should be so big that it cannot be entirely absorbed at one sitting and without tiring the reader. The routine and helps should be so arranged as to be easily detached and used separately. They should never be put all together in a block, but should be scattered through the book. And every article, advertisement or help should be carefully measured by the editor's scale of requirements, for paper, engraving, ink, labor and printing are mighty high.

An Originator of House Organs

H. J. Streyckmans, Publicity Man and Motion Picture Expert, was the Father of Several.

IN the motion picture business the house organ has been a much abused instrument, for the value of this adjunct to exploitation is measured entirely by the uses to which it is put. Unless the volume of business done is suffcient to absorb the cost it is a prohibitive proposition. The modern press book of today has in a large measure made the house organ obsolete for the small producer or distributor, but it is a desirable aid to the exhibitor when warranted as an addition to the trade paper announcements and the press books. Special exploitation of pictures when released, not covered, of course, in the press books, which are printed some weeks in advance of the date the films are issued, and statements which would not be accepted in a trade paper on account of their being of an editorial nature, find a proper outlet in a house organ.

H. J. Streyckmans.

The worth of a house organ depends entirely upon the manner in which it is edited and the impression it creates in the minds of the exhibitors who receive it. The film man who believes that the house organ is the road to freedom from the editorial watchfulness of the trade papers and who thinks he can start his own paper and say anything he wishes has a low conception of the mentality of the exhibitors, for it is even harder to establish a house organ than a trade paper because it is obviously biased and published in the interest of the company that pays the bill.

I published what was practically the first house organ in the industry in 1910 for the New York Motion Picture Company, called "Film Fancies," and it could properly be called the first press book, for I wrote it in such a manner that its contents could be adapted to various methods of exploitation. In those early days there was little or no advertising done in the daily papers, and in fact we were continually bombarded in the columns of the biggest and strongest papers, which, having done their best to kill the industry and failed, are today clamoring for the advertising patronage of motion picture people. The battle was fought out on the screens and in the lobbies, and the pictures won.

Banners, slides and heralds were the advertising bulwarks of the picture house, and in "Film Fancies" I gave them material for this purpose. I personally edited each picture, and gauged my adjectives according to the individual merits, and the exhibitors knew they could accept my statements and go the limit in advertising the subject when shown at their houses if my announcement so indicated. "Film Fancies" was a twenty-page magazine, printed in two colors, profusely illustrated, and issued weekly.

The next house organ I originated was the "Universal Weekly," of thirty-six pages of the same type space as the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, with cover in two colors. I only got out a few copies of this paper, as differences arose between Kessell and Baumann and the Universal and I cast my lot with the New York Motion Picture Company, and shortly thereafter became associated with the Mutual Film Corporation, just being launched. Again I originated a house organ, patterned after the "Universal Weekly," and it proved of material advantage in carrying messages to the theaters of the country. Conservatism was the keynote of this publication, which I called "The Mutual Observer."

Bert Adler, for years with Thanhouser, was the originator of "The Thanhouser News," which was a chatty sheet, covering the doings at the New Rochelle studios.

A house organ of great profundity was "The Implet," edited by Thomas Bedding for several years. Bedding is a scholarly gentleman, who evidently inherited an editor's desk as a birthright, for he has been identified with motion pictures since their inception, and has been the author of much literature that has been distributed in the trade.

Tom Quill, now in the lithograph business, started the Selig bulletins some years ago, and R. R. Nehls, now with the American as general manager, first attracted attention for his publicity work in this direction for George Kleine.

It will be news to many in the trade that the spectacular campaign by P. P. Craft some seven years ago covering "Dante's Inferno" and "Homer's Odyssey" was the work of Ben Atwell in conjunction with Frank Winch. Atwell, who is now with the Marion Davies Film Company, has been a prominent figure in the world of amusement, and ten years ago had the distinction of being the youngest managing editor of a metropolitan newspaper, occupying that position with the Chicago Journal.

With the advertising and publicity accessories now being provided to the exhibitor by first-class producing and distributing companies the house organ has lost its power of years ago as a business getter, for the business is more stable and there are not the frequent changes of management in the theaters, nor the influx of amateurs, apt to be lured by the glowing self-praise usually found in the house organ. The larger theaters "are from Missouri," and as a rule want to see a film before they book it for a week's run, which is the customary time for a first run, and a great many of the smaller theaters are guided entirely by the bookings of the larger houses. The house organ, therefore, to be really useful to the person for whom it is intended should contain elaborated details of stories which appear in brief form in the trade papers and breezy news items for use in the programs.

Pity the Poor Press Agent

By Ben H. Atwell

Press Agent of the Marion Davies Film Company, Inc., Relates Some of His Trials and Tribulations

WHY attempt to write anything of a serious nature about the press agent? He is almost always funny, because he is constantly attempting to attain the impossible, and to do that he resorts to such strenuous and drastic expedients that he falls victim to the peculiar relation of the sublime to the ridiculous. This applies with particular force to the theatrical press agent, but is also true of the picture publicity purveyor.

Ben H. Atwell.

When he succeeds, as he occasionally does, he is a hero—when he "falls down," as he frequently does, he is not only the butt of ridicule for those whose interests he is seeking to promote, but of the wide, wide world!

In order to keep his star or attraction before the eye of the public he must create news, and it must be striking news in order to successfully compete with the idiosyncracies of presidents or ex-presidents, the eccentric doings of suffragettes, the picturesque and pyrotechnic outbursts of perpetual candidates, the upheavals of nature, and wars, murders, explosions, fires, etc., ad lib, ad infinitum. In other words all the world is against the press agent. His best "plant" may be utterly swamped by the legitimate developments of an hour, or, worse still, turned into a huge joke by the stupidity, perverseness or the over-developed sense of humor of someone upon whom he must depend, yet whom he dare not take into his confidence.

If the press agent can create real news—something authentic, logical, possessing human interest and involving action, and more particularly an official record—the editor must publish it to satisfy his readers, no matter how thoroughly he understands and appreciates that the news was manufactured and "planted." His greatest protection against the press agent's ingenuity is ridicule, and once that he scents a vulnerable spot in the "plant" he will turn the guns of ridicule upon it, even though the guilty press agent be his own brother. Then in the twinkling of an eye the press agent and his story are alike undone. The most remarkable example of this editorial alertness that has ever come under my observation occurred some twenty years ago and the author of the press agent's destruction is familiar to New York World readers under his signature, Louis F. De Foe.

Mr. De Foe was in those days a very energetic and highly responsible young reporter for the Chicago Tribune. That enterprising newspaper scented a sensation in the making "somewhere in Europe" and assigned Mr. De Foe to arrange for pages to be printed in German, French, Italian and Yiddish when the "story" developed. To find typesetters capable of producing these pages in the desired languages Mr. De Foe was sent skirmishing along Clinton Street—a district devoted to foreign language newspapers, lithographers, junk shops, second-hand bottle dealers and similar concerns that choose low rent locations because of the character of their business. About the third place he dropped into on his quest he saw the printer's devil hanging up fresh proofs of a poster showing a ferocious appearing lion mangling a number of persons in the auditorium of a theater, with the caption, the man-eating lion who caused the panic at

————'s theater.
Now safely on exhibition for the first time since,
in an arena of stout steel bars.

De Foe searched his memory without recalling any such thrilling episode in the amusement institution mentioned and at once jumped to the conclusion that a "plant" had been arranged and that the posters were in the making for its exploitation. When he reported that night on the subject of German, French, Italian and Yiddish typesetting he laid on his city editor's desk a copy of the proof, which he had managed to purloin, with a memorandum to the effect that "something was scheduled to come off." The result was that the present eminent dramatic reviewer was ordered to attend every afternoon and evening performance at the third-rate theater in question until further orders. For days and for weeks he was fed up with wheezy and rheumatic song and dance teams, prestidigitators, mind-readers and the like that constituted the bill, until one evening an animal act was introduced. In the act was a mangy, toothless, superannuated lion. As soon as the brute appeared a dozen stage hands set up a tremendous hue and cry, and, armed with sharp steel bars, poked and prodded the "man-eater" toward the footlights. In sheer desperation the weary bedeviled beast jumped into the orchestra pit to escape his tormentors, landing in a bass drum in which he was hopelessly entangled.

The musicians fled with the audience tearing after them and in a trice the house was emptied. In the excitement someone "pulled" the fire alarm box and the street was filled with patrol wagons and fire apparatus when the surging, battling crowd reached the outer air and safety. Meanwhile the "man-eater," finding exertion essential to untangling himself from the wreck of the bass drum, coiled himself up within its shattered shell and went to sleep.

By the time the police got through calming the crowd, arresting the "careless" trainers and attending to the other formalities of such a situation every newspaper in Chicago was represented by an excited young reporter, eager for details, both real and imaginary. All jumped to the story for a big spread—that is all except the Tribune, which gave the laugh to the theater and to the other newspapers, reproducing the poster as well as a precise statement of what had happened by way of emphasizing and exposing the "plant." In this instance the justice of the Mikado was visited on the offenders—"the punishment fit the crime." While the management was busy fighting to save its amusement license from revocation the erring press agent who had risked human life in the panic he had created to make a story was quietly discharged. Thanks to Mr. De Foe's alertness that sort of publicity promotion was discouraged in a manner that has not been forgotten in Chicago in all these passing years.

The suspicious watchfulness of the press is shared by all who come in contact with the press agent, particularly public officials. I rode by a round-faced, jovial Irish traffic copper stationed at Columbus Circle the other day and his merry wink recalled an episode of something more than four years ago when he, single-handed and alone, all but wrecked one of the largest shows in America in his efforts to prevent a publicity promoter from "putting one over on him." We were employing a band of wild men from the woolly west to lend color to the production—cowboys who rode like centaurs. In order to attract attention to them we turned them loose just before noon daily and had them ride down Broadway.

Now, all sorts of parades and "bally-hoos" are forbidden on Broadway without a special police permit, and that is just why we did it. We calculated that some traffic policeman, alert in the enforcement of the law, would arrest the outfit. Of course, no Metropolitan newspaper could resist the temptation to photograph and describe in detail such an incident when the cowboys were before the bar of justice. The cowboys, in turn, would plead that they meant no harm, but had to exercise their wild horses and, being strangers, naturally selected a route where there were sights to be seen. A small fine would square everything and the publicity would be worth the price. For days we paraded, inviting arrest, but the policemen along the line smiled wisely and merely said: "You fellows know better than that; get out of here."

The chief of the cowboys was one "Wild Bill," who lived up to his name, at least in appearance. He vowed he would force an arrest, and the next noon they passed my good-natured copper friend, then stationed at Forty-sixth Street and Broadway, and he met that worthy's smiling rebuke with a vile epithet.

"What ya mean by that?" demanded the policeman.

"Wild Bill" leaned over the neck of his horse and repeated the insult, while his companions guffawed.

There was a lightning swing of a club, followed by a crash and a groan and "Wild Bill" landed in a limp heap on the pavement. Before his companions could pull themselves together the angry copper had dashed through their ranks, clubbing right and left with one hand and dragging cowboys from their saddles with the other. Broadway was carpeted with cowboys—the worst licked lot of wild men seen in many a day. The horses ran in all directions, but a full dozen of their riders were too badly beaten up to attempt to follow. When he cooled down the policeman summoned a patrol wagon and bundled the whole crowd off to the Forty-seventh Street Police Station. Yours truly wasn't looking for any exploitation on that incident, but put in many an anxious hour trying to beg the papers to suppress publication. A band of cowboys who took a collective beating from a lone crossing copper could hardly be counted upon as an attraction to draw turn-away crowds to any box office.

The man who wrote the song "There's a Broken Heart for Every Light on Broadway" must have had the press agent in mind. The press agent is the chap who introducey "gay" in "Gay White Way." He is the author of most of the thrills and 98 per cent of the laughs that are associated with that institution, but few people have any idea of the rebuffs and the sickening bumps that he encounters in his gladsome career. The incidents referred to are typical of a bulging library or unwritten history on the subject.

Publicizing Pictures

By Kilbourn Gordon, General Press Representative for William A. Brady.

IN these days when on every hand is heard something of the high cost of print paper and the scarcity thereof; when, due in part to this and in larger degree to other causes, space, at least in the newspapers, is tighter than ever before, it would appear that brevity and meat are two words that should be constantly kept in mind by those whose business it is to publicize the pictures.

Kilbourn Gordon.

The day has past, if ever there was such a day, when great masses of mimeographed material and pictures despatched weekly far and wide find a welcome at the dramatic or motion picture desk. They usually find the waste basket unopened, and there is a reason for this. I have yet to find a newspaper that objects to anything worth printing. On the contrary they welcome anything that even by a stretch of the editorial mind might be considered suggestive of news; but they abhor bunk, and bunk in quantity they've been fed for a long time. In consequence many are "fed up" and will not take the time, if they have the inclination, to look through what in the course of a year must amount to a ton or so of stuff in the endeavor to dig out a story, squib or what-not worth their while.

In publicizing "Stolen Orders," for example, prior to its presentation at the Park theater, it was our endeavor to send out only such stories as might have a direct appeal through timeliness, or the possession of a news angle, however remote. The presence in the production of United States battleships furnished such a story; the use of a dirigible balloon and a hydroplane another; while the fact that one of the scenes showed a gambling house operating full blast, with chemin de fer the game, came in very well in connection with the raids the district attorney was then making on various fashionable gambling clubs. These stories were short and enjoyed quite a little circulation.

If brevity is the soul of wit also is it the essence of space, for without it and something worth telling the chances of seeing one's handiwork in print are reduced to a negligible minimum.

Obstacles to Good Press Work

By Henry MacMahon

General Press Representative of Educational Films Corporation Reveals Weaknesses in the Picture Publicity System

PUBLICITY should be informing, entertaining and punchful. Many concerns go on the principle that the fewer the facts they give to their public, the better the results. The exact contrary is true of the written word. The more real facts you present, the better the public is served. The Munchausens and Cagliostros of modern press agentry are passing now that the Arch Pretender of Europe is being thoroughly exposed and lying and deceit are relegated to the discard.

Henry MacMahon.

The facts, however, are not sufficient. It is necessary to select an entertaining angle from which to view them. Every press story should have a central point, a theme which the surrounding facts illustrate. It is the ability to seize this central point that constitutes journalistic ability. To many persons life's panorama presents a flat, gray, unrelieved surface; but the clever, trained intelligence picks out the interesting, salient feature and plays it up.

The third element of good publicity is punch or wallop. There must be an object to hit, a careful calculation of time and resource, a well-directed swing, and the landing upon the object with just the right amount of force to make the blow tell. The successful press agent knows what he is driving at, and possesses the driving power. He lifts the merely informing or the merely entertaining into the realm of dynamic energy by making it a missile to arrest popular attention or stimulate action at the proper psychological moment. In other words, he puts information or entertainment to work.

Why are these qualities of instruction, aesthetic pleasure and force so lacking in the run of film publicity? First, because of its vast volume. There is so much to be taken care of that almost necessarily it becomes a plodding routine. Many of the press executives are overworked. After a time they entrust the actual writing to understrappers and fritter away in business details the strength that should be devoted to composition. There follows the deadly atrophy of newspaper sense, and pretty soon the whole office is grinding out tons of copy that bears not the faintest relation to the needs of the public press.

Prexy—meaning the president of the "fillum" corporation—frequently jumps in and aids the process of decay by demanding superlatives, nauseous self-praise, and the "claim-it-all" style of puffery. The writing inevitably becomes false and impossible. The motion picture editor of the daily paper chucks the whole "fillum" envelope unopened, and the trade editor tears his hair and groans over the weekly Herculean labor of picking kernels of solid nutriment from the noisome mass of Augean refuse.

But worst of all, perhaps, is the want of close co-operation betwixt journalism and the picture industry. The press agent, as I knew him in the first twenty years of my newspaper experience, was a mixer. He lived in the newspaper offices, did the boys many favors, asked assignments from the editors, wrote the stories to which he was assigned or which he had tentatively suggested for their approval. He had but one theatrical attraction to cover, and he covered every possible side of it. Now he sits at a desk, bosses a multigraph and a flock of assistants, and sends out thousands of pieces of copy a week by mail and special delivery. The personal touch is gone, and it is imperatively to the interest of the industry to win it back.

A further cause of the poor average of publicity is the lack of faith in the American public's intelligence. We in the trade have been talked to death regarding the supreme value and importance of "selling copy." Sales arguments in every paragraph, in every sentence, in every line—such is the unceasing cry of the sales-maniacs. But take it from an old campaigner of many press battles, the only publicity copy of any sales value whatever is instructive, entertaining and forceful articles about your attractions; articles that the trained editor will put in his paper as news. Do not be afraid that the public cannot understand you if your aim is high. That public craves knowledge, inspiration, the fillip of imagination, the tickling of fancy, the up-welling of humor, the sense of power in great achievement; and you can't possibly cater to its high and spiritual amusement needs by the methods of the dry goods merchandiser or the vendors of plumbing fixtures, soap, shingles, drugs and patent articles.

The incidence of the war ought to cure many of our present publicity evils. Flub-dub about worthless pictures will be eliminated as soon as the Government has put the kibosh on these "non-essentials" and there are no more worthless pictures to scribble about. Overwriting will have to go because it will become too expensive. A few trained specialists will replace the flocks of mechanical assistants, the younger groups of whom will substitute the rifle, the bomb and the bayonet for the pen, the pencil and the typewriter. Quality not quantity of copy will be the desideratum. Conjoined with this should be the active aid of a trained newspaper man in every branch exchange office of the country. This, in order to localize the film news in every large center and present it to the local motion picture editors in form suitable for local requirements. A good story will be the be-all and end-all of the publicity man's existence, and in planting this he will best serve his master since live columns in influential newspapers are worth more than all the conventional junk that ever cluttered the mails and annoyed the gentle souls of the overfatigued editors.

Press Agent's Debt to His Profession

By Hopp Hadley

"Publicity that Will Not Stand the Acid Test of Serious Thought is Fatal" Says Well-known Writer

WITH the splendid opportunity for the study of the subject offered by the wide activities of the newspapers of the different world powers at the present time, a conscientious student of publicity, which is such a large and important part of the theatrical business, is so busy absorbing knowledge that it seems a waste of valuable time to air any personal views. That being the case—and using the one personal pronoun that will appear on this page—I will merely do a little thinking out loud with a view to suggesting to fellow showmen more important thoughts along the same line.

Of course that rare member of the theatrical profession who was prone to speak disparagingly of "press agents" has no longer any excuse for his ignorance. For three years he has followed the great publicity campaigns of the different governments at war. He has seen them cleverly molding public opinion of neutral countries in their favor, building up the morale of their own people, preparing them for new diplomatic moves, for the launching of loans, for the levying of taxes, for the conservation of food, for conscription of man power and, even in the case of Germany—thank God — for news of bitter reverses and tremendous losses. What could drive home half the importance and the dignity of "press-agenting" more than the vital part it is now playing in shaping the destiny of nations?

Hopp Hadley

More impressive, even, than the efficiency and the magnitude of these nation-wide publicity campaigns is the success of the Allied group in retaining the confidence of their readers while the methods of their enemies have resulted in the gradual awakening of a distrust which has now completely nullified their efforts in the greater part of the world, not excepting large numbers of intelligent readers among their own peoples.

The dire lesson to be drawn from the success of the Allies' publicity methods as opposed to the failure of the German "inspired articles" is the relation of "good publicity" to veracity. From the very beginning of the war the truth has been the mainstay of our writers, while lies have been the undoing of the German efforts.

Strange as it may seem to many who retain the mistaken idea that press agents cannot stick to the truth and still be press agents, publicity that is not founded on fact is bound to prove disastrous in the long run. Just as lies circulated by a government during the present crisis do that country's cause incalculable harm, so lies circulated through a business firm's publicity department will fail to increase that company's profits.

Thoughts along this line point to another dangerous reef where it might be a good idea to anchor a buoy: The reading public of our day is highly intelligent and woe to the writer who insults that intelligence! To the late Alexander Dowie of Zion City fame was accredited the speech: "I don't care what they say about me as long as they say something." Assuming that brains are at a premium, there might be some sense to such a statement, but, taking into account the fact that our average school boy thinks for himself, publicity that will not stand the acid test of serious thought is far more fatal to the man or the goods it advertises than silence. "Getting your name in the papers," unless the story that contains the name redounds to your glory, is worse than useless.

This thought may be brought home by recalling the announcement made at intervals during the past decade by different motion picture producers that Director So-and-So made a record by turning out several high-class, artistic productions in two weeks, four days, eight hours and thirty-two minutes. Imagine the long suffering public storming the box office to enjoy one of these carefully staged offerings! Which is about on a par with the long, bouquet-laden article accompanied by photographs calling the attention of the world to the fact that "somebody" is again out of a job, having tearfully handed in his resignation to take up a new line of work to be decided upon in the near future. Overworked stars is another case in point. Imagine enjoying the performance of pretty little Miss Dimplechin when you have read that the poor girl has been working like a truck horse night and day and is laughing for your benefit in spite of the cramps that threaten to double her up like a jackknife at any minute.

Examples of publicity that defeats it own ends are more easily determined than are the more common forms of wasted efforts; articles with sufficient news value to warrant their appearing in print but lacking any element that awakens the favorable thoughts or live interest desired. The effect of this latter style of publicity which can well be termed neutral, if indeed it should not be branded as negative, might be likened to calling a busy man on the telephone when you have nothing to say to him. When your next call is announced do not be surprised if your prospect refuses to listen.

In a nutshell: the subject of publicity is a tremendous subject. It is a dignified subject, an important subject, and a subject that will be better understood and appreciated by the layman as the years pass. In this connection theatrical press agents of today find themselves shouldering a responsibility which is the direct result of the lack of serious thought given their profession by their predecessors.

To the failure of theatrical men of former times, to realize that theirs was the same profession that served the nation and the world in the molding of public opinion upon questions of vital importance, can be laid the fact that press agents' stories are too often considered open to doubt. To present-day publicity men is delegated the solemn duty of so establishing the ethics of their profession that articles inspired by business firms—or motion picture companies—will be recognized as being just as reliable as printed words inspired by the Government.

Where Do We Go From Here? By Vivian M. Moses

Publicity Manager of Select Pictures Corporation Quanders Over Squandered Space and Remarks: "Let's Shoot the Dope Straight"

LET'S shoot the dope straight!

Man to man, brother to brother, eye to eye—cut out the devious by-paths that circumvent the hill of Fate, and steer an air-lined direct route of Sincerity.

News is news—just as much as pigs is pigs; and news is just as solid and tangible a fact as pork meat. As such, news is entitled to the front page—the front rank—the high seat. This, if you please, with the trade paper in mind—and it is the trade paper that we are dealing with.

Why tell how Lottie Coughdrops has refused a marvelous offer of marriage to an Italian nobleman, because she cannot bear to disappoint the thousands of fans who watch for her pictures on the screen? It means nothing in the life of the exhibitor; it adds nothing to the value as a star of Lottie Coughdrops; it produces nothing for the company that has put forth the publicity. Let us chronicle, rather, the less picturesque, work-a-day fact, that Norma Talmadge has begun work on such and such a production, based on a nationally advertised stage success—"De Luxe Annie," for instance. This is important news to the exhibitor, and the homely, brief story disseminates information which is valuable to the producer to have told to his companions in the trade.

Vivian M. Moses.

Returning to Lottie Coughdrops—for we will say her diligent P. A. keeps her ever before us—let us substitute for the story of the Italian nobleman, and his spurned offer of an honorable marriage, an honest-to-Gawd story, in which either Lottie or her producing manager tells the exhibitor that she has decided not to attempt any more out-vamping-Theda roles such as she had been doing for several productions past. Let Lottie say frankly, or say it for her, that super-vamp stuff sits badly on her lithe screen figure; let her say that she thinks the public is entitled to a rest. Or, brethren, if this be not the dope, we can just as well, and just as legitimately, play the reverse English on Lottie. She can be made an exponent of vamping to the nth degree. And the direct message can be given to the exhibitors that Lottie will continue her vamp roles "as large as life, and twice as natural," or words to that effect.

The point is, getting Lottie's name into print by the Italian nobleman route is valueless; getting it into print, even in less prominent type, and in less space, in connection with news of production is highly desirable. And, remembering our trade paper angle, any announcement on Lottie's behalf as to the type of role she intends to play is legitimate news, prime for exhibitor consumption.

There is a subtle, wonderful, tonic quality about sincerity which accomplishes work that no amount of arch cleverness can possibly encompass. The earnestness of sincere endeavor shines through the crudest, roughest dress it is given. Splendid sincerity will leap from a story even if it is shackled with halting diction and lame composition. Such an announcement will run like quicksilver to the understanding of men, and plumb the bottom for which it reaches. There is no gainsaying sincerity; like an all-solving agent it encompasses doubt and suspicion, and overwhelms them. Meanwhile, side by side with your clumsy, sincere story, may travel a beautifully comparisoned hokus pokus of fiction, seeking the same goal—and it will get nowhere. Where are the screen stars set up and maintained by endless sheaves of tales of lost diamonds, stolen bull dogs, gold mounted limousines, made-but-for-me perfumes—and the like? Where are the milk baths of yesterday—the tan bark tales of winters gone?

Trade papers are made for tradesmen, and we who write for them are tradesmen. So are their leaders, whether they be producing magnates, sales seeking exchange men, or inquisitive exhibitors. Let us then, in our trade papers, talk shop, not moonshine. Let us remember that Maybelle's summer home on the Sound gets no money at the box office; that Harold may be a hell of a hunter, but since he never portrays anythings but parlor types, his prowess as a Nimrod butters no bread.

It is well to write of Alice Brady that she will permit no doubling in her productions, but insists upon acquiring such skill as is necessary personally to do whatever work the double was to have been employed for. This is legitimate news. It tells the exhibitor that in the forthcoming production he is going to get honest goods. It insures him of a sincerity and earnest determination on the part of the star to make her picture as good as it can be made. Suppose, however, our story had been that Alice Brady was a devotee of dancing, and, together with some other person, had rented a studio for the sole purpose of there indulging in Terpsichorean delights, for which she stole every possible moment from her production work—what would the value be? Yet both these stories have been written, and sent out over the trade journal route (never mind who the stars were), and one found space in the columns of the trade papers as readily as the other. What was the result? In the one case, the chronicling of a legitimate piece of news, directly concerning a forthcoming production; in the other case, a waste of the time of all the people who worked on the story—author, editor, proof readers—and all the paper and ink which it took to print it; the sole accomplishment was getting a name into print, which could have been got into print in a way that was valuable.

Let's shoot the dope straight!

This is a period for economies, and true scientific saving. And this applies to the direction of our energy as well as to our materials—time, and printers' pabulum.

Putting Over Features on Broadway

By Harry Reichenbach

How the "Tarzan" Campaign Was Planned and Why the Same Policy Holds Good for the Smallest City

WITHOUT ego, without any attempt at self aggrandizement and at the behest of the editor, I will attempt to chronicle, in the following paragraphs, the efforts which film authorities credit with having attracted unusual attention to the most recent picture I handled, "Tarzan of the Apes."

As stated in the headlines, "Why the policy holds good in smaller places," the results in every instance in which the picture has been shown and the effort made to parallel the New York principle of exploitation have been abundantly satisfactory to impress upon, even a doubter, the efficacy of the method used.

Harry L. Reichenbach.

First. When "Tarzan of the Apes" arrived in New York in the form of a sample print, the producer did not like it and was skeptical as to the possibility of showing it on Broadway to profit. He was for disposing of it at once.

Second. No one, with whom we spoke regarding a Broadway showing, but that warned us to wait for an important theater, and cautioned us against going below Forty-second Street.

Third. We were warned time and again to change the ending and make it a happy one, instead of leaving the auditor in doubt as to the denouement.

And without ego, as I said above, I took directly the opposite path to that advised and in every instance went directly opposite to suggestions of well-known film men.

I contracted for the Broadway Theater in preference to either the Park or Forty-Fourth Street. I cut the ending to a more abrupt finale. I objected to Mr. Bernstein's removing any one scene because of its seeming improbability. Result:

"Tarzan of the Apes" played to profit after we had spent twenty-five thousand dollars on the Broadway engagement independent of the theater rental.

There is an old theatrical adage that credits showmen with poor foresight and poor deductional powers.

I have taken it upon myself in all my work as a publicity man in the film business to discount every suggestion made by one of the so-called "Wise Men" of the industry. I have yet to work in co-operation with any producer who was capable of looking at the box office value in a film. I have yet to encounter one big producer who, aside from estimating in advance the earning power of conventional program pictures, can judge the value of a special feature within seventy per cent of its actual worth. So that I was justified in going opposite to the suggestions of kindly intending "Wise Men."

Even before we leased the Broadway Theater, I made a contract to dress the lobby with living monkeys and had secured the only two available apes in the East. I had sent out twenty-five thousand "broadsides" picturing as vividly as ink can picture, the story, its great popularity as a fiction document, its wide-spread favor as a novel and the fact that it was better known than any other American novel of recent date.

Before we engaged a theater or considered doing so, there were few exhibitors who did not know what "Tarzan of the Apes" meant. It was a catch title. The busy exhibitor reads few light magazines or novels and I know that our hardest work lies in acquainting our consumer with the importance of the subject.

Still pictures, six to the set, broadsides in five colors, with one side pictorial and other text, descriptive of the story, and containing newspaper criticisms on the book, reached every exhibitor in the country before we announced our Broadway showing. Then using but three trades papers, I began exploiting the picture.

"Tarzan" is essentially a sensational subject and I used only sensational display advertisements. That our trades paper campaign was extraordinarily beneficial is attested by the fact that we heard personally from seven hundred exhibitors who requested rental or percentage terms and gave us some of their open dates.

Then we began our New York campaign. Through the commissioner of highways we secured a permit to place a huge banner across Broadway. The nights being lightless, this banner was the most prominent advertising feature possible and attracted wide-spread attention.

I began by using small space holders in the daily papers, with one paper each day carrying a large and sensational announcement. The big display was circled each day and thus, without lavish expenditure, I reached the entire daily paper circulation in greater New York at least, once a week.

Two days before the opening, the newsboys went on strike and for ten days there was practically no newsstand sales. The newsboys and newsstand strike began on Friday. By the following Monday I had printed six hundred thousand sensational cardboard postals of convenient size and used seventy-eight bonded distributors from various distributing concerns and, safe to state, believe that we reached over half a million homes in Greater New York.

Later I used the same method on Long Island and in the closer sections of Jersey.

When the newspaper circulations became normal again, I again resorted to circling displays, using two papers a day for the talking advertisements, and so attractive did these displays appear that letters of commendation came from Mr. Erlanger and Jos. M. Gaites and other noted showmen and since then "Hearts of the World," "Kaiser," "Four Years in Germany" and other heavily advertised pictures have resorted to the style.

During the run of the picture, the huge ape was allowed to escape and invade Broadway on Saturday night, during the rush hour, with the result that the Associated Press syndicated the story throughout the country and every paper in the East played it up on the front page. There was compiled the following: 116 columns of reading notices, 42 special stories, 197 photographs, 11 cartoons and drawings published in the daily papers of New York and Brooklyn during the seven weeks' run.

The business at the theater remained as great during the newspaper strike as before and later and thousands of people came to the theater with the throw-aways in their hands.

The abrupt finale did its share toward arousing discussion, as in no few instances did the spectators come to various employees after the show and vent their disappointment in the ending and discussions among groups of the spectators in the lobby were rife after each showing.

The display of live apes and smaller monkeys and the decorating of the lobby in jungle style with tropical effect, made the patron entirely susceptible to the style of picture he was about to see.

Two hundred and fifty book and drug store windows were decorated with lobby frames, in which the theater name was featured. Every day during the run of the picture the snipe posters were changed. After each snow storm, and there were many during the engagement, we banked the snow piles with lathed cards and snipe.

We secured a prominent phrenological scientist to read the Ape's head in the presence of newspaper men. Members of the faculty of Columbia University and the heads of the Bertillion department and finger-print department of the New York police force used the monkey to experiment with, always with representatives of the press present. And the result, you know.

And that no advertising campaign, conducted in New York but what it can be paralleled in any town, is demonstrated by the results in fifty cities which have followed absolutely the campaign book issued in conjunction with the picture and where, in every instance the business has been record breaking.

Advertising and exploitation is merely a matter of studying the box office angle of your subject and then emphasizing that part of your picture.

Of course, all the exploitation and advertising and all the expenditures made could not have been done without the broadminded scope of William Parsons, the producer, who deposited a sum of money in a bank and then said, "GO TO IT."

Producers who expect to realize benefits from huge expenditures, must give their exploitation departments an opportunity to use their originality.

A publicity man capable of holding down a desk in a large organization has reached his position by means of demonstrated ability and should either be given carte blanche—or the gate.

Producers who have come from some commercial line, or from some other branch of the amusement profession, know little or nothing about advertising. His advertising man does. If you are driving a thoroughbred—give him the reins.

Troubles of a Press Agent

By Leslie Jordan,

Press Representative, International Film Service and Graphic Film Corporation.

HOW to become a successful press agent is a query calling for much cogitation. Offhand, the answer doesn't seem difficult: Make your stars and productions a little more talked about, see that the limelight of public inspection shines upon them a little more luminously, than on rival stars and productions living in your vicinity—take the measure of your brother press agents and compete with them. And if you can't come out at the head of the list make the aforesaid brothers break some records.

Leslie Jordan.

All of which sounds very simple but, unfortunately, there are difficulties. The life of an unsophisticated purveyor of amusement news is far removed from a path of roses and, even after his eye teeth have been sharpened, he will find the thorns have a habit of making their unwelcome presence felt.

And the fundamental thorn, the one from which all others receive their daily nourishment, is the doubting mind of the editor, the ever-present suspicion that somebody is trying to "put something over" on him.

In reality the press agent is the most guileless of individuals. He makes of himself a human dynamo, gathering scraps of interesting information from the air and generating news items. Like a bloodhound on the scent, he puts his nose to the ground, runs a piece of news to earth, serves it up in delectable form to his friend the editor, ofttimes only to have his veracity doubted. And to have the microscopic eye of an unbelieving editor turned upon his work, with the question mark ever preeminent, naturally hurts a self-respecting press agent's feelings.

Of course there may be times, when news is scarce, he allows his imagination to take flight, but if, in the flying, the public eye follows him with interest, surely, on these rare occasions, they are entitled to their little aeronautic adventure into the realms of fancy.

Primarily the press agent came into being for the benefit of the editor—the connecting link between the theater and the stage—and while he may now hang his Panama on the theatrical hatrack, he still retains an overwhelming desire to rest his feet, affectionately, on the editorial desk.

Possibly some future generation of press agents may enjoy the ideal condition this picture calls up. It may be that our sons and daughters, and the sons and daughters of present-day editors, may live together in complete harmony and contentment—but only if we, of this generation, are able to purge from the editorial mind the lurking and unwarranted suspicion, it apparently entertains, of our absolute trustworthiness from a legitimate news standpoint.

And so, for a press agent to be completely successful, it seems to me he should do more than promote stars and productions—it's up to him to do his share in a campaign to restore absolute confidence of our endeavors in the editorial mind, to make a study of the psychological conditions responsible for the existing suspicion therein and eliminate it completely by playing the game from the opposite angle.

Publicity Men In Organization

By Charles W. Barrell

Get Together Meetings of Original "Space Grabbers" Develops the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, the Livest Organization in the Trade

MUCH water has passed under bridges since the day when the late Charles A. Dana exclaimed in a burst of editorial irritation: "The press agent is a pirate on the high seas of journalism!"

Perhaps it was Tody Hamilton or one of his confreres in the early school of P. T. Barnum publicity, who had succeeded in "stealing" a goodly portion of Dana's jealously guarded space in The Sun, thereby calling forth this oft-quoted epigram of denunciation.

But since that time the press agent has almost succeeded in living down a reputation for flamboyant hardihood in his profession. He has almost succeeded in becoming a business man. In the course of the transformation, he may have lost something in picturesque interest, but it is also evident that what he now lacks in colorful irresponsibility, he has made up in solid achievement as a sales stimulator.

Charles W. Barrell.

The growth of the business of producing and distributing motion pictures into the fifth industry of the United States during the past three years has developed a new breed of press representatives. It has also developed new problems in the publicity man's never-ending task of keeping the names of his firm and its products before the greatest number of people in the most persuasive manner possible —at the minimum of expense.

With the idea of taking up for general discussion various matters coincident with the intelligent performance of the day's work and the mutual increase of efficiency, a number of the more prominent advertising and publicity men in the films got together around a table in the Hotel Claridge one Wednesday afternoon early in August, 1916, and decided to form a regularly incorporated club.

This was the beginning of the organization known as the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., which is now generally credited with being the livest and most effective body of its kind that has yet grown up in the amusement field of this country.

In setting down a brief record of the association, it might not be amiss to state that the individuals who took active part in its organization, were originally members of the publicity committee of the now defunct Motion Picture Board of Trade. They were men of the stamp of Carl H. Pierce, T. M. Alexander, Arthur James, Pete Schmid, Harry L. Reichenbach, P. A. Parsons, Paul Gulick, Lyman O. Fisk, Julian Solomon and others.

Having formed a habit of lunching together almost every week for something over a year for the purpose of discussing matters relating to the effective promotion of film sales, the members of this publicity committee decided to form an association of their own, when the parent organization finally succumed to an acute attack of pernicious anemia. Upon making know their desire, Arthur S. Friend, attorney for the Jesse L. Lasky Company, courteously offered to draw up formal articles of incorporation free of charge and also to donate his services as legal adviser. This generous offer was accepted with a vote of thanks and on September 12, 1916, the articles of incorporation were finally approved by the proper authorities, and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., came into being as a full fledged corporation for the transaction of certain definite activities, under the laws of the State of New York.

The aims and ideals of the association can be briefly stated best in the opening paragraphs of the by-laws, which read as follows:

"It shall be the purpose of this association to voluntarily foster the interests of motion picture advertisers and to promote a more enlarged and friendly intercourse between persons connected with the business of advertising motion pictures and general motion picture advertising, and to reform abuses relative thereto; and to voluntarily diffuse accurate and reliable information affecting the standing of persons engaged in, and with reference to the conditions, customs and usages of the trade or business of motion picture advertising, as well as affecting and relating in general to the motion picture industry."

During the two years that have passed since the formation of the association, much constructive work has been accomplished; and at the same time, to quote a line from the annual report of President Arthur James, "the organization has succeeded in pulling up some of the weeds that were rapidly casting a shadow on our business standing in the world at large."

In co-operation with the National Board of Review, the association has waged a successful fight for the suppression of objectionable advertising in territories where it was formerly a practice to exploit decent screen plays under a camouflage of misleading words as highly spiced and appealing to the morbid passions of humanity. In the states of Texas and Washington, in particular, successful warfare was carried on against such objectionable showmanship, until now the instances of this sort of thing are few and far between.

Through friendly co-operation with the trade press of the industry, a higher standard in advertising and publicity ethics has also been maintained.

At the outbreak of the war, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers was the first organiztaion in the United States in its field to mobilize and place before the federal authorities a detailed recruiting plan with lithographic posters, lantern slides and other patriotic propaganda material.

The message of the American flag—"If it's worth living under, it's worth fighting for"—thus spread broadcast, was soon on the lips of millions of American citizens, while military and naval authorities of the standing of General Leonard Wood, Brigadier-General Walsh, Captain John F. Lucey and Read Admiral Usher, endorsed the work as the best advertising on behalf of recruiting put into effect by any civilian organization.

This group of motion picture advertising and publicity men was also among the first in the country to adopt resolutions urging Congress to repeal the "Zone System," as applied to second-class mail, and to institute a vigorous campaign against the effect to increase postage rates on periodicals, thereby preventing the wide dissemination of reading matter—and incidentally, publicity.

The association has also taken prompt and unanimous action against the present evil of buying up old pictures and reissuing them under titles differing from the ones they bore when first produced in order to mislead the public into the belief that the stories are new and original.

In formally turning over to the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers the task of managing the big international banquet to be held in New York, some time in September, to signalize the work accomplished by the screen in furthering America's war aims, the National Association of Motion Picture Industry has paid the smaller oragnization the most striking compliment that has yet come its way. But to those who have followed the record of achievement already compiled by the press agents' league, there is no doubt but that the commission will be executed with neatness and dispatch.

The officers and members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, include the following well-known advertising and publicity men:

President, Arthur James, Metro; vice-president, P. A. Parsons, Pathe; secretary, Allan Rock, Press Service Bureau; treasurer, Paul Gulick, Universal.

Board of directors, Arthur James, Metro; Allan Rock, Press Service Bureau; Terry Ramsaye, Mutual; P. A. Parsons, Pathe; Paul Gulick, Universal; Paul N. Lazarus, Vitagraph; Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Famous Players-Lasky; Jacques Kopfstein, Charles E. Moyer, Famous Players-Lasky.

At the present time the following members of the organization are enlisted in the patriotic service of the colors:

Captain James Loughborough, Lieutenant Harry King Tootle, Lieutenant Arthur James, Sergeant Harry I. Day, Sergeant Victor M. Shapiro, Private Eugene Zukor, Private Bernard P. Fineman and Private P. A. Parsons.

Service Department and the Exhibitor

By Julian M. Solomon.

Advertising Department, Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

IT is remarkable what a small proportion of the exhibitors take advantage of the service offered by the producing corporations. After three and a half years of serving the exhibitor, the results show that the number of those willing to avail themselves of the opportunity of co-operation, offered by the producers, is surprisingly small. In the days when the Bosworth office, as a separate unit, was serving the Paramount exhibitors, at that time numbering about 4,000, we had what was called a red tab list which contained the names of all of those who accepted the offer of Bosworth, Inc., publicity and service aids. At that time only about two per cent. of the names on this list availed themselves of the opportunity to get the publicity and advertising service which was offered gratis. Since the amalgamation of the various units into the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the list of exhibitors has increased very materially, but the proportion of real live advertising exhibitors in the smaller towns is still appallingly small. If one eliminates the first run houses—those playing the films within the first two weeks after release—the percentage remains the same.

Julian M. Solomon.

Each time an offer of service is made to our list of contract holders, the same exhibitors reply every time. In other words no matter what new stunt you offer, you find that the same few live theaters are accepting your offer.

I venture to say that if one would take the files of the World for a year or two years back and look at the Advertising for Exhibitors Pages, he would find a very small proportion of the (15,000) exhibitors in United States were contributors to this column. A comparison of the names of contributors, with our own live wire list, I believe, would be startlingly similar. In fact, I believe that we can find about 95 per cent. of your contributors are on tour "extra live" list.

In spite of this fact, I am of the opinion that the quality of showmanship being displayed by the exhibitors, is increasing almost daily. This is being evidenced through the replies received to queries and problems published in "Progress Advance"—our house organ. The function of that magazine is to assist the exhibitor in exploiting the plays which we produce or distribute, and we find that the number who are taking advantage of this, is increasing constantly at an encouraging ratio.

On the whole I think that the present day exhibitor is far more progressive than the exhibitor of two years ago. It is not a matter of desire but a matter of evolution. If he is not progressive with the present pictures, and present cost of doing business, he has to quietly lay down and die, and each year sees the passing of more and more of the old school and the advent of the real honest-to-goodness showman. The signs of progression are certainly encouraging enough to continue offering, and giving service to the exhibitor.

"THE SOUTH IS BOOMING," SAYS WEAVER.

"The South is booming. Business is better than ever, and the people all have lots of money, which naturally makes the picture business good and makes the outlook for fall and winter particularly promising," declares George F. Weaver, the World Pictures branch manager, who was in New York City paying his home office a visit last week. "The South is cotton crazy," continued Mr. Weaver. "Even the old colored men who have been town characters for years in the smaller towns and have been notorious for never doing any work have felt the infection of the South's alertness and are astonishing their townsfolk by trying to rent patches of ground for the cultivation of cotton."

Roving and Throwing the Wild Bull

By Walter K. Hill

Quite Some Words Concerning the Noble Science of Writing Lengthy Stories on Short Topics for Scare Heads

[Iditorial Explanation.—Considering war's rape of the ranks of Press Agentry, and desiring to serve ness have been devised as First Aids to those aspirness have been devised as First Aids to these aspiring persons who leave non-essential occupations and turn their hand to useful employment at the Wheel of Mimeography. Knowing absolutely nothing about the profession of Press Agentry we claim special fitness to serve as guide to those who know still less.

Press Agents have always come from somewhere no matter where they may go. It has been ever thus since The Dove rushed the first piece of publicity into the Ark with the request: "Please Play Up." There is no sign to this day of any change in possibilities.

Publicists will continue to come from somewhere, equipped mentally in ripeness of experience, and if these halting efforts at First Aid to Oodles of Copy will encourage some brave heart to tackle the easiest job in the world we shall rejoice in the opportunity that has been shoved upon us by the Simon Legree who dictates what shall be done hereabouts.—The Idiot.]

First Aid to Born Press Agents.

WHAT we need is more press agents. The search for jobs may be left until there are more publicists to fill them.

Anybody can become a press agent. Just ask anybody and they'll tell you that the great secret of their life is their gift of a talent to write pieces for papers to print.

Unfortunately, for the reading public, these writings of gifted everybodys seldom get into print until they become defendants or corespondents in divorce proceedings. More often, however, they are poets.

Verse, worse and then some, fill the mails that carry to newspapers the gifts of born press agents. To encourage this great industry we have started this College of First Aid.

It's folly to let the impression continue that to become a press agent one might better have originally enjoyed good health and newspaper training. This, Melancthon, is all wrong.

Many a good newspaper editor has become utterly ruined through shifting his job to that of press agenting. Given a mimeograph, running loose at their behest, newspaper men have been known to turn out publicity that would suddenly become waste-basket fodder at their very own hands in their former occupation.

Food Will Win the War.

Press agentry is one thing, but to be a Director of Publicity is an entirely different matter. They never run two alike in the same font.

Being a press agent is a job; being a publicist is an occupation—but when one becomes a Director of Publicity it is a cinch.

That's why all press agents have a cinch.

The life of a publicist is one round of joy. Being a man of imagination, his principal idea of a wonderful time is expressed in writing about the summer homes, automobiles, lap-dogs and swimming pools of the company stars while he must content himself with a cozy little flat in Harlem.

Space must be stolen and editors become willing accessories before, after and during the fact. So few editors own the paper they work for that they must look first to their own job—and then at the publicists publicity.

The Skipper of a mimeograph, as has been so well said and often, must be a man of ideas. His first idea must be to get a job. His subsequent ideas must tend to the holding onto thereof.

Having the ideas and the job, his troubles begin.

Who, among the bosses, looks upon the press agent with friendly interest? Nobody.

Pay Your Tips in Thrift Stamps.

Who, among the employees, fail to warble, where the publicist can hear: "It's pretty soft for you?" Not one.

As for the bosses, some of 'em hire press agents for the sole reason that they like big words in their "statements of policy." The bigger the words the longer the article. The longer the story the better it is for the scrap book. The thicker the scrap book the quicker the press agent "gets the gate."

Everything in show business works for the benefit of the publicist—excepting the fact that the publicist is the only employee who never gets a benefit.

The men who bark at the public through box-office windows have a club and enjoy an annual benefit. And the publicist, who never gets a benefit, is compelled to work for the treasurers' benefit publicising.

The publicists have a club, but have never had a benefit. Matters were moving smoothly toward that juicy consummation at $7.00 per and everything looked rosy—until the bosses stepped in and grabbed away the one soft piece of work the press agents ever had in sight.

That's the way with bosses. They know they can do it and they do. However, the publicist, without the bosses, would prolapse—fall down or out, as the dictionary says.

Therefore, while publicists endure bosses must be endured. If there were no bosses, there would always be the Efficiency Department—so what's the use (of the E. D.?).

Stand by the President.

Speaking of the bosses, James Gordon Bennett, second, had the right idea. When he died and his will was read the most words in it were devoted to founding a home for aged, infirm, penniless or incapacitated newspaper workers. That's what we call class.

Who shall be the first fillum magnate to endear himself similarly? The line, may it be said, forms as usual, to the right.

The E Pluribus Fillum Co. Home for Publicity Directors!

(Due apologies are extended to Terry Ramsaye for borrowing the name of his great and promising organization—accent on the promising.)

Think, Mr. Boss, how great the honor would be to have the name of your "personal star," your favorite film brand or the moniker of your organization perpetuated while mimeographs shall last!

There's no real necessity of going the full James Gordon Bennett route. Do it now!

May we hope that the organization known, on the curb, as the All Mighty Press Agents will make a few speeches about this at their next $7.00 dinner? Even press agents get old. Even publicists, eventually, might use a home.

The work of publicising shows, films and theater must go on, even if press agents never have a home.

"Home is where the hat is," has long been the motto of the publicists.

The Man Behind the Man Behind the Gun.

Therefore, Melancthon, when you leave your childhood scenes between Cuttyhunk and Punxsutawney to venture into the toil of press agenting don't depend upon any boss doing a Bennett. He may and then again he may not.

But what the boss is sure to do is this: He will see that the skids are always well soaped. Only ceiling-walkers have been able to beat the system.

"Here's your job," says the boss.

And as he turns away he softly murmurs: "I'll dare you to keep it."

So saying he forthwith begins to co-operate with the publicist to that end.

Sometimes matters go on this way for a whole week. Frequently a leaf representing one month is torn from the Charter Oak Meat Co. calendar before anything happens.

Occasionally it takes several months; in rare instances, years may lapse before the same boss says the same thing to the man he has hired to take the place of the man he has fired:

"Here's your job. I dare you to keep it!"

Sublime faith in everything but a German's word of honor will lead you always into other and better jobs, Melancthon. The process has established the most famous saying known to the curb:

"Who are you with now?"

Only last week one of the New York banks gave a dinner and a pension to a man who had been in continuous employ of the same money changers for fifty years. But he was not a press agent.

Be a Doubleyou Ess Esser.

Good publicists must have imagination. The better the imagination the better the publicist. Every day some good press agent imagines himself right out of a job.

But he's a consistent bird, this press agent as a clan. He imagines himself right into another. Thus onward he goes, always onward, imagining himself into better jobs.

It's when his old imaginer won't turn over that the film boss who impersonates James Gordon B. will endear himself. That home for incurable press agents would be a great help. Certainly, at least, a considerable help.

The noble art of space-stealing is the only virtue on the calendar that hits on all cylinders. It never misses. It never back-fires.

Books of synonyms have been compiled to canonize the ancient art. Adjectives were especially created for the use of publicists.

To others who use them they are as Liberty Bond buttons on the lapels of a German reservist's coat. "They make," as has been said by our betters, "what is, what it ain't."

Bring with you, Melancthon, your own ideas, for the old ones have been well massaged. And the war as per our best little guessers, won't last very long after Pershing's Crusaders have spat upon their palms.

These have been used: Service flags; God-mothering Regiments; Letters to President Wilson and answers from Joe Tumulty; Smokes for Soldiers and Sailors; Letter-writing Clubs for the Boys Over There; Red Cross, Thrift Stamp, Knights of Columbus, and other "drives" around the mimeograph; office staffs knitting sweaters during business hours; tambourine caddying for the Salvation Army—all these and many other patriotic movements have served time as space stealers.

The Lord Loves a Self-Commencer.

These have not: matters of business policy as relating to the conservation of platinum in thinking up main titles; ditto as to ebony, ivory, concrete and other precious materials used in the Efficiency Department; the relation of steam dredges in reducing the overhead on mimeograph ink; how a famous film star who used to cry "Line Up" in back yards of tenements attained a voice in grand opera; Government ownership of reel-bands; the boss's opinion of his competitors; the high salaries paid to press agents as compared to the pittance drawn by the stars they write about; motorboat trips by canals and inland waterways by general managers of exchanges visiting territory; finger-printing film stars animal pets; conservation of copy paper—and one or two other methods of selling films to the exhibitor by publicity methods

Said the boss to the man he had hired
In place of the man he had fired:
"Here's your mimeograph,
Your working staff,
Your typewriter, desk and—your job."

Allan Rock

COMMENCED his career in the motion picture industry in 1913 with the organization of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and until last year served the interests of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. On January 1, 1918, Mr. Rock organized the Press Service Bureau for the purpose of utilizing to a greater extent the newspapers throughout the country for a wider publication of motion picture news. Since the first of the year Mr. Rock has strengthened his organization by the addition of a motion picture department to handle the exploitation and merchandising of feature films.

Allan Rock.

Through the syndication mediums offered by Mr. Rock film publicity representatives are utilizing to the fullest extent the new field of operation presented to them. The publication of the novelization of film stories in newspapers is being recognized by P. A.s' as valuable in the successful marketing of a production. Mr. Rock was elected to the secretaryship of the A. M. P. A. in September, 1917.

JOHN FLINN TALKS ON INDUSTRY'S DOINGS.

At a dinner given by The Hundred for One Club last week John C. Flinn, director of advertising and publicity of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, made an address concerning the motion picture industry and what it has accomplished during the past year. The club membership is made up of one man from every industry, and Harold M. Pitman, of the counsel for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is the member representing the motion picture enterprise. Mr. Flinn spoke at his invitation. The dinner was well attended. Mr. Flinn's speech received much appreciative applause.

What It Is and Should Be and What It Very Often Is Not. Western Men Lead In Hustle

INTRODUCING the general subject of this special number, the editor points out that publicity is not paid for as opposed to advertising, which is. This may be a good enough rough definition, but we think that a better definition may be had, for sometimes advertising is publicity and some intended publicity is merely advertisement. There seems to be a more adequate rule.

Publicity is the creation, through propaganda, of a tradition favorable to a person, place or thing.

This may seem a bit too sweeping to those who recognize only the newspapers as a source of publicity, but it is close to the mark. Publicity popularizes the institution rather than some single feature of that institution. The man who advertises "Mary Pickford in a New Film" is an advertiser, but he is no publicity man. If you are keenly eager, as the result of publicity, to see Miss Pickford, you may respond to this appeal, but the announcement by itself will not attract. Getting a little more definite he may advertise

Epes W. Sargent.

Mary Pickford in How Could You, Jean?"

This is better because it is more informative. Now you know what you are going to see. Perhaps the title sounds interesting. You may not care for Miss Pickford's work, yet you may want to see what it was Jean did to call forth the shocked reproach. It is still an advertisement, but to a mild extent the title is publicity. But a publicity man would probably write it

See
Mary Pickford
Kiss the Cow
in "How Could You, Jean?"

Now advertisement becomes more strongly publicity. People who like Miss Pickford will be more than ever determined to see her in order that they may witness the unusual osculation. People who do not care either way will wonder what it means and go to find out. It may arouse some talk, and talk—word of mouth advertising—is pure publicity with 100 per cent circulation. If a cut of Miss Pickford whispering her love secrets to the milk business be added to the bare announcement, the publicity value of the advertising is increased. She doesn't really kiss the cow, but it looks as though she were about to, and the visual appeal of the picture is added to the mental argument of the type.

But advertising Miss Pickford in one subject is but a limited form of publicity. It is but a meagre contribution to the tradition of excellence already built up about the star. It will derive more from previous publicity than it will add to it, but it will add to that tradition if the current offering be well played.

Advertising without the element of publicity is of no value whatever. The advertisement merely makes capital of the publicity, and if there is no publicity from which to draw the advertisement will not pull. The mere announcement of a certain star in a named play will not draw unless either star or play enjoys publicity. It is no disparagement to Miss Pickford, for example, to say that nine-tenths of her success is due to publicity, for publicity is nothing more than the creation of a tradition in her favor, a capitalization of her personal charm, her acting ability and the adequacy of her productions. The first two were publicity when she was still employed by a company so averse to publicity that it is said to have discharged one actress for permitting her name to be given out. The publicity worked in spite of this restriction and "Little Mary" was known and loved long before Mary Pickford was heard of, yet she did not return full value to her employer until further adroit publicity by the Imp made her more fully known by her rightful title. On the other hand, all the publicity for book and play served better to advertise "Three Weeks" than the vogue of the star, for the preponderance of the publicity was in favor of the play, and the star capitalized this publicity to her own benefit in furthering her reputation as a leading player of vampire roles.

Publicity is the establishment in the public mind of the belief that the motion picture furnishes good entertainment in general and that certain stars provide better entertainment than others through their greater abilities. In the days when the players were unknown or provided merely with local names according to the fancy of the audiences, the motion picture had to carry the publicity load. When the players became known, the vogue of the pictures was greatly increased, for now the fans had something definite upon which to pin their loyalty. The person, the individuality, always possesses a stronger appeal than an object. It is easier to centre admiration upon Mary Pickford or Charles Chaplin or Bill Hart than to like pictures as such. There is more the suggestion of intimacy, of close contact, and the bulk of the prosperity of the business is and ever will be due to the stars.

It follows then that publicity should be the exploitation of star and, through the star, the production companies. On the other hand, many companies seek to take the position that their stars are popular because of their affiliation with this or that company. Undoubtedly this is true at base, for left to themselves the stars inevitably commit self murder so far as public favor is concerned. Were they always permitted to do as they want instead of as they should, they would last no time at all. A few years ago Augustus Carney made a hit in Essanay films, but left to gain greater opportunities with Universal. He did as he pleased, and pleased no one but himself, and he has been forgotten. The list might be extended indefinitely. To this extent, at any rate, good management enhances the star's ability, but both good management and a star are essential to good publicity.

It is perhaps only natural that the publicity men employed by the companies should seek to gain publicity for brands rather than for the stars, and even at the expense of the stars, but even where they seek to advertise the stars they frequently fail through the use of material so poor that it is not printed or that fails to gain effect where it is given space. The press story is the best form of publicity, but it must be a readable and plausible press yarn and not of the "dog" variety. The stolen jewels plant was barred long before pictures became important, but the raided flat or dressing room is still prevalent, and it would take a certified accountant to figure out how many automobiles have been purchased by press agents for their stars. The announcement of a new car for this or that player no longer thrills the reader to the marrow of his bones, but the bulk of the copy pleases the boss, and it is easy to write so the press men keep on buying more automobiles than the country can manufacture. It never was good publicity, and it never will be, but probably the supply of mental autos will never be exhausted. The near-fatal accident in which the victim "pluckily insisted upon finishing the picture," are more numerous than owners of Liberty Bonds, but they keep on coming, though they no longer fool anyone and frequently tire many, and stories of million dollar stars are as numerous as $50,000 pipe organs in ten cent theatres, though it is never added that the star pays all production costs out of the million.

Read over the trade papers, the local photoplay page and the motion picture magazines intended for public sale and it is seldom that a really good press story is discovered. Most of them are dulled through repetition or else hopelessly impossible through lack of plausibility. Press agents seem to feel that so long as they send out a certain number of mimeographed sheets each week they are performing the services for which they draw salary. They are not. They are swindling their employers unless they can write stuff that will be accepted by the press and the public alike. It is seldom that in any batch of flimsy ten per cent can be found available as even passably good and the greater the volume of press work the smaller the amount of really good copy.

The house manager is generally as bad. He uses the mats supplied by the companies or follows the ready-set forms. Few set out to build up on the suggestions given, and fewer still realize that the best publicity for the stars and pictures is work they do themselves for the stars they play in the method best suited to their own town and even to their own clientele in that town. It has been estimated by a man who has studied the matter closely that not more than two per cent of the exhibitors are good advertisers. They do not know and do not seem to care what publicity means. They advertise perfunctorily, they clip and paste the reading notices the company supplies and they complain of bad business. The bulk of them make no effort to do more.

Strange to say, the smaller the town the more enterprising the exhibitor is, as a rule. He has to hustle or get out, and so he either hustles or makes place for someone who can, and broadly speaking, the bulk of the good advertising is done west of the Mississippi. Not all hustlers have taken Horace Greeley's advice by any means, but the further west you go, the higher the general average rises until the Pacific Coast yields by far the best average results.

And yet it is very simple. All an exhibitor has to do is to interest his own patrons in the stars he offers at his house and to interest them in the house itself. The first can be done through the use of press matter in the program and newspaper, and the second by maintaining a clean and inviting house, giving to it an atmosphere of briskness and then talking about its general excellence. It means the possession of some ability as a writer, a fair knowledge of type and type setting, enthusiasm and common sense. It is perhaps to be regretted that the companies give as much aid as they do. The exhibitors, as a class, hustled to much better effect five years ago when they had little or no aid than they do now when it is easier to lay back and complain that the companies do no more, than it is to get out and make individual effort count. More space is being taken in the newspapers. A greater number of lithographs are being posted, but the business of publicity is in most cases less successful today than it was four and five years ago. Let's wake up.

The Personality of a Theater as an Advertising Factor

By Harold B. Franklin.

EVERY one prefers to meet with a delightful personality—be it a man or the edifice he has built. As a pleasing personality popularizes the man so will a personality popularize your theater.

The same reason that prompts the merchant to erect a magnificent department store, with a reputation for service and fair play, should prompt the progressive manager to make his theater a daily reminder of the high standing of his institution among particular people. Do you think that a bank builds its sumptuous home, costing millions, merely to satisfy a whim? No! It is there in actual stone and bronze as a monument of its stability and strength—merely an advertisement — expressing boldly its personality.

Harold B. Franklin.

Every business reflects the personality of the man who holds the reins. He should possess imagination, sense for style, and ability in organization. Mere business ability by itself does not make a permanently successful manager or theater. Is the theater a jumble of rush, push and disorder? That is the spirit of the manager. He is not big enough to make an atmosphere. On the other hand, there are theaters where things are organized, systemized, and where the rule is prompt, respectful and intelligent service. There is a zest, a push, a go about everything that is infectious and contagious. The appearance and conduct of your theater reflects the patronage you play to. Every nicety and refinement is a means of bringing a new patron.

You have advertised your theater as being foremost in your locality. Prove it! Make good to your patrons! After your patron buys his ticket it depends entirely what impression your theater makes whether he comes again or not.

A theater sells two things—entertainment and service. Give them choice entertainment and generous service. Make your theater wear a smile. The proper frame of mind for your patron is important. Enthusiasm should be apparent. The public does not like dead ones. The big theater succeeds because service is given on a lavish and efficient scale. Make your theater big!

Courtesy, a big factor in the personality of your theater, can be counted in dollars and cents. It increases your business because it makes friends of your patrons. Thus out of polite acts dollars are coined. It's the way you run your theater that makes it different, not the walls or decorations. The supervising mind of the manager is always in evidence in every detail. Make the personality of your theater stand out. It is the best advertisement you can get.

Johnstown Publicity Man Tells Why "Aids to Exhibitors" Fail to Aid in the Proper Advertisement of Films

NEWSPAPER advertising, we are asked to believe, is the big force that must be put behind pictures to put them over. If this is true, and I believe it is, then the better the advertising the greater the results are going to be.

Publicity men for producers are constantly dinning this newspaper idea at us. But they evidently don't believe it themselves, or, if they do, they have a rather curious idea of what theatre advertising should be. I don't know where the producers dig up the men who map out the press sheets, or whether they are Broadway press agents or folks who hold their jobs by virtue of relationship with company officials. What I do know is that they are either unaware of practical advertising needs, or don't care a continental whether or not the exhibitor gets what he should have.

Instead of seeing that advertising aids sent out on pictures are the sort that will get business, the majority of the producers seem to be sitting back while their press departments use up all the available adjectives and coin a few new ones, and prepare cuts that are in many cases worse than useless, calling the result "advertising" and "press matter." If some of these press sheets have any self-respect they must be ashamed to be seen around a newspaper office.

Good Cuts Needed.

A good cut, one that means something, and that to some extent interprets the idea of the picture it is designed to advertise, gives a newspaper advertisement distinctiveness and pulling power. If every newspaper ad printed by a picture house carried a cut that truly interpreted the big idea of the attraction advertised, a bunch of theaters would be renovated and a few tills enlarged. If the star is the big pulling power of some particular picture, let the advertising carry a cut of the star, but let it be a good cut; a cut that expresses something, and not a junk portrait. Every cut should be designed to dominate the advertisement it graces, and it should mean something, not merely fill space.

A World cut on "Journey's End" as it shows up in the press sheet.

The same cut on "Journey's End" as it reaches the exhibitor.

The majority of the press sheets and the majority of the cuts furnished now represent wasted money.

The World Film Corporation's press sheets and cuts are about the most consistently bad that I've seen. The cuts seldom mean much, and even if they did, they wouldn't get it across in the form in which they reach the exhibitor. In the World press sheets, the cuts are proofed up straight, but the ones the exhibitor gets for his advertising have the name of the star or stars, the name of the producer, and the title of the play, stuck all over them in type. Then, here's a fair sample of the text from one of the "sample ads" that the World publicity men prepare for the use of the exhibitor:

"A big, smashing, forceful picture, crammed with intense dramatic action and powerfully telling a tremendously interesting, delightfully entertaining story."

No, this isn't copy for Griffith's "Birth of a Nation," but for Kitty Gordon in "The Interloper." There are six of these sample ads, and one of these, only one, gives any hint of what the story is about. It tells us that "The story told in this production is of a wife who finds that she is dearer to her husband by far than his first wife ever was, and in making this discovery she is buoyed up by the satisfaction of not having destroyed her husband's faith in his first wife's memory as she had the opportunity of doing."

If this is really the story of the picture, how does it become deserving of the description in the paragraph above? If it isn't, why hasn't the World's ad man dug out the advertising idea and brought it out forcefully, in a way that will put it across? That press sheet cost money to put together, distribute and print, but it dosn't show it.

Occasionally, the World digs up a subject for a cut that means something. But, when it does, the cut is ruined by the type matter that is smeared all over the face of it. If the World wants to put out a press sheet, let it plan the matter to get results for the exhibitor, not to fill space, or serve as an excuse for what the exhibitor should be getting.

Universal is another concern that ruins its scene cuts by smearing star and firm names and picture titles over them. Why don't they play up their trade-mark in an unobtrusive way, and make cuts that express the idea of the picture?

Dig up a Vitagraph press book on a Blue Ribbon feature. Take a look at the newspaper ad and the cuts the Vitagraph press department tells you to run. Then compare it with the illustration on the cover page of the book. The cover page generally contains a cut that really expresses the idea behind the film, but it, of course, isn't to be given to exhibitors for advertising purposes.

Take a Select press book, and look it over. See what sort of cuts they offer you for your advertising—and notice, at the same time, that the star name and film title, with the Select's trade-mark, of course, is plastered quite prominently on each cut.

A cut of Theda Bara that will show up well in an advertisement. This cut was obtained by sawing off about four-teen lines of scroll work and Fox Company announcement.

Metro doesn't make any scene cuts on its weekly releases, and the advertising copy carried in its press sheets wouldn't go very far toward putting the picture over. Metro, by the way, does make better-than-average star cuts.

Before me as I write is a Mutual press sheet on "Hearts or Diamonds," a William Russell picture. There are five "suggested ads," of which three are single column—or supposed to be. As a matter of fact, each one measures two-and-a-half inches in width, and a newspaper column is less than two - and -a- quarter. Another measures seven-and-an-eighth inches across—a half-inch over three columns. The fifth "suggested ad," designed for two columns, will really fit into two columns.

And so it goes. Run over them all, big pictures and small, and only in rare instances will you find a well-planned, carefully thought-out advertising campaign. Just for instance, take Brenon's "Fall of the Romanoffs." The press sheets shows five "ready made" ads—in other words, cuts made from ink sketches. Each of them contains exactly the same wording—"Herbert Brenon's 'The Fall of the Romanoffs,' with Iliodor, former confidant of the Czar." Not another word; not an attempt to put over the idea of the play. And the illustrations—! Every scene cut has the name of the producer, the star, and the title of the film scrawled on its face.

Impossible to Get Cuts.

The lack of good cuts is not the only thing that bothers the exhibitor. Say that he's willing and able to prepare his own advertising. Say that his good money is pining to be spent for the acquiring of newspaper space to advertise the producer's pictures. He knows that the companies are spending money to have cuts made for HIM and that this is a part of the charge that enters into the calculation of what he must pay for pictures, but HE CAN'T GET THE CUTS.

A Bluebird cut with star name and picture title scrawled across it. Figure from the cut whether it's a western, a stone-age, or a modern drama.

For instance: Bluebird is making scene cuts on every picture, and lately this concern began making special ads on every picture, some of which are excellent and mats of which are supposed to be available for exhibitors. Kindly note that I say supposed. We run the Bluebird program regularly, and I haven't seen a cut on a Bluebird film for over a month. The Pittsburgh exchange insists that it can't get them. Why not? Is not a certain percentage of the film rental we are paying going to make those cuts? Of course, they're not what they ought to be, but we should have something, at least, to help us get the pictures across.

The only cut obtainable for a three days' run of "Raffles." One look at the cut and you know what the picture is about—not!

Here is another little instance: "Raffles," with John Barrymore, is just going the rounds in this territory. We booked it for a three-day run, with the assurance of the salesman that the exchange could and would provide press book, scene cuts in several sizes, and "ready made-ad" cuts. After writing and telephoning Pittsburgh, we received, two days before our run opened, two scene cuts. They were both double-column cuts, and they were both the same! It was too late then, of course, to get anything made. So we had, for our advertising on "Raffles," one cut. This cut brought out the idea of the production wonderfully, at that. It showed a young man and a young woman sneaking a kiss past the censors—just that! Imagine how that cut brings out the merit of the story of "Raffles!" Imagine! A young man really kisses a young woman in the story! Something unusual, indeed, in motion pictures, is it not?

The Foundation of the Game.

Proper handling of the picture, first, and proper advertising, second, is the foundation of the motion picture game. Make a picture of average worth, Mr. Producer, and then see that a real advertising campaign is mapped out for it, for the use of the exhibitor. By this I don't mean that we must have elaborate, costly campaigns. Just see that the advertising prepared for the exhibitor gets the big idea of the production across. You'll discover that it won't take a tenth the urging it does now to get the exhibitor to book your stuff, when you've shown him how to put it over, and demonstrated that you intend to keep on helping him put it over.

Why not get down to brass tacks? If the press departments of the producing companies were giving exhibitors either what they need or what they want, there would not be so much of a kick coming. But they're not.

Exhibitors are spending the money on newspaper advertising. In the larger cities, most of it is well spent. In the smaller towns, a great deal of it isn't. The exhibitor takes the word of the producer that the cuts he's furnishing and the advertising matter he hands out are all that are needed to put the film across. Both producer and exhibitor are suffering.

The first step, it seems to me, is for the producers to gently inform their press departments that exhibitors are to be furnished with cuts and advertising that count, and that the present super-abundance of adjectives is to be cut out. Then a survey should be made. Find out the average space that the exhibitors—not in the metropolises, but throughout the country—generally use. Plan advertising to meet the desires of these exhibitors, who know their local conditions, and who know what they can afford to spend. Provide them with advertising that advertises, and they'll use it, instead of tossing it into the waste-basket, as they usually do with the stuff they get nowadays.

The producers all believe that proper advertising will put their pictures over. They tell us so, at least. They are maintaining press departments that are getting out press sheets for the purpose of furnishing the necessary advertising. Most of the money they are spending in this direction is wasted.

A producing company, preparing advertising for the use of exhibitors throughout the country, can afford to hire the best brains in the business. If what they preach to us is true—and I believe it is—good advertising will put the films over. If any exhibitor is shown that the pictures of any company, coupled with the advertising it furnishes, will make him money, he's going after those pictures with both feet.

It would appear, therefore, that it's time to quit talking of "service," and provide a little of it. There are going to be a great many changes in the next year or two in the picture field, and this advertising question is going to have a great deal to do with the nature of those same changes.

Incidentally, these are war times, and the money that is being wasted on useless junk can be used quite handily by the government, the Red Cross, the K. of C., Y. M. C. A., or any of the other war agencies that really need it. Let the producers either cut out the junk and quit pretending to give us what we need, or insist that press departments send out something worth the money that is expended.

Famous Opera House Is Picture Theater

Daniel Connor Tells How He Won Success in Piper's at Virginia City, Nev.

DANIEL CONNOR is one of the earliest of the film managers. Far back when the motion picture was still a curiosity rather than an accepted form of entertainment, he learned the business under his brother, who still has a motion picture show on Coney Island's famous Bowery. Later he started a touring show and eventually he landed in Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev., one of the most famous playhouses in the country during the boom times in the silver district. Virginia City went to seed with the passing of the bonanza days and Piper's gradually fell from its proud estate, but the town is coming into its own again and Mr. Connor has put Piper's back on the map, as he tells in this story, using for advertising type "packed in" during the early sixties for Mark Twain's famous newspaper. He is a veteran among the veterans and it is fitting that he should be the one to rehabilitate the house that was once the glory of Golden West.

It was away back in 1898 that I started operating a picture road show with 6x9 hand bills. The first big opposition to cross my path was Lyman Howe, a few year later, introducing a display of lithos from 24 sheets down and liberal newspaper display. He used mechanical effects to bring out the different sounds the pictures called for.

Right here for the first time my eyes were opened to the value of advertising and effects. I added the big billing, took big newspaper space and bought pictures that suited novel effects.

Soon I had real live chickens squawking, almost electrocuted dogs to supply the real yelp required in the picture; used choir boys and organ, wind, water, lion growls, whistles, charged cylinders, etc. I don't really know whether it was the advertising or effects that sprung the business—but in all these years I took no chance—used them all—and—good music.

I opened Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev., as a picture house in 1910. The town looked "ripe"—the streets were jammed and no amusements in town. But they simply would not patronize "only a picture show." Dramatic companies would draw packed houses at $1.50, yet a picture show almost nothing at 10 cents. I stuck like a Greek for three months—a $20 General Film show doing from $4 to $12 a night; no higher.

There was no operator here until I broke one in. When I got loose from the operating room I went after my old standbys—mechanical effects and newspapers. Booked a Kalem war reel, raised all the windows and broke loose with a real Verdun battlefield. The noise brought a stampede. I followed up with a Selig and got the lions growling. Then I bought on wind, water and steamboat whistles.

It was something new and staggered the natives. It created talk. They had never seen pictures put on nearly right. I put in a five-piece orchestra, and gradually modulated my noise effects to natural when I got them coming—and I am here yet—all battle scarred from fighting and keeping out opposition. I may add that now opposition's career is brief, though often.

I got Sargent's little receipt book on advertising display, etc. Studied out "points," rules, learned cases. I "hung around" the old "Enterprise" printing office, established by Mark Twain back in the 60's. Soon I could lay out my display in point sizes and make them look different from a grocery advertisement. I studied the value of white space and the distribution of white space. I use many of the fonts that have been in this office since the very day that Mark Twain opened his "Daily Enterprise." They are all low and never used on that account. But I ordered them and underlaid them myself. I kept the old daily busy with poetry, spelling, guessing, puzzle contests, etc., in connection with the pictures and I got the business.

Nearly all the oldtime professional people we read about have appeared on Piper's stage—Booth Barrett, McCullough, Jefferson, Grant, Greeley, John L., Paddy Ryan and Jem Mace. Belasco ran the stage for two years, so did Boucicault. The old bill rooms show Tony Pastor, Pat Riley, Harrigan and Hart and the old Wheel Burlesque.

On the tragedy end there are bullet holes in adjoining rooms that tell grim tales. Just as Frank Mayo got through playing "Davy Crockett" one night the Vigilantes brought in a man and hung him till he was dead from Piper's convenient gallery—but, that's in the old days—today it's a refined motion picture show.

Special Theater Advertising Displays

Method Employed by Seattle's Leading Exhibitors to Distribute Publicity in Places Where It Will Attract Greatest Attention

JENSEN & VON HERBERG, of Seattle, is one of the largest exhibitor users of newspaper ads in the United States, indeed one of the pioneers in this line, as they used page ads as long ago as 1908. They average about 2,000 inches of advertising a week. But their scope is not limited to newspaper ads alone as they use 150 twenty-eight sheet billboards a week, eight-sheet specials, window cards, framed and unframed, together with special made up photograph displays of which 40 to 50 are placed in the most exclusive specialty shops and jewelry stores. From 1,200 to 1,500 window cards are used each week, and approximately 300 to 500 one-sheets. When they play a feature picturized from a well-known story, the local book or department stores are always glad to co-operate with them by putting in a window display, knowing that all their available supply will be quickly sold through the picture campaign, for first, Jensen & Von Herberg sell the picture for entertainment or story value.

Slides and trailers comprise the advertising on their screen. They have abandoned heralds except for very special occasions. The slides are made up from scenes in the play, and also straight word slides, while the trailer is made up of the title of the play, a few chosen scenes to arouse interest in the coming feature with a follow-up title stating when the picture will be shown. Slides are exchanged between our theaters; that is, the Coliseum today show is advertised to three different audiences in the company's other theaters, and so on around. This form of advertising is felt to be particularly valuable as they are talking to 100 per cent. prospects, the proof being their presence in a picture theater. Also the telephone is used to call attention to certain groups or associations that a picture with particular appeal to them is at one of the company's theaters. For instance, the musically inclined were all notified that Geraldine Farrar was coming in "Carmen."

Slides, lobby, newspaper ads, cards and billboards all are hooked together to hammer home just one point, for every picture has one big selling point (the peg so to speak on which the story is hung), and this is what Jensen & Von Herberg attempt to get to the people. As all their runs are short, they feel that they must concentrate on the one thing, to get their message over, and to do this, to pound away on the big interest point of the picture. For instance, Charles Chaplin's "A Dog's Life" was his first million dollar comedy; or when you saw Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Year in Germany," you lived with him, his four years in the Hohenzollern hell of empire-grabbing intrigue and treachery; "Believe Me, Xantippe" was a mystery plot in which a $40,000 bet, a $100 forgery and a million dollar girl all lent interest. Even the "Xantippe" was a subject of interest, because like "xylophone" it sounded different than it looked, and like "Xmas" it was something to look forward to, and simply pronouncing it stumped most of them.

BELGIANS VISIT FAMOUS PLAYERS' STUDIO.

The Famous Players-Lasky studio in Fort Lee, N. J., was recently given a most surprising honor when members of the Belgian and Italian missions to this country, together with American soldiers, visited the big glass studio to see how Paramount and Artcraft pictures are made.

John Emerson and Anita Loos, who were preparing plans for their first Paramount film, "Come On In," starring Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex, immediately ceased their work and acted as hosts to the distinguished visitors. The thorough manner in which the settings used in pictures were built surprised the guests. A Belgian street scene recently used naturally attracted considerable interest.

In the visiting party were Major Osterrieth, chief of the Belgian Military Mission; James G. Whiteley and Count de Reuesse of the same mission; Lieutenant Garibaldi, of the Italian Military Mission; Mrs. Whiteley and Colonel Short and Major Ellis, U. S. A.

CARMEL MYERS TO VISIT CANTONMENTS.

Carmel Myers, whose work in such Bluebird productions as "My Unmarried Wife," "The Wife He Bought," "The Marriage Lie," and similar successes has brought her to the front rapidly during the last year, has obtained a short leave of absence from Universal City and will devote the time in making a tour of the cantonments of the South.

The Bluebird player has left for New York City, and after a few days in the metropolis will start in her trip through the South. Arrangements have been made for Miss Myers' appearance at the various Liberty Theaters so that she may deliver a final message of cheer and godspeed from the people of southern California.

Go Over the Top With Pershing

Magnificent Bronze Trophy to be Offered by the Moving Picture World to Stimulate Effort of Exchangemen Handling "Pershing's Crusaders," Official Government War Film

JUST now the most comprehensive motion picture review of the status of the United States in War is found in the subject known as "Pershing's Crusaders." This subject was first shown at the Lyric Theater in New York, but has since been revised and retitled and is now being offered for exhibition through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The states of California, North Dakota and Michigan are invited to participate.

There are many reasons why this subject should be given wide publicity, chief of which is that it gives us so much information concerning the preparation for war that has been and is still being made in America, and because it shows better than any other motion pictures we have seen what our boys who have gone "over there" are doing. For this reason, if for no other, we should put this picture "over the top" with a vim.

How this effect could best be obtained has been a matter of considerable discussion between the officials of the First National Circuit and the Division of Films of the Committee of Public Information. THE MOVING PICTURE WOBLD representatives were called into the conference and the suggestion was made by them that a prize be given to the exchange which can show the largest per cent. of bookings in his territory in a given time.

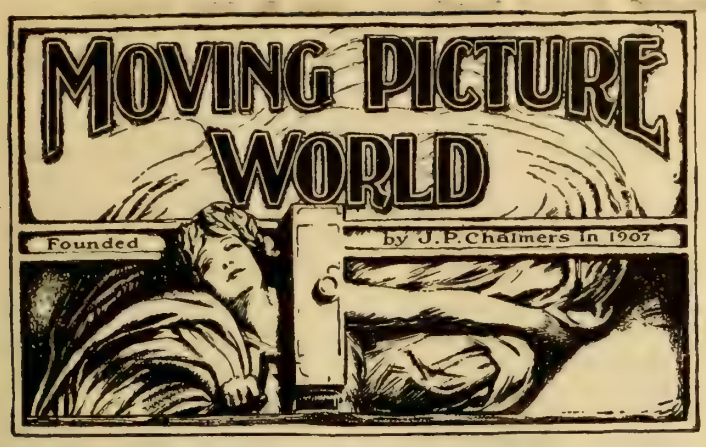
Following up its suggestion THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD offered to take charge of the entire campaign, securing a suitable trophy and judging the reports for the final award. The offer was accepted, and we now have the pleasure of printing upon this page an engraving of the trophy, designed to our order and accepted by all interested parties as most suitable for the purpose. This sketch has been placed in the hands of a designer and will be executed in bronze. An idea of its size can be gained when we tell you that the spread of the eagle's wings will be three feet from tip to tip. The tablet will be lettered as shown in the cut, the blank panel being left for the winner's name. At the bottom of the panel is a figure modeled after that shown upon the cover of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

The eagle's claws are so made that they will grasp the staff bearing the Stars and Stripes as shown in the engraving.

This beautiful and patriotic trophy will be given to the exchange which wins the contest and will form an office decoration de luxe.

"Pershing's Crusaders" has been released and is now being booked generally, so that the contest is practically on. The date of its conclusion has been fixed at September 1. This will give the exchanges interested a full six weeks from date of this publication to get busy.

Each week as the contest proceeds the reports received will be tabulated and printed in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD so that the standing of the exchanges and the progress of the campaign may be known.



In the event of two or more exchanges reaching a booking percentage exactly equal, THE WORLD will, in that event, present to each contestant thus coming into a tie, an exact duplicate of the trophy here illustrated and specified as first prize.

The judges of the contest have not yet been named, but will be in the next issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

With this incentive the managers of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchanges are urged to get busy to prove to the Government that it is possible for the regularly organized motion picture distributors to get the widest possible circulation for this excellent patriotic subject.

Don't make any mistake about the genuineness of the trophy. It will be of bronze—not pewter, as was the Kaiser's "gold" cup. It will be made as designed with a three-foot spread to the eagle's wings. The National banner—"Old Glory"—will be as fine a flag as the manufacturers produce. In fact, there will be nothing cheap or phoney about it. As a trophy it will be worth working for.

As for the picture every exchangeman interested now knows that it is the best war picture showing actual scenes of Uncle Sam's preparatory campaign. There ought to not be a picture theater in the country where it should not be shown. The per cent. of houses in each exchange district is what counts in the contest, so go to it, every exchange has a chance to win.

Facts and Comments

WE offer our readers in this issue an interesting symposium on the functions and the value thereof of the publicity men, written by themselves. As the writer has read all of these effusions he can assure the MOVING PICTURE WORLD readers that they are all worth perusing and studying. It may be true that some of them may promise better than the author thereof performs, but they are, after all that may be said for and against, good. Especially do we commend them to press agents or to those who aspire to be press agents; either will find information and instruction therein, for even a press agent has been known to tell the truth—sometimes.

In thus commending the efforts of our very obliging contributors to our readers generally, we desire to thank them for their kind co-operation and, without committing ourselves to any hard and fast agreement, we hereby signify our willingness, even determination, to reciprocate in some suitable and sufficient form at some time in the indefinite future, reserving to ourselves the inalienable right to make such use of the symbolical blue pencil and the traditional waste basket as the exigencies of the occasion may demand or our editorial will shall dictate. Nevertheless, we thank you.

HERE is a Governor after our own heart. The Honorable George W. P. Hunt, governor of Arizona, in his address upon the convening of a special session of the Legislature of his state on May 21, 1918, took occasion to discuss the necessity of instruction for the foreign born. In the course of his remarks he observed:

> In giving the instruction heretofore suggested as a patriotic measure, we should not overlook the value of the motion picture as a medium of education. No better method is available for bringing home to the alien mind the true meaning of American citizenship and a general knowledge of our country's national life.

It may be that other governors have held similar sentiments, but this is the first time that one has come out with so strong a statement regarding the eductional value of motion pictures. We venture to say that Governor Hunt knows his "movies."

THERE is a lot of reason in the published request from motion picture players for exemption from taxation to the extent of the cost of their costumes. Like the tools of the carpenter or other artisan, costumes are the tools of the players' trade and are singularly unsuited for other than the purpose for which they were designed. As to the broader claim for exemption from income tax on the ground that their incomes are earned in the form of a wage as against the income which is derived from dividends or the profits of a commercial investment much has been said by legislators for and against. In this claim all men and women who work for a salary are interested. It would seem that some differentiation in the scheme of taxation favorable to incomes earned should be made, but it is doubtful if the tax authorities will take the time necessary to study the question. All we can do is to be cheerful; it's worse in Germany.

ANOTHER Sunday picture show decision has been rendered. This time it is against the show and by Judge Fawcett of the New York Supreme Court, sitting in Brooklyn, in an action brought against Nathan Goldstein of Patchogue, N. Y. The Court in this case, despite the precedent established by the late Judge Gaynor, decided that it was not lawful to operate a picture show on Sunday. Referring to the Gaynor decision Judge Fawcett is reported to have said that it was out of date and that conditions had changed since that decision was handed down. The case has been appealed.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD wishes to announce the acquisition for its staff of A. H. Giebler, an experienced newspaperman, who has become Los Angeles correspondent and will co-operate with G. P. Harleman in the conduct of the Los Angeles office. Mr. Giebler is not unacquainted with the motion picture business and motion picture folk. Some years ago he qualified as the motion picture editor of a St. Louis daily paper and, for a long time, wrote the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S St. Louis letter. For the past year Mr. Giebler has made his home in Los Angeles and is known to most of the trade there, so that he is eminently well fitted for the position he now fills. Mr. Harleman will continue to represent the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in Los Angeles in the capacity of business and advertising manager of the Los Angeles office.

Neighborhood Theaters

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON.

MUCH valuable space is lost, both inside the theater and around its best construction, because of a very common and human "urge," the get-rich-quick, build-quick "urge," where ample space is to be had, and from the necessity in some cases of squeezing in a desirable locality, too cramped for audience comfort, or badly proportioned.

No lasting satisfaction is to be reasonably expected where the much-pained foot is compelled to fit the boot.

There is not the slightest doubt about the value of certain peculiarly-situated localities, especially in large cities, where theaters group themselves without any apparent reason. There are sweet spots in every town, which seem to draw the human flies—people go there, the why and wherefore is of importance minor to the fact. Lines of cars may converge to create such a place, or it may be a center of interest because of shopping during the day and bright lights at night.

A public square, or a broad way may thus be the ideal site.

There may be only one such centre in a village, but the average town and city, those presenting scenes of activity, have many sites suitable for theaters, especially when the character of neighborhood and price of admission are taken into intelligent consideration.

That price of admission rightly adjusted, there comes a vital thought.

Nearly all people go along lines of least resistance.

They prefer the nearest show if it is a good one.

Moving picture theaters are being planted in the midst of residential groups, whether of the poor or of the well-to-do, and they are prospering invariably, when they are rightly conducted. Most of them are susceptible of being improved, but the greatest difficulty encountered, as anyone can find out by investigation, is to keep satisfied audiences composed of patrons who attend several times a week, if not thirty times a month, including February—their money counts.

Ask neighborhood exhibitors what worries them most.

The people of a neighborhood can be fooled once, twice, thrice, or even a dozen times by outside promises on lurid paper not fulfilled inside, when people come to view the performance, and they may never complain, the money loss is so small, but they can find some better way of passing their leisure time—they can quit—and thus attendance falls off in proportion to the deception practiced on the "steadies."

The anxious exhibitor looks about him for reasons.

It is not easy for him to get at those quiet people who make up their own minds, who know the difference between promise and performance, but he succeeds in a number of cases and he boils down all information from his patrons to a point where he can solidify opinion. Without any known exception he reaches one inevitable conclusion.

The greatest audience demand is for something new.

The way for exhibitors to get what is new is to ask for it, insist on it, demand it, and point out that constant repetition is not to the benefit of their business, nor to that of moving picture production, nor to any department of the industry.

The neighborhood theater will eventually get away from commonplace—it is bound to do so.

It should be the ideal meeting house of intelligent people, their club, their house of social harmony and good feeling, the pictures it shows progressive in spirit, the music rendered well, whether the selections are popular or classic, and some provision made for those mothers who are unable to get away from home because of their anxiety about their young children. What a boon to those mothers if there was a room attached to the theater in charge of maids capable of looking after young children while their mothers enjoyed a little rest and recreation, for they who need it most get it least.

Instead of holding itself aloof from its patrons, the theater should be the congenial, friend-making place of its neighborhood, an ideal institution of its kind, considerate, helpful and sincere in all this, for in attaching people to its interests it is establishing itself more strongly in their hearts. People are its friends. Between them and imposters of any kind the theater should take its stand.

A Few Screen Problems

By EDWARD WEITZEL.

THERE are rumors afloat that the two and three-reel picture are to be put upon the market. Such an experiment will be keenly watched. A grave stumbling block in the path of the producer has been the lack of interest in anything but dramas of from five to ten reels. Many a story with sufficient vitality to make an engrossing two or three part photoplay is stretched and padded into a five-reel feature and its attenuated skeleton crawls along at a snail's pace, in place of continually pressing on ahead of the spectator's imagination.

Why there should be such a prejudice against the shorter screen dramas is hard to explain; but it exists to the same extent on the screen that it does on the stage. Managers of the older form of amusement know to their cost how eagerly the general public keeps away from a program of one-act plays. Even with a bill made up of the works of such writers as Dunsany and Synge only the smallest theaters in New York and Chicago can be filled, the mass of amusement seekers in the other cities and towns of the country being absolutely indifferent to the matter. The producer of screen fiction has been severely criticised for ignoring the tense red-blooded little dramas, alive with action and vivid with humanity, which brought D. W. Griffith to the fore. Apparently, there has been no demand for them during the last three years.

A New Form of Screen Art.

Some day a photoplay will be produced which will have the simplicity of settings and absence of backgrounds that attended the first performances of the plays of Shakespeare. It will, of course, not relegate all other forms to the rear, but may serve admirably to emphasize the value of human interest and act as a basis upon which to determine how much pictorial effect can be used without detracting from the dramatic strength of the plot.

Several of the most famous producers of Shakespeare's works have been accused of obscuring the intellectual beauties of his plays by too lavish stage settings. Granting the truth of the contention, the overdone scenes generally lasted long enough to lose their hold on the attention and permit the actors to center the eyes and sympathies of the audience upon the business of the play. The screen, with its unrestricted change of location and its ability to present marvels of scenic beauty in rapid succession, is in danger of constantly diverting the mind of the spectator from the human interest of its story. Pictorial effect should be the servant, not the master, of screen drama.

Striking an Average of Intelligence.

An important point is just how to average up the intelligence of screen patrons. So far there has been no attempt to inaugurate a highbrow screen drama. The producers all hope to have their pictures shown before all classes of amusement seekers. Take the titles as one example of the difficulty. One set of spectators will read a title, settle back and let their eyes roam around the theater while other people are still spelling out the words or asking, in an impatient whisper, as the thread of the story is taken up again pictorially, "What did it say? It went so fast I couldn't read it!"

Continuity is another perplexing question. Some minds are capable, and more than willing, to supply certain obvious connections in the story; others, through lack of imagination, not to put it too harshly, are heard complaining: "I didn't understand what that scene meant; they should explain things more."

Close-Ups

By Robert C. McElravy.

IN reading the pages of a novel we come across an occasional paragraph, reading something like this:

> Alice was a beautiful, high-bred girl, with a clear, fair brow, a satin skin, hair that went romping over her forehead and shoulders, and her ready smile disclosed two rows of white, even teeth, set like pearls between her coral lips.

When the author wrote that paragraph he had a particular purpose in mind. He wished not only to impress upon the reader the remarkable beauty of his heroine, but he wanted the reader to pause a moment and visualize her beauty in such a way that the memory of it would remain with him throughout the entire book.

Now the close-up performs almost the same function in a moving picture that such paragraphs perform in describing characters in a novel. The only difference is that in the film it is manifestly impossible to insert a sub-title proclaiming the heroine's beauty, or perhaps it would be better to say unnecessary. The means are at hand for impressing the observer in a more realistic way, and this is done by a close-up or near view of the lady herself. There is a temporary halt in the development of the story itself while this is being pictured, but this halt is excusable and even desirable, for the observer wants to know how the heroine looks and all about her. When he has the impression of her firmly in mind, her future actions are much more interesting; she may walk, run, climb fences, turn her back, wear a masque or hide her face whenever she chooses, but the knowledge of her real beauty, when she wants to be beautiful, remains safely fixed in mind.

But both the author of the novel and the director of the moving picture run some danger in trying to impress us too strongly with the beauty of the heroine. The author, in his choice of adjectives and similes, is very likely to overdo the thing. For instance, our purely imaginative writer of the above paragraph, has written of teeth like pearls and coral lips, when it may be safely doubted if such a resemblance ever existed. But his troubles are nothing compared with the moving picture director's! For the close-up may not simply fail to show beauty, but is merciless in its exposure of facial blemishes, and bad teeth in particular. More than one heroine, who enchanted us at a distance, has lost favor in the close-up.

The moral of this, of course, if the heroine is really not beautiful on a near view, is to leave out the close-up. The story has nothing to lose and everything to gain by this procedure. It would be better for many pictures if such a course had been followed.

But the close-up has numerous other valuable functions besides depicting the beauty of the heroine. There are times, in the midst of exciting situations, when the close-up, properly used, creates valuable suspense. It has the desirable faculty of keeping the observer waiting, but with his mind fixed upon essential points as they are being developed. But here, also, peril lies in wait for the director. If he uses too many close-ups they have the immediate effect of padding the situations and really serve to let down the suspense. This occurs very often on the screen.

The close-up is sometimes valuable in introducing special characters in the story, but it should not be used on characters that are not necessary to the plot itself, for this only serves to center the observer's mind on somebody who has nothing to do with the action. Close-ups of babies, cats, dogs, parrots, swords, guns, potted plants, or whatever you choose, are permissible if they are relevant to the plot; otherwise they should be shown only in the usual way, with an idea of bringing out settings and atmosphere.

It all gets back to the writer's dictum, that nothing should appear in the story that is not in some way essential to it. Certainly in the development of a swiftly moving film story, there can be no good reason for employing the close-up to bring non-essentials into a prominence they do not deserve.

The Draft and Business

By Epes W. Sargent.

FAR too many managers are arguing that business is going to be bad this summer because the young men are all drafted for war work and cannot take the girls to entertainments. Far too many are losing heart and are cheapening service and cutting down advertising because they "know" that business is going to be bad this summer—and longer.

That is no way to meet the situation. All lines of business have been affected by the draft and may be more seriously affected by the new work or fight law, but it is the duty of every true American to seek to face this period of vast reconstructions bravely and helpfully. It is very true that hundreds of thousands of men are being removed from their daily vocations to fight in the cause of Freedom, but it does not follow that business must be completely upset by their withdrawal, and an effort should be made to intensify what business is still to be had.

The young men have gone to the front or into training camps, but the girls they leave behind them are bravely taking their places in business and in trade. They are making money and gaining experience. In time they will seek amusement at their own expense and perhaps be more regular in their attendance at the theaters than they were under the old conditions, since there will be fewer social entertainments than before and at the same time a keener need of diversion. If the proper sort of program is offered and attractively advertised, there is every reason to suppose that amusements in general and the picture theaters in particular will do a greater business than ever.

But the proper sort of program is not a constant succession of dramas of the war and stories with war time backgrounds. We get enough of this in the daily life and only the occasional war drama will be welcomed. On the other hand the news weeklies, with their pictures of actual scenes at the front, will be strong attractors. Those who stay behind want to know all they can of conditions at the front and this information is graphically portrayed in the pictures made under the direction of the Committee on Public Information and distributed to the various weeklies.

Build up the program with these and with good plays of heart interest, vivid action and comedy dramas, and advertise the war news pictures as you would a feature. Do not merely announce this or that weekly. Tell just what scenes will be shown, and give the list a prominence equal to the feature. It will more than pay, and it will soon be found that even in the theaters the girls are taking the places of the men who have gone. To lose courage and abandon effort at such a time is treachery. Strive to increase attendance, not alone for the box office value, but that the screen messages may be conveyed to the greatest possible number. The screen today, through its visual appeal, is more important than the newspaper. Make certain that the appeal reaches the greatest possible number, and you will be doing your bit as a business fighter and a patriot.

Film Industry in Essential Class

Provost Marshal General Decides on Appeal That Motion Picture Industry Is "Effective."

FEAR of the drafting of players, stage hands and operators engaged in the production and exhibiting of motion pictures under the "work or fight" rule recently promulgated by Provost Marshal General Crowder may now be set aside as not to be worried about. Word from Washington comes to the effect that Colonel Warren, head of the appeals board of the Provost Marshal's office, has made a ruling which puts the film industry generally in the "effective" class and includes musicians and all skilled stage workers necessary in the production and presentation of pictures.

The decision also states that operators will be considered as employed in effective industry.

Bill in Congress Would Increase Exhibitor Tax

Under Measure Introduced by Parker of New Jersey Both Manufacturing and Advertising Impost Is Provided.

IF Congress accepts the advice of Congressman Parker, of New Jersey, as offered in a bill (H R 12649) introduced into the House of Representatives by him, manufacturers selling films, advertising matter to accompany films, projection machines and other equipment, seats, etc., would be called upon to pay a new tax. Congressman Parker proposes "That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon all manufactures sold by the manufacturer or producer a tax equivalent to three per centum of the price for which so sold, and each manufacturer or producer of such manufactures shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed on such articles by this title to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such return shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation prescribe."

The motion picture business would be further taxed, perhaps to an extent heavier than any other industry, by Section 2 of this same bill, for Mr. Parker thinks that advertising should be made to produce revenue for the Government. In this section he would have it so "that there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to three per centum of the amount paid by any person, corporation, partnership, or association to any other person, corporation, partnership, or association for advertising or advertising space, and every person, corporation, partnership, or association receiving any payment for advertising or advertising space upon which a tax is imposed by this section shall, within the first fifteen days of each month, make a return under oath, in duplicate, and pay such tax to the collector of internal revenue of the district in which the principal office or place of business of such person, corporation, partnership, or association is located. Such return shall contain such information and be in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation prescribe."

If Congressman Parker's recommendations were permitted to prevail the exhibitors of the United States, now overburdened with taxes, both Federal, State and local, would be compelled annually to pay large sums of money on the newspaper space they occupy with their announcements, on the posters, heralds and other advertising matter that they use on their boards and for distribution purposes, and further, they would have to absorb the advertising tax paid by the manufacturers in announcing in the trade press, through circular matter, in the newspapers and popular maagzines, their releases. Such tax would very naturally be assessed against those who rent the films so advertised, for the tax would become a part of the overhead expense of the manufacturer and of the exchange.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of July 7 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE STRAND.—Madge Kennedy in "The Service Star," a Goldwyn production written by Charles A. Logue, is the leading feature at Strand Theater for the week of July 7. The eighth number of the Outing-Chester scenics 'Statia with a Past," the second edition of the Allied War Weekly, and the Christie comedy "Kids" were also shown. Antonio Briglio and the Strand Soldier Quartet were the special musical features.

THE RIALTO.—"The Firefly of France," with Wallace Reid as the star, headed the program at the Rialto. The scenario was made by Margaret Turnbull from a magazine story, and was directed by Donald Crisp. Anna Little and Raymond Hatton are in the cast. "Fatty and Mabel Adrift" featuring Roscoe Arbuckle and Mabel Normand, a scenic and the Rialto Animated Magazine were the other screen numbers. Count Lorrie Grimaldi, and Gaston Dubois were the soloists.

THE RIVOLI.—Elsie Ferguson in an Artcraft version of Robert W. Chambers' "The Danger Mark" was the screen star at the Rivoli. Charles Maigne made the scenario. Hugh Ford directed the picture. The Animated Pictorial, a scenic and a comedy completed the pictures. Greek Evans and Julia Beverly were the vocalists.

FORTY-FOURTH STREET THEATER.—Fourteenth Week of "Hearts of the World."

BROADWAY.—Second week of "To Hell with the Kaiser."

LYRIC.—Sixth week of "Stolen Orders."

SYMPHONY.—William S. Hart in "Staking His Life."

Lexington Churchmen Protest Sunday Shows

Not Believed Crusade Will Make Headway, as Mayor Takes Sides with Majority of Citizens.

LAYMEN of the Protestant churches of Lexington, Ky., have launched another movement to close the picture theaters on Sundays. However, with Mayor Rogers favoring Sunday pictures, and backing open Sundays on the ground that such shows should be allowed for the benefit of workers, indications are that the churchmen are not going to get any further with this crusade than they have with several prior ones. Three members of each of the Protestant churches of Lexington compose the body of laymen who are formally organizing in the attempt.

Alfred Combs, a member of the commission, stated that the management of the Strand Theater offered to close on Sunday if the managers of the other theaters would do liekwise. Manager J. H. Stamper, Jr., was alleged to have stated that he would close on Sunday in event it came to a point where legal trouble would result if he didn't. Manager C. H. Berryman, of the Ben Ali, stated flatly that he would not close.

A number of attempts have been made by the churchmen of Lexington to close Sunday theaters, but they have never been able to secure the backing of the Mayor and the authorities, with the result that such attempts have failed. It is well known that the people in Lexington favor Sunday shows, and this is shown by the fact that as high as 20,000 people often attend the shows.

Film Division Names Director Advisers

Public Information Sub-Committee Selects Ten Prominent Producers to Aid in Uncle Sam's War Work

THE Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information announces an important move in perfecting its organization. The division now has the expert advice and assistance of an Advisory Board of Motion Picture Directors.

These services were volunteered by a committee representing the Motion Picture Directors' Association and gratefully accepted by Charles S. Hart, director.

This board is composed of men whose work stands conspicuous in the field of artistic and successful productions. They are: J. Searle Dawley, chairman; James Vincent, secretary; Maurice Tourneur, Captain E. H. Calvert, Edwin Carewe, Charles Giblyn, R. A. Walsh, Sidney Olcott, George Irving, Travers Vale.

J. Searle Dawley is so well known as hardly to need comment in the motion picture industry. Beginning with the Edison company in its early days and going to the Famous Players Film Company when that firm first began to produce, Mr. Dawley is a pioneer, so to speak, in the directors' profession. Many of the Paramount's best liked pictures stand to his credit, and he is still making them.

Maurice Tourneur, too, has directed a number of Paramount classics, notable among them being Maeterlinck's "Bluebird." He is now at the head of his own producing company.

Mr. Vincent is also something of a pioneer, having began as a player with the Kalem company when it was first organized. In the interim he has directed for Fox, Pathe and other companies, and for some time past has been directing independent releases. Conspicuous among these is "The Melting Pot," in which Walker Whiteside played the leading part.

Sidney Olcott was with the Kalem company at its inception. Later he joined the Famous Players, and several Pickford and Clark classics are on his list of achievements. As an independent producer, which he now is, "The Belgian" is his latest success.

George Irving distinguished himself especially as a director in "The Witching Hour," the screen version of Augustus Thomas' popular play; while many other well-known films bear his name as sponsor. He has been for some time with the Metro company.

Charles Giblyn began his motion picture days as a director of the New York Motion Picture Company. That was a long time ago. He directed later a list for Ince-Triangle, later went to Paramount, and is now directing at the Goldwyn studio.

Edwin Carewe secured his initiation into film mysteries at the Metro studios with B. A. Rolfe, and with the exception of a short interval has continued with that company.

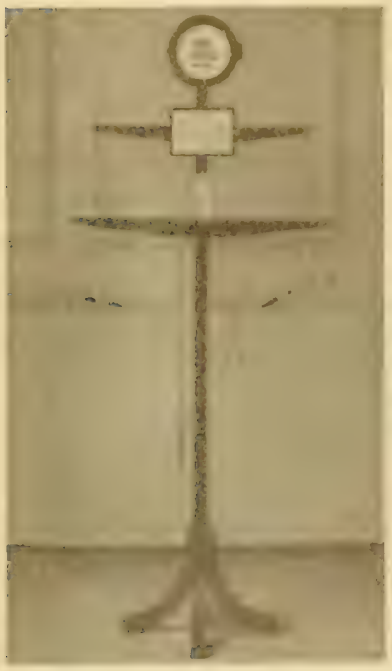
Travers Vale is another member of the advisory board who has been in screen work almost from its first days. He began with the Rex company, was for a long time with Biograph, and has continued in the profession through the many vicissitudes of the industry. He is directing for World Film.

Raoul A. Walsh began his experience with D. W. Griffith at the Biograph company. He played the part of John

Members of the Advisory Board of Motion Picture Directors.

Wilkes Booth in "The Birth of a Nation," and for the past three years has been directing for William Fox.

Captain Calvert was for six years associated with Essanay. He directed some of the first feature productions made in America, at a time when a three-reel film story was an achievement. From that day until now he never has forsaken his shadowy muse of the screen. "The Crimson Wing," Hobart Chatfield-Taylor's famous novel, was made popular in film under Captain Calvert's expert direction.



The film division certainly has able advisers, and they are rendering able assistance. For instance, they read and recommend scenarios for the division. At the present time, in fact, the advisory board is requesting writers to submit scenarios with strong human interest, of a nature calculated to arouse patriotism and activity. Also a committee of four has been appointed to prepare for release the next United States official feature.

This advisory board meets at the office of the film division in the Times Building once a week to act upon any work which may be awaiting it.

Hufner's Smoke Stand

Western Manager Invents Cigar Checker That Serves as a Unique Ballyhoo.

RALPH R. RUFFNER, of the Jensen & Von Herberg theatres, at present located in Butte, Montana, has evolved what he calls a smoke stand but which at first glance looks more like an economical Christmas tree. This was first put into use in Portland, where he was at the time in charge of the Columbia, and for several days he had a crowd constantly in front of the lobby while the machine was in commission, and he has supplied similar stands to several brother managers, all of whom declare the device to be worth its weight in press notices alone.

Cigar checkers, generally of the brass compartment tray variety, are by no means necessary. But Ruffner's device is very different. As the cut shows, it consists of an upright with two cross arms. From the latter of arms depend to the ends of which are attached the ordinary spring clothes pins. At the top is a circular frame for changeable signs, and below a permanent directions sheet, which reads:

The sanitary paper referred to is tacked just below the sign and each slip instructs the victim to "Tear off and wrap around moist end of your cigar." This protects the chewed end from contamination by dust, and Ruffner points out that perhaps this advertising space can be sold to local merchants. The doorman or lobby officer should be instructed to keep a sharp eye on "swipe shooters," when a desirable stub is in the custody of the machine, for no lock is provided for the clothes pins.

Originally the machine was planned as a joke; something to make talk "just once," and then to be retired, but the success of the scheme was such that Ruffner is planning to put the stand on the market, for it has actually blocked the sidewalk in Portland and Butte as well as at other places in Washington. It is not so much the utility of the thing that counts as it is the talk it makes, for the directions get a laugh and even the scissors provided the cigarette smokers comes in for a giggle. Mr. Ruffner has not yet worked out the possibilities of advertising frames above the cross arms, but that is easily handled.

Will C. Smith

General Manager Nicholas Power Company, Inc.

THE subject of this sketch is so well known to the moving picture fraternity that it almost seems a waste of space to mention him. There is something about the word "Will" that betoken bon camaraderie and whole-heartedness; and it seems to fit here.

Will C. Smith was born in Washington, D. C., and experienced the vicissitudes of the average American youth not born with a silver spoon. His experience has been most comprehensive and covers the entire life of the industry. Always he has been a machine man; and for many years all his waking moments have been devoted to the improvement of motion picture projectors. We find him prior to 1903 operating one - night stand shows throughout the country. In 1903 he became associated with Lyman H. Howe, the celebrated traveling exhibitor, serving as his chief operator. He then went abroad and covered the European continent for the purchase of films.

Will C. Smith.

He became associated with Sir Ernest Shackleton in 1909; and one of his proudest possessions is the letter of tribute received from that eminent explorer. When Fred Niblo made his successful tour as a lecturer, it was Will Smith who handled the producing end of the game for him during his extensive journeyings with his unique entertainment.

From 1907 to 1912 Mr. Smith conducted a film exchange and supply house at the expiration of which time he entered the employ of the Nicholas Power Company as assistant general manager. And there he has been ever since. Today he is the general manager, having attained this office in November, 1917.

There is no secret to his success. It is the result of hard work and the knowing of one thing well. In this office, as in most, there is a time clock. But Will Smith doesn't use it. The chances are that if he did he would be credited with more hours than any clerk in the place. That's the way he works.

He has served two terms as treasurer of the Screen Club, and is also treasurer of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Will C. Smith is known pretty much everywhere. Throughout the entire motion picture profession he is liked and esteemed.

BUSY LEES ARE THESE MITES THESE DAYS.

Sunday is hardly a day of rest for Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox baby grands, who have just finished "Doing Their Bit." One Sunday recently they took part in an entertainment for convalescent and wounded soldiers at the Columbia University Base Hospital. The same afternoon they scampered over to the Pelham Bay Naval Training Station, where they entertained Uncle Sam's Jackies with songs, recitations and dances. Katherine introduced Jane, and Jane sang and then they both danced. Their sketch ended in a riot of cheering from the sailors.

Sunday, July 2, the two children attended the baseball game at Camp Upton between a nine composed of soldiers and a team of actors. Jane and Katherine were the center of attraction. Taking a brief rest at home they then hurried over to the Astor theater and helped Adele Rowland stage her big benefit for the soldiers and sailors. Later in the week Jane and Katherine were guests of Al Jolson at a performance of "Sinbad," and also were guests of Miss Louise Dresser at a garden party at her home.

Richardson Scores Point for Projectionists

Has Session With Colonel Warren of Provost Marshal General's Office on Question of "Essentiality" of Motion Picture Operators

A WEEK or so ago it was put down as a foregone conclusion that motion picture operators were included in the Provost Marshal General's "Work or Fight" order and no little consternation was caused thereby. It was a serious matter; much more serious to the trade than if all the actors in the draft age should have been commandeered, because there is no great surplusage of operators and it takes several months to train one. Great effort had been made by the operators' unions and affiliated organizations to prevent this calamity, but there was no assurance of success.

As a last resort the officers of the Operators' Unions decided to call to their assistance Frank H. Richardson, who conducts the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World and is favorably known to the craft all over the world, to add his word of protest against the order that threatened the industry. Mr. Richardson responded to the call and as a result of his visit to Colonel Warren, head of the board of appeals of the Provost Marshal General's office, an order has been issued to the effect that motion picture operators, or projectionists, as Mr. Richardson prefers to call them, have been placed in the list of "effectives" and need not respond to the "Work or Fight" order. Mr. Richardson's story of his achievement will be interesting. It follows herewith:

"July 2 Assistant President Dolliver, of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. telephoned that he and First Vice President Canavan desired an immediate conference with the editor of the Projection Department with relation to the 'Work or Fight' order. It appeared that every effort has been made by International President Shay and other to have the projectionists declared to be, which he assuredly is, essential, but that it apparently needed the technical punch to put it over. It seemed that the powers that be had the idea that projectionists could be trained in 'just a few days,' and were convinced that such was the actual fact.

"The question was: would I go down to Washington, at once, and try to show to the officials that projectionists cannot be trained in any such absurd grow-em-over-night fashion, and that the projecting of pictures is actually a profession calling for skill of no mean order, hence projectionists are essential. Brothers Dolliver and Canavan were kind enough to say that about the only hope of saving the situation rested in the hands of the editor, so I immediately departed for Washington, where I was met by International President Shay and Joe Webber, International President of the Musicians.

"The situation was bad. For one thing, it appears that the Pittsburgh local union had actually sent a delegation to Washington to inform the officials that projectionists were not essential. Don't ask me why they did this outrageous thing. I do not know, but strongly suspect the local has been used as a catspaw by designing ones.

"At ten o'clock a.m. I sent in a letter of introduction from the Motion Picture World, and, to my surprise, was given clear right-of-way to Colonel Warren, who has full charge of matters pertaining to the 'Work or Fight' order.

"The Colonel is a shrewd, astute official who, I was very soon convinced, desired only to do that which is right. But I was quickly confronted with a state of affairs which filled me with amazement. I could hardly believe the statement when Colonel Warren, after listening patiently to my setting forth of the reasons why projectionists were essential, and why it would be a calamity to the motion picture industry to have them declared non-essential, came back at me with this: 'Granting the truth of what you say, Mr. Richardson, how do you account for the fact that the committee representing the Pacific Coast producers, headed by Mr. Carpenter, made the statement to me that projectionists (operators), are non-essential?'

"So thoroughly was I filled with amazement at this almost unbelievable thing that I sat there without a word of reply—just grasping like a fish out of water, as it were.

"There was a twinkle in the Colonel's eyes as he watched me. Then he said 'Frankly I was myself surprised. The committee made a strenuous plea for the actors, cameramen, film editors and some others connected with the production end.' I asked Mr. Carpenter if he did not consider the man who reproduced the scene upon the screen of the theater as being essential, to which he replied: 'No, we can train operators in a few days!'

"To give Colonel Warren credit, he did not believe this. He intimated to me that the producers weakened their whole argument by advancing such a palpable absurdity. He cited the statement made by the Pittsburgh committee, of course, but said that he had been unable to see why every other branch of endeavor in the motion picture industry claimed such importance, whereas the man who had the reproduction of the entire finished product was not considered essential.

"I talked with Colonel Warren for two full hours, laying before him proof that competent projectionists, or even a fair imitation of competent ones, could not possibly be trained in many months, and to declare the projectionist to be non-essential would be a staggering blow to the industry, and one from which it could not possibly recover in full for many years. I tried to impress upon him the danger from fire hazard; the danger to the eyesight of this and future generations; the tremendous waste of coal through waste of light, and the injustice both to the industry and to the public. When I had done the Colonel said he was convinced that projectionists were essential and that he would include them in the essential class.

"He said the thing as presented by the Pittsburgh men, by the Carpenter committee and some others, had not appealed to him as commonsense, but that he lacked concrete knowledge of the requirements of projection sufficient to enable him to decide against their evidence. This knowledge I supplied him; also left with him, at his request, a copy of the third edition of the Handbook, which I had taken along as evidence of some of the things the projectionist is required to know.

"The editor of the Projection Department is proud to have rendered this service to the industry and to the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., which would have been confronted with immediate loss of a large percentage of its projectionist members, they being forced into other lines of work, and to the projectionists of this country themselves. It is a poor time to lower the tone of the only reasonable priced form of entertainment we have these days. Our people are harassed with war-worries, huge expenses and daily growing casualty lists. We need our theaters now, above all times, and not in any emasculated form either. The men are needed in the projection rooms far more than they are needed elsewhere. Just why the California producers attempted to deal the projectionists, into whose hands their final, finished product is placed for reproduction, such an entirely uncalled for blow, only they can say. Personally I do not believe the producers themselves would have taken any such stand had they been there themselves, instead of by committee. For years I have been waging a battle to get their stuff placed on the screen as it should be, only to have them, through their committee, attempt to kick all those years of labor over and into the gutter at one fell swoop. Are you proud of your committee's action, gentlemen? As to the Pittsburgh men, their action is unspeakable. There is and can be no excuse for it. They have deliberately tried to work utter ruin upon their brother projectionists all over the country and it is not likely they will forget. If it is found that the Pittsburgh union really had any hand in the work of the committee, then the local ought to be penalized.

"Since writing the above I see that Colonel Warren has rendered decision and has kept faith by including 'Musicians and other skilled men necessary to the showing of films.'

"I cannot close without a word concerning Charles Shay, International President, who put up a masterly plea for the projectionist. He did everything a man could possibly do, and deserves great credit for his part in the affair.

"And again it has been proven to you that knowledge is POWER. Had your humble servant not been equipped with the knowledge some of you have sneered at, you, my boy, would right now be confronted with losing your position and entering a new vocation, whether you liked it or not. There are to-day some thousands of projectionists who owe to this department, or to its editor, which is the same thing, the fact that they can continue on the even tenor of their way. Kindly don't waste breath questioning that statement, because it is cold FACT."

Woodlawn Is Chicago's House Beautiful

By James S. McQuade

Lake City's New Motion Picture Theater Reflects Personality as Well as Nationwide Research of Manager Andrew Karzas

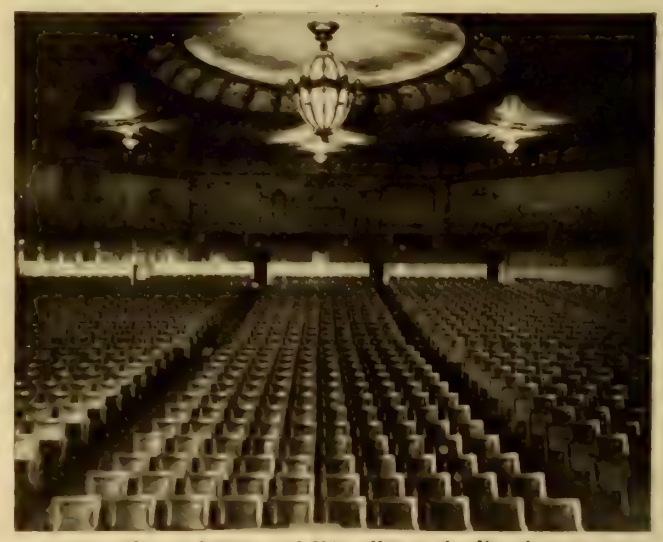
THE Woodlawn theater, opened April 26, 1918, at 853-855 East Sixty-third street, is without doubt the most architecturally beautiful and attractive moving picture theater yet built in Chicago. There are many other expensive and fine theaters in the city, among them the Central Park theater, the Chateau, etc., which it would be difficult to surpass in any part of the country, but there is a peculiar beauty about the Woodlawn house that places it in a class by itself.

It was built by the Woodlawn Theater Company, of which Andrew Karzas is managing director, and to him is due, in the first place, the scheme of this beautiful temple for moving pictures. Early in 1915 Mr. Karzas began collecting data and details for the structure, and in order to inform himself thoroughly he made a nationwide inspection of all the best known picture houses in the country. New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, Washington, Detroit, St. Louis, Denver, Seattle, San Francisco and other important points were visited, and the result of his studies and observations is well reflected in the Woodlawn.

He was especially fortunate to find in H. L. Newhouse an architect who could express these ideas in the structure itself. Mr. Newhouse is one of the foremost architects in the country in the building of picture theaters, and he has devoted himself specially for several years past to this type of structure. It can be safely said that the Woodlawn includes all the best features of the best theaters in the country at the present time.

The Auditorium.

Chief care and attention were, of course, centered on the auditorium of the Woodlawn. The site of the auditorium alone occupies 120 feet by 120 feet, but it is not rectangular in form. It is inclosed by walls, whose foundations are octagonal in shape, and the seats are placed in amphitheater order and number 2,000. Each is commodious and upholstered. The rows are graded downward a distance and then upward so as to afford every one a view of the screen. There is a ground floor only in the Woodlawn, there being no balcony. The entire structure is built of stone, steel and concrete, and the style of the interior architecture and decorations is Roman.



Andrew Karzas.
Managing Director Woodlawn Theater Company.

The octagonal walls referred to are picturesque in appearance and artistically decorated. The upper surface of each of four of these walls bears a panel painting, each painting being a replica of a Roman garden. The remaining four walls and the octagonal ceiling are all decorated in an exquisite color scheme of red, gold and blue.

Nine ponderous Romanesque lighting fixtures are suspended from the octagonal ceiling, the center one weighing over half a ton. Vari-colored lights, controlled by dimmers, are contained in each of these inverted fixtures, while others are distributed along the walls, particularly beneath the panel paintings of the gardens of Rome. It can readily be seen that beautiful colored light effects can be produced by means of this system, such as dawn, the splendor of a sunrise, dusk, etc., each of which may be used to intensify the effect of a scene in the picture on the screen.

Thoroughly modern ventilating and heating systems have been installed in the house, guaranteeing a perpetual circulation of fresh air and the forcing out of the impure, as well as a temperature in winter that is always comfortable without impairing the purity of the air.

The proscenium opening for the screen is about fifty feet in width, and it is draped on the sides and above by material of a rich velvet appearance. The velvet curtain also drapes the screen when not in use.

The old-fashioned orchestra pit has been superseded in the Woodlawn by the modern orchestral balcony. At each end of the balcony railing is a small stage, one for the soloist and the other for the singer. The balcony railing is adorned with flowers and trailing vines, behind which the members of the orchestra are seated.

The Woodlawn auditorium is also thoroughly proof against accident by fire. Opening off the auditorium proper are sixteen exits, each of which runs directly into the street level, and the entire house can be emptied in three minutes. This has been proved by actual practice. The doors of these exits are never locked, nor can they be locked from the inside. They are proof against accident, for the moment the slightest pressure is put on the inner side of the door it is automatically unlocked and opened. Mr. Karzas, in order to insure doubly the safety of his patrons, has supplied just twice the number of exits called for by the law in this case.

The Outer Lobby.

The Woodlawn has an outer and an inner lobby, the latter leading into the foyer. The outer lobby is spacious and picturesque. In the center is the box office, chastely pretty in its polychrome ornamental trimmings. High up is a brilliantly illuminated dome, into the center of which, from beneath, a stream of electric light is constantly flowing. This light in turn is reflected into the interior of the lobby in thousands of streaming rays.

The Inner Lobby.

The inner lobby, leading into the foyer, is spacious and classically beautiful. Italian marble, finely matched, extends from floor to ceiling, while rich marble columns and pilasters stand out in bold relief. On the center of the floor stand two massive vases, of Romanesque design, filled with vari-colored artificial flowers.

The Foyer.

Roman architecture and decorations prevail in the foyer, the beautiful ornamental ceiling being delicately tinted with rich colors artistically blended. Mr. Karzas had the foyer specially designed for the purpose of occupying patrons pleasantly while they await their turn to enter the auditorium. Off the foyer is a comfortable lounging room for women patrons, tastefully and cozily appointed.

The Woodlawn Orchestra.

The Woodlawn theater orchestra has fifteen selected artists, several of whom have had experience with the Chicago Grand Opera orchestra in times past. They are under the direction of A. Leon Bloom, a musician widely known for his abiilty as an orchestra leader.

But let a Chicago musical critic—Herman Devries—give his opinion of this orchestra, which appeared recently in the Chicago American. Mr. Devries stepped into the Woodlawn shortly after its opening, attracted by the long line of automobiles drawn up in front. The following article was written after having seen the Woodlawn program and heard the Woodlawn music:

"The encouraging sign of the musical times and the development of public taste in Chicago is the marked and evident improvement of the orchestral personnel and program now being furnished in up-to-date cinema palaces.

"Time was when the musical lure was a blonde lady of uncertain age, who played 'rag' in the dark and chewed gum in the intermissions; but today, forsooth, we engage members of the grand opera orchestra and regale the screen lovers with everything from Schubert, Tschaikowsky and Massenet to Carrie Jacobs-Bond.

"If you don't believe this drop in, as I did last night, at the Woodlawn theater, in Sixty-third street.

"I have been a South Sider since April 1, and my evening walk yesterday was curtailed by curiosity to see what sort of attraction could cause a line of automobiles as long as the auditorium defile, to form as far as the eye could see.

"As it happens the event was the opening of a brand new theater called the Woodlawn, and the crowd, 2,000 strong, was thrice replaced before the evening was over.

"The musical program is in the hands of Leon Bloom, a very well-known Chicago pianist and musician of parts, whose co-workers are mostly taken from the Chicago Grand Opera Association orchestra.

"The men played so well that more than once my attention wandered from the film, which was very good and quite exciting to a music critic, for whom a diamond robbery is a gala event.

"The Woodlawn's organ was installed by the W. W. Kimball Company at a cost of $25,000, which gives some idea of the general quality of the fitting and equipment of the great theater."

The writer was exceedingly anxious to get a biographical sketch of the founder of this fine temple of moving pictures, but found that Mr. Karzas was averse to bring himself into prominence, being of retiring disposition and willing to let the Woodlawn itself speak for him and his efforts.

Andrew Karzas, Founder of the Woodlawn.

Mr. Karzas is a man of artistic temperament and of fine education. It is scarcely needless to state this, as the very atmosphere of the Woodlawn reveals both the attainments and character of the founder. He started in moving picture exhibition about ten years ago. This start was made in the De Luxe, 814 East Sixty-third street, a small house, seating three hundred people. He was so satisfied with the success of this venture that in the course of time he became owner of the Drexel, 858 East Sixty-third street, with a capacity of 600 seats. The Drexel was not running on a paying basis at the time, but under his careful management in securing the right kind of pictures for his patrons Mr. Karzas soon made it a success. Then he dreamed of greater things and out of the children of his fancy came the Woodlawn.

It can well be understood that Mr. Karzas superintended every detail of the construction of his new and great venture, and after six months of the closest attention and application the Woodlawn was ready to admit the public on April 26.

The crowds had to be held in check on the opening night by four police officers. The floral display on that occasion was one of the finest ever seen at the dedication of a Chicago theater. Over fifty set pieces, all of them beautiful and most of them costly, were on view in the inner lobby and the foyer.

The magnificent success made by the Woodlawn, in a business sense, is sufficient compensation to Mr. Karzas for his many months of untiring effort and ceaseless labors. He continues to devote his finest thought and closest attention to the management of the theater, and his great success shows that he is meeting the enthusiastic approval of his patrons.

Mr. Karzas is a strong believer in publicity and especially in local publicity in the neighborhood of his theater. He has appointed E. J. Ryan, the founder of the Photoplay Magazine, to take charge of this department, and a booklet of twenty-six pages is published weekly and 4,000 of them distributed within the theater district during the summer months. About 7,000 will be distributed weekly during the fall. Mr. Ryan makes his booklet pay for itself by means of the advertising which local business men place in its pages. These booklets contain the programs run at the Woodlawn and the musical numbers played by the orchestra. They also contain stories of the plays shown and other interesting matter.

Mr. Karzas has already been referred to in this article as a man of artistic temperament and good taste. This is shown in the nice policy which governs his screen. He permits no advertising slides whatever to be shown on it, believing that the screen should be devoted exclusively to the presentation of pictures.

JAMES K. HACKETT RETURNS TO SCREEN.

James K. Hackett, whose brilliant stage career was interrupted by a serious illness, has decided again to take up work in pictures. "The Ashes of Love," an all-star feature, now in course of production by the Graphic Film Corporation under the direction of Ivan Abramson, is the vehicle he has chosen for his return to public life.

Women's War Work Committee Meets

Largely Attended Session of the Subsidiary Body of War Service Association—Prepares for Practical Activities.

THE first meeting of the Committee on Women's War Work of the Motion Picture War Service Association was held Saturday, June 23, at the Lois Weber Studio at 4634 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood. The meeting was for the purpose of outlining plans and preparing for practical activities along the lines intended by the organization. Representatives of many studios were present, and the meeting was characterized by great enthusiasm and willingness and anxiety to get the work under way. Each member present pledged herself to form a committee on woman's work in the studio represented by her for the purpose of enlisting the services of all studio women and girls in work that will help to win the war.

Arrangements were perfected whereby all studios may become auxiliaries of the Red Cross, with full authority to carry on the work of the parent body. Miss Ethel Weber, of the Lois Weber Studios, was appointed secretary; Mrs. Theodore Roberts, of Lasky, treasurer; Miss Lillian Greenberger, of the Lois Weber studio, purchasing agent; Miss Margaret Whistler, Vitagraph, chairman of visiting committee; Miss Ida Lewis, Paralta, chairman of entertainment committee; Mrs. Al Smith, Fox, chairman of salvage committee; Miss Mabel Waugh, Chaplin studio, chairman information committee; Miss Elmore, of the Photoplayers Equity Association, chairman employment committee.

The meeting was addressed by Miss Sohlier, an organizer for the Red Cross, who made a spirited talk in the course of which she outlined the work that may be accomplished by the Studio Women Workers, namely, the knitting of sox, sweaters, and the making of slippers and all manner of refugee garments.

Miss Sohlier also impressed upon her hearers the necessity of making all work conform to the patterns and dimensions furnished by the Red Cross, and explained that many well-meant efforts were wasted because of a disregard of these rules.

Addresses were also made by Mr. Hill, the resident head, and Mr. Whitmore, the foreign head of the Y. M. C. A. War Workers, who told of the work of that organization and of the need of books, magazines, games and other means of entertainment for the boys fighting the battle of Democracy "over there."

Monthly meetings were arranged for by the committee, and at this writing several members have reported that their studio committees are already in working order.

Miss Mabel Waugh has a number of unique and effective means of raising money for the Auxiliary under her charge at the Chaplin Studio. All of the employees using the telephone for personal calls are charged five cents a call. Every member of the studio force coming to work late is fined, and every one heard using profanity around the studio is fined at the rate of five cents a cuss word, and the money is deposited in the fund. In addition to this, of course, the knitting needles are clicking away at sock and sweater during all the spare minutes.

Off to War.

Vesta Pegg, familiar figure in the Harry Carey pictures, is now in a Pacific Coast Army Camp.

David Kirkland, former director of Sunshine comedies, is now a captain at Camp Fremont, California.

Billy Shea, head of the cutting department of the Douglas Fairbanks studio, left for Camp Kearney on June 24.

Claude Elliott, cowboy of the Roy Stewart company, has been assigned to the remount station near Jacksonville, Fla.

Bobby Harron is getting ready to don the khaki, as he has finished all the productions for which he was granted time by the War Board. Bobby is anxious to get into the fight.

Hank Mann of the Mack Sennett forces and Charles Stevenson of the Rolin-Pathe, have enlisted in the army and left June 25 for Camp Kearney. A jazz band from each of the studios was at the station to brighten their departure.

Edward L. White, assistant cameraman at Metro, has gone into training.

Harry Stone, employee at the Superba Theater, has joined the camouflage section of the National Army.

Kenneth Harlan has gone to war by way of Camp Kearney.

Triangle's Employment Bureau for Actors.

J. Scott Sayre, casting director of the Triangle Studios at Culver City, who is in charge of the registration bureau which has been established by Triangle on the 9th floor of the Knickerbocker Building in Los Angeles, is one of the busiest men on the coast. Over nine hundred persons were registered during the first two weeks the offices were open. This list includes all of the professional people who are not regularly employed, and a large number of non-professionals who are anxious for a try-out in the pictures.

Mr. Sayre says that the idea of the registration is to obtain fresh material for the Triangle directors to work with, and most of all, to get fresh faces in the casts. The stock company plan has not been abandoned by Triangle, but the number of people in stock has been reduced, and fresh material will be used whenever possible. Non-professionals are allowed to register in the hope that a "find" may result.

Mr. Sayre says that the outlook for unexpected pearls is not great, but if any outsider shows promise, he or she will be given the fullest chance to develop.

Picture Previews.

Cecil B. De Mille's latest Artcraft Special, "You Can't Have Everything," was given a prerelease showing at the Iris Theater at Hollywood, at 10 p.m. on June 24.

At the Lois Weber studio "The Forbidden Box" was shown to a number of invited guests, who were afterwards served with punch and ice cream.

Los Angeles Billboard Decision.

The City Council of Los Angeles, at a meeting on June 25, made a few beneficial changes in the billboard ordinance, which was signed by Mayor Woodman within an hour after it was adopted, and which will become effective thirty days after its legal publication.

George W. Kleiser, president of the Kleiser & Foster Co., gave assurance to the Council that every objectionable billboard will be removed from the residential districts within sixty days, and those that are objectionable in the semi-business districts will be eliminated within four months.

Santa Barbara's Potter Under New Management.

H. Collis, lessee of the Potter Theater at Santa Barbara, has made arrangements to turn over the management of his house to the Portola Theater Company, of which W. Markus is the manager. Mr. Collis is now in the army, but expects to return and resume his managerial duties at the Potter when the war is over.

Roy, N. M., to Have New Picture Show.

A new picture show will soon be opened for business at Roy, N. M., in the Judge Foster Building, which is now being used for office purposes. Manager Sargent contemplates putting up a permanent theater building as soon as the business is firmly established.

Fox Players Entertain Naval Students.

Players from the William Fox and other studios assisted in a big dramatic performance given for the benefit of 3,000 boys at the Naval Base at San Pedro on June 25. Frank Lloyd, who was stage manager and general all around master of ceremonies, superintended the building of a stage at one end of a long pier, where the show was given.

The program was one of the richest ever presented. William and Dustin Farnum and Little Nancy Casswell as "Virgie," gave part of "The Littlest Rebel." Gladys Brockwell, Herbert Hayes, Dorothy Davenport and A. W. Fremont presented dramatic moments from Willard Mack's "Kick In." Tom Mix put his horse, Blue, through his paces. Polly Moran of the Mack Sennett studios, and Harry McCoy contributed "nut stuff." Margaret McKee whistled solos; Mme. Mariska Aldrich sang; the Naval Base Band and the Fox Studio String Quartet furnished the music for the occasion.

Comes to Los Angeles for Players.

Frank Powell, who has his studio in San Antonio, Texas, has arrived in Los Angeles to select a cast for one of the eight pictures he is to make during the coming year. Mr. Powell, whose policy is to cast each picture separately, has chosen House Peters for the leading role of his first film, which will be called "The Forfeit."

Los Angeles Exhibitors.

June 29 brought to a close a highly successful "Victory" week at the Kinema Theater. During the week a special program of picture features were projected, including the famous French War Pictures brought here by the William Sandoz Commission. On each evening one or more stage and screen favorites made personal appearances, among them D. W. Griffith, Clara Kimball Young, Wilton Lackaye, Lillian Gish and John Mott, Douglas Fairbanks, Willis H. Booth, Frank Keenan, Mary Pickford and Bob Wagner, well known magazine writer. The Submarine Base Naval Band of forty pieces was also a feature of the week.

Bert St. John, who has been imported from the east, where he had quite a record as a theater manager, to take charge of Clune's Auditorium, has grasped the reins of management with enthusiasm, and has made several changes around the Auditorium that will add to the comfort and convenience of the house.

A. E. Warmington, of Los Angeles, owner of the Imperial Theater building at Imperial, Cal., took a trip to that city recently to confer with a prospective purchaser of his property.

Seymour Tally, of Tally's Broadway Theater, and his family are at Big Bear Lake.

The art stone front which is being built on to Miller's new theater is nearing completion.

"Hearts of the World," after making a record breaking run of several weeks at Clune's Auditorium, begins a "repeat" engagement on June 30.

Manager Van Dyke has reopened the Wigwam Theater at Long Beach after a complete renovation and redecoration, and the installation of a new projection machine.

James A. Cook, of El Centro, has closed the Palace Theater for the summer, and is now operating in his elegantly appointed airdrome.

Five hundred students of the Balloon School at Arcadia, Cal., were entertained at Clune's Auditorium on June 26, with a showing of "Eyes of the World." After the show Douglas Fairbanks treated the bunch to a watermelon feed in the dining room of the Temple Baptist Church.

"Me Und Gott" Ready for State Rights Buyers.

The Romayne Super-Film Company, with general offices on the second floor of the Marsh Strong Building, Los Angeles, are now ready to release their first feature, "Me Und Gott," to the state rights buyers.

The initial offering of the Romayne company is in six reels, and, according to H. Y. Romayne, president of the company, is a strong and forceful drama, with a story that shows how the mixture of elements and races of America are united in a common cause against Germany.

The picture was directed by Wyndham Gettins, formerly with Universal. Betty Burbank, as leading woman, is supported by a large number of capable players, including Josephine Crowell, who took the part of the mother in "Hearts of the World."

Mr. Romayne says that pictures will be released regularly by his company, and that while no big stars with consequent big salaries will be employed respectable salaries will be paid to all members of the company, and a bonus, based on the earning powers of the features turned out by the company, will be paid to the players. By this means, he contends, a high-class of production will be maintained, allowing the company to produce pictures that can be sold on a "live and let live" basis.

Mr. Romayne also declares that his company's productions will be offered to the market in a different manner than that usually observed by state rights producers.

Nothing but five and six reel pictures will be made, and they will be sold direct from the main offices of the company. The Romayne company has secured the David Horsley studios, with its complete and modern equipment, for the production of its films.

Frazee's Trick Film Methods.

Edwin A. Frazee, who severed his connection with the active end of the moving picture industry a year ago in order to devote his time to the further development of the trick picture methods, of which he made a specialty, announces that he has perfected his inventions and is now ready to begin the commercial exploitation of his ideas.

Mr. Frazee says the time has come for a new element of technique to be introduced into picture making, and as the limit of human possibility has about been reached in stunts and scenic effects that are performed by ordinary means now at the command of the producer the introduction of new methods should be welcome.

It is claimed by their inventor that the Frazee trick film methods will make it possible for innumerable mechanical novelties to be introduced into films, and that all of the bewildering illusions of Hermann, Keller and other great magicians and the remarkable hoodwinking fantasies of English pantomime may be easily and simply accomplished and at comparatively small cost.

Particular attention is called by Mr. Frazee to the fact that under-water pictures, heretofore almost prohibitive in cost because of the special diving and other apparatus needed, can be easily produced on the stage by his method.

Stress is also laid on the fact that many scenarios that would make splendid pictures are pigeonholed as impossible of production because of the cost and difficulty of screening. All of these stories, Mr. Frazee contends, would find birth and become highly interesting and highly profitable films through his trick methods.

Mr. Frazee is remembered by his record and ability as a comedy director for the Keystone company with Fred Mace and with the William Fox organization.

The Frazee Films Productions studio is located in the Boyle Heights district of Los Angeles.

Willis & Inglis Reaching Out.

Out in Los Angeles whenever old Mother Nature stages a temblor, which is Pacific Coast Spanish for earthquake, the whole town gets cock-eyed from squinting up at the tall buildings to see how much out of plumb the "temblor" has left them. There was a mild seismic shock in Los Angeles in April, in which several of the local skyscrapers lost their dignity and uprightness.

The Wright & Callender Building on Fourth and Hill streets came in for more than its share of squinting because of a peculiar bulging out of the walls at the sixth floor level.

Of course, the squinters blamed this on the tremblor, but as a matter of fact the earthquake had nothing to do with it. The bulge in the building, which was a mere optical illusion, was caused by the remarkable expansion in the offices of Willis & Inglis, who occupy a suite of rooms on the sixth floor.

Willis & Inglis have been actively identified with the picture industry since the establishment of studios on the west coast. They are managers and publicity agents for a large number of stars; they conduct an employment bureau for players, and maintain a large book and play department. They have a costume studio, where producers find full and complete paraphernalia and equipment for the production of any and all kinds of features. Dustin Farnum's latest feature was made at the Willing & Inglis plant.

The Willis & Inglis corporation has grown from one small room to a suite of six offices in three years, and there are few stars, managers, directors or players on the coast who have not had pleasant business relations with them during that time.

Both Mr. Willis and Mr. Inglis devote their personal attention to the employment and publicity end of their business, as well as personally superintending their large book and play department.

Willis & Inglis are so closely identified with all branches of picture making that a statement made by them that the picture industry is in excellent shape and that a very bright future is impending may be taken as authentic and well founded.

Sunset New Name for Griffith Studio.

The old Fine Arts studio at 4500 Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, has been given the name of the Sunset Studios, and has been divided into several studios of medium dimensions, one of which will be occupied by Clara Kimball Young and another by the new Dorothy Gish company until space can be found at the Lasky plant for Miss Gish, who will produce pictures for Paramount.

D. W. Griffith will continue to occupy his headquarters at the plant and will confine his activities to the six productions he has contracted to make for Artcraft. The other productions made at the Sunset Studios will not be supervised by Griffith, nor will he be in any way connected with them, he states.

Sam Comly Leaves World.

Sam H. Comly, formerly connected with the Pacific Coast offices of the Moving Picture World, has severed his connection with this journal and has entered the employ of Wid's. Mr. Comly is one of the best known correspondents and advertising men on the western slope and has a wide acquaintance and many friends in all branches of the moving picture industry.

Christie Films in South.

The Christie Comedy Company has made arrangements with the E. & H. Film Distributing Company of Atlanta, Ga., whereby that company will distribute the Christie films throughout six southern states

Stewart Company at O'Neill Ranch.

Roy Stewart's story, "The Fighting Gringo," is now under way at Triangle under the direction of Cliff Smith. Part of this picture will be staged on the O'Neill ranch near San Juan Capistrano, the largest cattle ranch in California. The big summer round-up of 40,000 cattle on the ranch started early in June, and the Stewart company plans to arrive in time to be in at the finish. Stewart and the Triangle cowboys will take part in the round-up.

Harry Schwalbe in Los Angeles.

Harry Schwalbe, of Philadelphia, secretary and manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, is visiting T. L. Tally, vice president of the organization. Mr. Schwalbe is one of the many representatives from various film corporations who has been in conference with Mary Pickford with a view to securing her services since her contract with Artcraft has expired.

Fairbanks Company Increases Capital.

The Douglas Fairbanks Pictures Corporation has certified to the Secretary of State of New York, where the company was originally organized, that the corporation has been reorganized and its capital increased from $50,000 to $100,000.

Quirk on Flying Trip.

James R. Quirk, of Photoplay Magazine, was in Los Angeles on a flying visit last week in connection with the interests of his magazine.

Weber Studio Celebrates First Birthday.

The Lois Weber studio has just celebrated its first birthday. The studio building was redecorated and a flag pole erected in honor of the event. Miss Weber is very proud of the fact that the studio has registered more than 100 per cent. in all patriotic movements, having gone way over the top in Liberty Bonds, War Saving Stamps and Red Cross donations.

Rubbernecking in Filmland

Personally Conducted by Giebler.

LADIES and Gentlemen we are now entering Hollywood, a section of Los Angeles that is populated exclusively by movie actors and actresses and real estate dealers who way lay and overtrick by building bungalows for them to live in.

You will note that all the houses we are passing look like movie scenes. They are movie scenes, my friends. There are few houses in this section that has not been shot for the setting of some thrilling drama or quaint comedy.

The street we are now traversing is Western avenue. Mary Pickford and her mother live on this street. Mary is going to move real soon not because it is cheaper for her to move than to pay rent, but because she has decided to take up her residence in the aristocratic Wilshire district.

The building you see over there is where Theda Bara made her picturization of Salome, in which John the Baptist lost his head because he did not lose his head to the charms of this scriptural siren.

Just beyond, you can see the studio where Henry Lehrman makes his Sunshine comedies. We are not allowed to enter here because of the fact that seven ferocious man-eating lions that are used in making comedies are allowed to roam at will in the grounds. However if you will rise in your seats and stretch the rubber in your neck you may look into this interesting place.

The tall and graceful person you see leaning against the post is none other than Slim Summerville said to be the longest and funniest thing on legs. The air of sadness you observe on Mr. Summerville's face is peculiar to comedians. Slim is thinking up something funny to do in his next play, which will have the Pacific Ocean for a back drop and the Sunshine beauty squad as support.

Over on the platform you will observe a movie in the making. The man in the brown suit is Henry Lehrman himself. Henry is directing the piece. This set is a faithful duplication of a dining car, and is open at the end so that the cameraman can shoot right inside. The colored porters in this scene are real Pullman mokes. They have to be tipped every five minutes to make them work. These colored boys are used to put the shine in this Sunshine comedy.

The strange animal you see in this scene is not a dog, but the smallest horse in the world. He weighs but forty pounds, answers to the name of Floto, and kicks up his heels and bucks in the cutest way when you scratch him on the back.

The funny looking little man with the mongolian mustache is Billy Ritchie. Sylvia Day and Hugh Fay are the other movie thesplans in this scene.

Down on the platform to the right you have a rare treat awaiting you. Take a look at Lloyd V. Hamilton without his comedy mustache. Not a bad looking chap without his make-up, eh? The lady talking to him is Gertrude Selby. They are doping new stuff for their next comedy in which they are cast together.

The roaring sounds you hear are the voices of the seven lions. The late Daniel didn't have anything on the people who work at this studio.

The group of buildings on the right are the studios of the Fox Film people. The little bungalow over in the corner near the fence is the studio quarters of Bill Farnum, when he is not out on location which he is now.

Bill calls this his Little Gray Home in the West, and he uses it as an office and dressing room and a place to sign the hundreds of photographs he sends out to his admirers each week.

The huge on the left is inhabited by Frank Lloyd, Mr. Farnum's director. Both of these gents are now somewhere near the Grand Canyon, a deep gully in Arizona that is used very frequently as a location for the movies.

The tall person you see standing by the fountain is Charles Clary, and the man talking to him wearing the sheepskin pants and the wide hat is Thomas sometimes known as Tom Mix. Mr. Mix is getting ready to mix up in another Mix movie.

The man with the slouch hat near the stage is one of the big moguls of the movies—J. Gordon Edwards. Mr. Edwards is a real friendly guy when you know him. He is the personal director of Theda Bara, and they are now making a film that is a distinct departure from the usual Bara pieces, insomuch as it is a light comedy.

We are now traveling on Sunset Boulevard, a street that is very often closed to traffic because of the number of movie companies shooting scenes on it. A turn to the left brings us up opposite to the Douglas Fairbanks foundry.

The fellow without a hat and wearing white pants and a smile is Doug himself. The somewhat well-built man with the dark glasses talking to him is Allan Dwan, his director.

The great number of buildings you see have all been used as sets for Fairbanks plays. The church steeple is the one Doug climbed to the top in "A Modern Musketeer." He will not allow it to be torn down because so many visitors come to the studio and want to see him climb the steeple which he always accommodates them by doing.

Doug has just finished his latest picture, "Bound in Morocco," and is resting up before starting another.

Benne Zeidman is the name of the stately though small gentleman with the suave—no, lady, I didn't say salve—manner. Mr. Zeidman belongs to that strange tribe known as press agents, and keeps the public informed about the doings of Doug.

The kind-faced and cheerful looking individual with the straw hat and the bamboo cane is one of the greatest villains in pictures, Frank Campeau.

The small house at the back of the lot is Mr. Fairbanks' private sanctum, where he retires to do his heavy thinking. None but he may enter here.

The collection of cactuses you note growing at the other end of the lot is a miniature Arizona desert. When Doug wants to get himself in the spirit of a Western part he goes in there and sits on a cactus.

If this were not Friday we would ask Doug to climb the church steeple or jump over something for your delectation, but he never does stunts on Friday, so we will drive on.

We are now passing the Lasky plant. Some of the most famous players in the industry work here. The long string of men standing in line are millionaire movie producers. You will note that each has a document in his hand. These magnates know that Mary Pickford's contract has expired, and they are waiting to offer her large sums of money to make movies for them.

Across the street you see a complete and regular circus, with all the appurtenances thereof, which is being used for "Under the Top," Fred Stone's first plunge in pictures.

This circus is complete, from animal cages to popcorn wagons, with a full complement of performers, snake charmers, horseback riders, and clowns.

The actor riding around the ring on the spotted pony is Fred Stone, who finds himself doing some of his old-time circus stunts all over again. Ella Hall and Charles Ogle and a number of famous players assist him in making this picture. The people in the seats are extras.

and they are getting paid to just sit there and enjoy themselves.

This, Ladies and Gentlemen, ends our trip today.

Heart Interest S ories of the Wee

An Embryo Booster.

HOW do you like Los Angeles?" I asked David Morrissey, who has just arrived to take the place of Stuart Acheson, former head of Fox publicity for the West Coast.

"Before I got into the picture publicity game," replied Mr. Morrissey, "I used to cover the ships for a New York newspaper. You know 'ship' reporters are supposed to meet every distinguished European visitor with the question, 'How do you like America?' before he ever steps on United States soil. We used to laugh at this story, although it was included in the American impressions of many visitors to our shores. But since coming to Los Angeles I do not laugh, because that same thing has happened to me. I was asked the question, 'How do you like Los Angeles?' as soon as I stepped from the train, and the query has been propounded to me many more times since. I will say, however, that my first impressions are very good, and if I keep on liking Los Angeles like I have started out liking it, I will wind up by liking it like a native son."

It's a Good Old World.

It is almost as great a pleasure to me to watch the happiness of one on whom the fates have smiled as to get the smile myself. I had this pleasure last week when visiting the George Kleine exchange in the Knickerbocker building. J. A. Quinn, the shipping clerk, entered the room with a look of dazed happiness on his face and something clutched tightly in his right hand.

"I just went back there," he said, pointing to the cloak room, "and shook down an old vest"—and his voice trembled with joy—"and found sixty-five cents that I had left in one of the pockets over three months ago."

It was indeed a moment of great rejoicing, and it was lunch time, and the Red Cross was giving a swell feed on one of the upper floors of the building.

Edwards Has Been Fishing.

J. Gordon Edwards, manager of productions at the Fox West Coast studios, has just canceled a number of personal appearance bookings he made just before his departure for Big Bear Lake on a fishing trip.

If the dates had been kept each scene would have shown Mr. Edwards approaching the home of one of his friends bearing a string of rainbow trout and other tasty fish, with the friend and his family on the front porch in an admiring and welcoming attitude—just like one of McCutcheon's illustrations of the George Ade fables.

No male member of the Los Angeles film colony is considered as having thoroughly joined until he has been to Big Bear Lake. Mr. Edwards accordingly made big preparations for a two weeks' stay at the resort.

Upon arrival, however, he found that the altitude was conducive neither to comfort nor fishing, so he packed up and came away.

Mr. Edwards says he finds no record of Isaak Walton ever going fishing at an altitude of 8,000 feet, and so considers he did nothing unethical or against the rules of piscatorial sport when he came down to sea level after a two days' stay.

Monks Come High.

Albert Shelby LeVino, head scenario editor and continuous continuity writer for Metro's West Coast plant, stood on the little porch of the bungalow in which his sanctum is located. An organ grinder known all over Hollywood as Tony approached. Right out of the air LeVino had an idea.

"I'll get this fellow to lend me his outfit," he said, "and take it over to the studio and have Anna Nilsson photographed with the monk and organ. It will make a great publicity picture for the trade papers."

The proposition was put up to Tony, and two bits offered as a tentative bait, but he showed no enthusiasm. LeVino increased the bait to fifty cents, then six bits, and then one dollar.

Tony smiled with scorn.

"Say," he said, "wat you tink? Dis monk costa me good money. Two 'undred doll'."

"Listen," said LeVino. "You'll go down the street and play your organ for an hour, and only make a few pennies. I'm offering you a whole dollar just to have the monkey's picture taken"!

Tony shrugged his shoulders.

"Say!" demanded LeVino, as Tony started away, "who do you think you are, George Beban"?

Studio Shorts

BLANCHE SWEET has just completed her first picture under the management of Harry Garson, and will go East very shortly, where her next production "The Unpardonable Sin," from the Rupert Hughes story, will be staged. Miss Sweet expects to take the rattler for the East early in July.

Bertram Grassby, former Fox heavy, is cast as the Duke de Sauterne in Mae Murray's new picture, "Merry Mary McGuire."

Mary Pickford has presented a hundred Victory field showers—a shower bath apparatus that can be suspended from a tree —to the 142d Regiment Field Artillery, her godsons.

Vera Lewis, who is taking a vacation from the studios just now, has been elected secretary of the Stage Women's War Relief, of Los Angeles.

Adda Gleason, who played Ramona to Monroe Salisbury's Allesandro, is again working with Monroe in a coming Bluebird, "That Devil Bateeste."

The Lois Weber studio has been designated as a Red Cross Salvage Station for the Moving Picture War Service Association. One half of the studio building has been donated for offices and store rooms.

Clara Kimball Young is on her way East by way of Canada, and will stop over at Lake Louise for a few days rest. Miss Young is to make a film adaptation of "Cheating Cheaters," Max Marcin's underworld drama, in the near future.

Arthur Shirley, star of Thomas Dixon's "Fall of a Nation," is playing an important role in "A Matrimonial Cleanup," a Harry Carey production.

Mabel Normand in "The Venus Model."

Joe Rickson, specialist in Mexican heavy types, is supporting Roy Stewart in the star's story, "Cactus Crandall," now being filmed at Triangle.

Jack Curtis, for the past year a Triangle actor, is working in a Fox picture under the direction of Lynn Reynolds.

Ralph Lewis has contracted to appear in coming Triangles.

Charlie Chaplin's new comedy is a war picture, he says.

George Beban, who took out a large insurance policy on his life a few days ago, is considering taking out another policy on George, Jr.

Just to amuse himself during the week that elapsed between the finishing of his last picture and the beginning of his next, Douglas Fairbanks made personal appearances at various theaters in the interests of W. S. S., treated several hundred students of a Balloon School to a watermelon feast, and was chief entertainer at a benefit given by the Hollywood Junior Belgian Relief Committee.

J. Barney Sherry has moved his household goods from the house he occupied on the palisades of Santa Monica to his new residence in the fashionable Wilshire district of Los Angeles.

Lois Weber has returned from Monterey, Cal., where she went for a few days of peace and quiet to finish a story she has been writing for early production.

Jack Curtis, who has been assistant manager of Clune's Auditorium, has resigned that position, and it is said is turning an attentive ear to friends who urge him to take up acting.

Corenne Grant is working in a production being made by the Al Jennings Company.

Mary MacLaren is displaying a gold star in her service flag in memory of her cousin, Edward Reamer Agnew, who lost his life with the American Expeditionary Forces in France.

Toto, the clown, has left Rolin-Pathe, and has signed up with the Orpheum circuit, making his first step back from the screen to the stage at the Orpheum theater in Los Angeles.

Jack Dillon has gone over to Universal.

Olga Gray is back at Triangle working in Christy Cabanne's new picture, "The Mayor of Filbert."

Paul Powell, former Fine Arts director, will in future direct Bluebirds at U City.

William E. Fildew, cameraman, will turn the crank at the command of Wilfred Lucas at Metro during the making of the May Allison pictures.

Dorothy Gish is expected daily at the Sunset studio, where she is scheduled to begin work on her first Paramount picture under the direction of Elmer Clifton.

William V. Mong has left Triangle and has gone back to Universal, his first love.

Arthur Hoyt, former casting director at Triangle, has transferred his activities to another branch of the moving picture industry at Universal City, and is appearing in "The Yellow Dog," a Colin Campbell production.

Bryant Washburn, who has just become a Lasky star, will be featured in straight drama, with Florence Vidor as his leading woman.

Theda Bara, who has just finished one production and getting ready for another, is under the care of a physician, who advises complete rest from personal appearances in theaters and other exciting feats of patriotism during her short vacation.

George Larkin, Diando serial star, is planning to give a dance for the soldiers in camp near the studio, with the big indoor stage for a dancing floor, and the studio jazz band to furnish the music.

Carmel Myers has gone to New York for a short stay, and will return by the Southern route, with stopovers at various army camps where she has been invited to make addresses to the soldiers and otherwise amuse them.

Albert Parker is a new director on the Triangle staff.

Funkhouser Testifies in His Own Defense

As the Case Proceeds Public Opinion Is Disposed to Consider the Major as Victim of a Plot.

ACTING CHIEF ALCOCK concluded his evidence against Major Funkhouser, the suspended second deputy, Monday afternoon, July 1, after his three chief witnesses had given their testimony.

Tuesday morning's session and part of the afternoon was taken up by a prolonged effort on the part of the major's counsel to have the charges against him dismissed, on the ground of insufficient evidence, but the Civil Service Commission Board decided that the defense must proceed. It was therefore late in the day when Major Funkhouser took the stand.

In the brief time given him before adjournment was made until Friday morning, July 5, the major recited the story of his fight against the social evil for the past five years, and he charged that his department was deprived of vice investigators within a month after William Hale Thompson, the present mayor, had assumed his duties.

It transpired Thursday, July 4, that an important witness for the suspended second deputy had disappeared. The man was one of the major's investigators. Since the suspension of the major this man had been engaged in work with an ice cream company, and it was learned that he had been arrested Wednesday afternoon, July 3, by two men from the acting second deputy's office, no reason being given for his arrest. The man had been arrested on a serious charge about two weeks ago, but his case was continued for a month, and he was released on bonds. The man's attorney is puzzled, as the security furnished for his appearance was good. The man in question was referred to by the Acting Chief in his charges against Funkhouser, when he declared that the major was employing men with criminal records as moral investigators.

While on the stand, Tuesday afternoon, the major testified that this man had been sent to his office by former First Deputy Westbrook, of the police force, who asked that he be put to work without asking him too many questions.

It developed Friday, July 5, that the arrested man was held incommunicado, in solitary confinement, without sufficient food, although no criminal charge had been filed against him by the acting second deputy of police, on the order of Acting Chief Alcock. The man was released on a writ of habeas corpus, issued by Judge Sabath, on Friday.

Navy Man Not Permitted to Testify.

Major Funkhouser took the witness stand Friday morning, and again denied emphatically all the charges brought against him. Frank C. Brown, chief master-at-arms of the United States Navy, was not permitted to testify that moral conditions in Chicago have grown much worse since the suspension of the second deputy. For the past six months Mr. Brown has been in charge of the naval provost guard of twenty-five men, fighting vice conditions. President Frazier, of the Civil Service Commission Board, deemed it expedient under the circumstances to refuse permission.

Major Funkhouser cleared away the misunderstanding prevailing concerning the trailing of Miss Kate Adams, who had made an investigation of vice conditions for a Chicago paper.

"It looked as though our men were not making good reports," said the major on the stand. "Her reports were more voluminous and contained things that ours didn't. They showed conditions worse than ours did, so I directed that efforts he made to find out who was wrong.

"I have the highest respect for Miss Adams and am under deep obligations to her for assistance in vice matters. Her reputation is so far above anything of the sort that such a thing is ridiculous."

The major also denied most emphatically that he had ever ordered that Chief Schuettler be shadowed, or that he ever had the chief's telephone wire tapped. The hearing will be continued Monday, July 8.

Tribune Inclines to Funkhouser's Side.

The Chicago Tribune of July 5 published the following editorial, under the heading "Mr. Alcock and Mr. Funkhouser," and the article indicates the general trend of opinion in the city now being formed on the Funkhouser trial:

"Mr. Alcock, our acting chief of police, denies he 'laid the wires' for the prosecution of Major Funkhouser, but whatever the truth of that matter it seems clear that he is laying the wires or greasing the skids (if that expression is more in accord with the police parlance), for his own exit from office. Mr. Alcock, only recently a police captain, had a rare opportunity when it fell to his lot to assume direction of the department. But the most conspicuous thing in his record is the prosecution of a man who had the indorsement and support of such good citizens as Carter Harrison and Herman Schuettler.

"Major Funkhouser's testimony seems to dispose of most of the accusations brought against him. To say the least, it would appear to be more in accord with a common sense judgment than the rather fantastic assertions of Mr. Alcock.

"It is not necessary to regard Major Funkhouser as a martyr in order to observe that Mr. Alcock has displayed a surprising degree of unfitness for his office—surprising even for a Chicago superintendent of police. Has he forgot the case of John McWeeny, or does he honestly think he can succeed where McWeeny failed? But the operations of the police mind are often past understanding."

Tom North Off to "Frisco"

Recently Appointed District Manager of the Pacific Coast for Pathe Exchange, Inc.

TOM NORTH, one of the most popular and widely known film men in the country, came into the city from New York Wednesday, July 3, and left the same evening for San Francisco, accompanied by Mrs. North.

Mr. North, formerly district manager for Pathe, Inc., in the eastern division, was recently appointed to the same position in the western division, with headquarters at San Francisco in the Pathe branch office there. Under his supervision are the branch offices in Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Salt Lake and Spokane Falls.

Mr. North is no stranger to the Pacific Coast, having spent five years there as an exchange manager. Three years of this time was spent with George Kleine in his San Francisco office and two years with V-L-S-E as branch manager of the Seattle office of that organization. This experience means that Mr. North is known by nearly every exhibitor in the territory covered by him—not only known, but favorably known. It also means that a warm welcome awaits him in every Pacific Coast city where a Pathe branch office is located.

But Mr. North is not merely a Pacific Coast trotter; he can fairly lay claim to that of continental trotter, with reference to the United States and Canada. His career as a showman before he entered the moving picture business had to do with leading tented amusement organizations. For six years he was "special-story" man of the Ringling shows' press force. For five years he was general manager of the Harry Askin theatrical road shows traveling out of Chicago, and also resident manager of the La Salle Opera House. He traveled out of New York as business manager of "Buster Brown" and of the "Newlyweds" for several seasons, and was also business manager for other well-known theatrical attractions.

Mr. North's first experience in the film business was gained while filling the position of manager in charge of all the George Kleine road shows for "Quo Vadis," "Pompeii," "Spartacus," etc., on the Pacific Coast. Later on he established the San Francisco branch office for Mr. Kleine and proved himself a most efficient branch manager.

It goes without writing that Tom has the writer's best wishes for his continued success and happiness. [And the New York office declares itself in on those best wishes.]

V. R. Day Settles in Culver City.

V. R. Day, widely known in Chicago business circles and for eight years connected with the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, both in Chicago and on the Pacific Coast, spent the last two weeks in the city on business. Mr. Day has been residing at Culver City for some time past, Chicago still being his home city, and will shortly return to that point, accompanied by Mrs. Day, to reside permanently. Mr. Day has the honorable, as well as the de facto, title of mayor of Culver City. All the trustees of Culver City are connected with the moving picture trade, and they enthusiastically aim at making it the leading moving picture center of the world. The studios of Triangle and Thomas H. Ince and one of the western Essanay studios are located at this point.

"Over the Top" at Woodlawn.

E. J. Ryan, publicity manager for the Woodlawn theater, called at this office the other day and in the course of conversation referred to the wonderful business recently done by "Over the Top" at that house. The picture was run for five days, and during that time played to 35,000 people. On certain days as many as 10,000 people attended during the two presentations—4,000 in the afternoon and 6,000 at night. The admission was 25 cents, including the war tax.

Stephen Fox Writing Another Russell Story.

Stephen Fox, of the American Film Company, is now at work on the next photoplay for William Russell. "Up Romance Road," the last Russell feature, was also based on a story by Mr. Fox.

"Claws of the Hun" Fine War Picture.

Charles Ray in "The Claws of the Hun" (Thomas H. Ince) made a big hit at Orchestra Hall last week. This feature has a great, big war punch, and the spectator is often on the keen edge of expectation while it progresses. In my opinion it is really one of the strongest war films I have yet seen—one that arouses high patriotic ardor and a fierce hatred and bitterness against the methods adopted by the Huns to win at all hazards. I would predict a long and prosperous run for this picture throughout the country. It should be booked everywhere.

New Advertising Clock for Exhibitors.

In this day of the conservation of time and effort the progressive exhibitor is quick to take advantage of any improvement that will prove beneficial to his business.

A new advertising clock recently placed on the market by the Kineto Machine Company, of Chicago, can be placed in either the lobby or auditorium of a theater. This automatic clock stereopticon, by means of a high power nitrogen lamp, projects twelve slides, each slide showing the correct time and an advertisement or talk within the clock dial in endless rotation.

The projection is made on a screen about twenty inches in diameter on the standard machine, which is part of the apparatus itself, and is operated by means of clock mechanism.

This advertising clock machine can be used advantageously for announcing coming features, as it requires no attention from the operator of a theater. It will please patrons by eliminating screen advertising, and will satisfy the advertiser by guaranteeing uniform advertising throughout the day.

War Picture Cheered at Hamilton Club.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" was shown at the Hamilton Club the evening of July 4 to the club members and many jackies from the Great Lakes, who were guests of the club. Among the guests present was Captain Moffett, head of the Great Lakes Training Station. The boys cheered for fully five minutes after the picture was run off.

Select's Chicago Booker Joins Navy.

Edgar Silverman, in charge of Select's booking department, in the Chicago office, has enlisted in the navy, and left for the Great Lakes Training Station, Friday, June 28, entering as a yeoman. Julius Olcott, North Side salesman, has been appointed to take his place.

George Kleine's Alaskan Picture.

A photoplay with an engaging story, the scenes of which are laid in Alaska, has been secured by George Kleine for release through the Kleine system in the near future. A. R. Smith, who has taken a number of scenics in Alaska territory, was director. In the rough this photoplay is about seven reels in length, but is now being edited by the Kleine forces and when released it will be about five and a half or six reels.

George Kleine Tempts the Finny Tribe.

George Kleine, accompanied by Mrs. Kleine and his daughter, Miss Helen Kleine, went on a fishing trip to Eagle Lake, Wis., to spend a few days around the Fourth. Mr. Kleine, who is a modern Izaak Walton, delights to feel through his slender rod the cautious nibbling of a black bass or the voracious pull of a pike. I have a little bet with him that he will catch nothing this trip, so here's to glorious failure!

Motography and Exhibitor's Herald Merged.

Motography and Exhibitor's Herald will be merged in one publication on July 20, and will be published thenceforth under the title of "Exhibitor's Herald and Motography." Motography, in its day, under the editorship of the late Mr. Mock, had quite a following in the trade. Martin J. Quigley, editor of Exhibitor's Herald, will be editor of the merged publications, with Chicago as headquarters.

Shift in Virginia First National

Harry M. Crandall and Joseph P. Morgan Withdraw and Frank Ferrindini Takes Over Their Interests.

HARRY M. CRANDALL and Joseph P. Morgan have announced their withdrawal from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for Virginia and of the taking over of their interests by Frank Ferrindini. Under their franchise they had been marketing the circuit's productions in Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida. Offices were maintained in Washington and in Richmond and Atlanta. In addition numerous state rights productions were procured for the territory from Delaware to Florida.

The Crandall-Morgan interests in Washington are large. It was felt that inasmuch as the Circuit's productions could not be used in the Crandall houses in the District of Columbia and the territory running so far south that they could not handle the proposition advantageously. Mr. Ferrindini, it was felt, could handle the business to better advantage, Messrs. Crandall and Morgan being interested more in exhibition.

The Washington office, which is at 420 Ninth street, will be retained by the Crandall-Morgan combination for the handling of the state rights pictures which they already control and such others as they may secure from time to time. Upon the dissolution of their association with Mr. Ferrindini the territory owned by them collectively on the states rights pictures then controlled was divided, they retaining Delaware, Maryland, the District of Columbia and Virginia.

At the Crandall offices in Washington it was stated that it was contemplated going into the states rights business on a much larger scale, handling pictures especially where the immediate territory could be secured. Abe Dresner, who has been managing the Washington office, will continue in that capacity.

DOROTHY GREEN LEADING WOMAN FOR LOVE.

Dorothy Green, who has been engaged by World Pictures to support Montagu Love in "Pirate's Gold," is no newcomer in motion pictures. She has played important parts in many notable film productions. Miss Green began her theatrical career as a child at the Metropolitan Opera House as a ballet dancer. She appeared in a number of musical productions in New York and later began her screen career, and specialized on heavies, a line of parts in moving picture parlance called vampires. The character that she will portray in "Pirate's Gold" ranges from a roustabout girl disguised as a boy in the North Carolina swamps and a leader of a gang of pirates to a woman of fashion and society. Oscar Apfel is directing the picture.

WE CONGRATULATE LIEUTENANT TOM FORMAN.

Tom Forman, well-known screen actor, who has been seen in many Paramount pictures, is now a lieutenant in the army, having just won his commission at the officers' training camp at Camp Gordon, Atlanta. Forman enlisted as a private a year ago and was sent to Camp Kearney, California. There he was soon made a corporal, then a sergeant and finally was recommended for admission to the officers' school at Camp Gordon.

Lieutenant Forman has supported many Paramount stars, including Lou Tellegen, Blanche Sweet, Vivian Martin, Kathlyn Williams, Sessue Hayakawa, Theodore Roberts and others. His many friends will be delighted with the news of his promotion.

BERNSTEIN SOON TO MAKE PUBLIC HIS PLANS.

David Bernstein, who is handling the feature production, "Her Mistake," starring Evelyn Nesbit, made under the direction of Julius Steger, has not yet definitely formulated his plans for releasing this production, but announces that a definite statement to exhibitors as to the method of distribution will be made within the next week or ten days.
